Let there be no confusion about the purpose of the suggested conferment of power to make decisions effective. There can be no denial of constitutional rights of either railway workmen or railway managers. No man can be denied his right to labor when and how he chooses, or cease to labor when he so elects, but, since the Government assumes to safeguard his interests while employed in an essential public service, the security of society itself demands his retirement from the service shall not be so timed and related as to effect the destruction of that service. [Applause.] This vitally essential public transportation service, demanding so much of brain and brawn, so much for efficiency and security, ought to offer the most attractive working conditions and the highest wages paid to workmen in any employment.

In essentially every branch, from track repairer to the man at the locomotive throttle, the railroad worker is responsible for the safety of human lives and the care of vast property. His high responsibility might well rate high his pay within the limits the traffic will bear; but the same responsibility, plus governmental protection, may justly deny him and his associates a withdrawal from service without a warning or under circumstances which involve the paralysis of necessary transportation. We have assumed so great a responsibility in necessary regulation that we unconsciously have assumed the responsibility for maintained service; therefore the lawful power for the enforcement of decisions is necessary to sustain the majesty of government and to administer to the public welfare. [Applause.]

During its longer session the present Congress enacted a new tariff law. The protection of the American standards of living demanded the insurance it provides against the distorted conditions of world commerce. The framers of the law made provision for a certain flexibility of customs duties, whereby it is possible to readjust them as developing conditions may require. The enactment has imposed a large responsibility upon the Executive, but that responsibility will be discharged with a broad mindfulness of the whole business situation. The provision itself admits either the possible fallibility of rates or their unsuitableness to changing conditions. I believe the grant of authority may be promptly and discreetly exercised, ever mindful of the intent and purpose to safeguard American industrial activity, and at the same time prevent the exploitation of the American consumer and keep open the paths of such liberal exchanges as do not endanger our own productivity.

No one contemplates commercial aloofness nor any other aloofness contradictory to the best American traditions or loftiest human purposes. Our fortunate capacity for comparative self-containment affords the firm foundation on which to build for our own security, and a like foundation on which to build for a future of influence and importance in world commerce. Our trade expansion must come of capacity and of policies of righteousness and reasonableness in all our commercial relations.

Let no one assume that our provision for maintained good fortune at home, and our unwillingness to assume the correction of all the ills of the world, means a reluctance to cooperate with other peoples or to assume every just obligation to promote human advancement anywhere in the world.

War made us a creditor Nation. We did not seek an excess possession of the world's gold, and we have neither desire to profit unduly by its possession nor to permanently retain it. We do not seek to become an international dictator because of its power.

The voice of the United States has a respectful hearing in international councils, because we have convinced the world that we have no selfish ends to serve, no old grievances to avenge, no territorial or other greed to satisfy. [Applause.] But the voice being heard is that of good counsel, not of dictation. It is the voice of sympathy and fraternity and helpfulness, seeking to assist but not to assume for the United States burdens which nations must bear for themselves. We would rejoice to help rehabilitate currency systems and facilitate all commerce which does not drag us to the very levels of those we seek to lift up.

While I have everlasting faith in our Republic, it would be folly, indeed, to blind ourselves to our problems at home. Abusing the hospitality of our shores are the advocates of revolution, finding their deluded followers among those who take on the habiliments of an American without knowing an American soul. There is the recrudescence of hyphenated Americanism which we thought to have been stamped out when we committed the Nation, life and soul, to the World War.

There is a call to make the alien respect our institutions while he accepts our hospitality. [Applause.] There is need to magnify the American viewpoint to the alien who seeks a citizenship among us. There is need to magnify the national viewpoint to Americans throughout the land. [Applause.] More, there is a demand for every living being in the United States to respect and abide by the laws of the Republic. [Applause.] Let men who are rending the moral fiber of the Republic through easy contempt for the prohibition law, because they think it restricts their personal liberty, remember that they set the example and breed a contempt for law which will ultimately destroy the Republic. [Applause.]

Constitutional prohibition has been adopted by the Nation. It is the supreme law of the land. In plain speaking, there are conditions relating to its enforcement which savor of nation-wide scandal. It is the most demoralizing factor in our public life.

Most of our people assumed that the adoption of the eighteenth amendment meant the elimination of the question from our politics. On the contrary, it has been so intensified as an issue that many voters are disposed to make all political decisions with reference to this single question. It is distracting the public mind and prejudicing the judgment of the electorate.

The day is unlikely to come when the eighteenth amendment will be repealed. The fact may as well be recognized and our course adapted accordingly. If the statutory provisions for its enforcement are contrary to deliberate public opinion, which I do not believe, the rigorous and literal enforcement will concentrate public attention on any requisite modification. [Applause.] Such a course conforms with the law and saves the humiliation of the Government and the humiliation of our people before the world, and challenges the destructive forces engaged in widespread violation, official corruption, and individual demoralization.

The eighteenth amendment involves the concurrent authority of State and Federal Governments for the enforcement of the policy it defines. A certain lack of definiteness, through division of responsibility, is thus introduced. In order to bring about a full understanding of duties and responsibilities as thus distributed, I purpose to invite the governors of the States and Territories, at an early opportunity, to a conference with the Federal Executive authority. Out of the full and free considerations which will thus be possible, it is confidently believed, will emerge a more adequate comprehension of the whole problem and definite policies of National and State cooperation in administering the laws.

There are pending bills for the registration of the alien who has come to our shores. I wish the passage of such an act might be expedited. Life amid American opportunities is worth the cost of registration if it is worth the seeking, and the Nation has the right to know who are citizens in the making or who live among us and share our advantages while seeking to undermine our cherished institutions. [Applause.] This provision will enable us to guard against the abuses in immigration, checking the undesirable whose irregular coming is his first violation of our laws. More, it will facilitate the needed Americanizing of those who mean to enroll as fellow citizens.

Before enlarging the immigration quotas we had better provide registration for aliens, those now here or continually pressing for admission, and establish our examination boards abroad, to make sure of desirables only. By the examination abroad we could end the pathos at our ports, when men and women find our doors closed, after long voyages and wasted savings, because they are unfit for admission. It would be kindlier and safer to tell them before they embark.

Our program of admission and treatment of immigrants is very intimately related to the educational policy of the Republic. With illiteracy estimated at from two-tenths of 1 per cent to less than 2 per cent in 10 of the foremost nations of Europe, it rivets our attention to a serious problem when we are reminded of a 6 per cent illiteracy in the United States. The figures are based on the test which defines an illiterate as one having no schooling whatever. Remembering the wide freedom of our public schools, with compulsory attendance in many States in the Union, one is convinced that much of our excessive illiteracy comes to us from abroad, and the education of the immigrant becomes a requisite to his Americanization. It must be done if he is fittingly to exercise the duties as well as enjoy the privileges of American citizenship. Here is revealed the special field for Federal cooperation in furthering education.

From the very beginning public education has been left mainly in the hands of the States. So far as schooling youth is concerned the policy has been justified, because no responsibility can be so effective as that of the local community alive to its task. I believe in the cooperation of the national authority to stimulate, encourage, and broaden the work of the local authorities. But it is the especial obligation of the Federal Government to devise means and effectively assist in the education of the newcomer from foreign lands, so that the level of American education may be made the highest that is humanly possible.

Closely related to this problem of education is the abolition of child labor. Twice Congress has attempted the correction of the evils incident to child employment. The decision of the Supreme Court has put this problem outside the proper domain of Federal regulation until the Constitution is so amended as to give the Congress indubitable authority. I recommend the submission of such an amendment. [Applause.]

We have two schools of thought relating to amendment of the Constitution. One need not be committed to the belief that amendment is weakening the fundamental law, or that excessive amendment is essential to meet every ephemeral whim. We ought to amend to meet the demands of the people when sanctioned by deliberate public opinion.

One year ago I suggested the submission of an amendment so that we may lawfully restrict the issues of tax-exempt securities, and I renew that recommendation now. Tax-exempt securities are drying up the sources of Federal taxation, and they are encouraging unproductive and extravagant expenditures by States and municipalities. There is more than the menace in mounting public debt; there is the dissipation of capital which should be made available to the needs of productive industry. The proposed amendment will place the State and Federal Governments and all political subdivisions on an exact equality, and will tend to correct the growing menace of public borrowing, which if left unchecked may soon threaten the stability of our institutions.

We are so vast and so varied in our national interests that scores of problems are pressing for attention. I must not risk the wearying of your patience with detailed reference.

Reclamation and irrigation projects, where waste land may be made available for settlement and productivity, are worthy of your favorable consideration.

When it is realized that we are consuming our timber four times as rapidly as we are growing it, we must encourage the greatest possible cooperation between the Federal Government, the various States, and the owners of forest lands, to the end that protection from fire shall be made more effective and replanting encouraged.

The fuel problem is under study now by a very capable fact-finding commission, and any attempt to deal with the coal problem, of such deep concern to the entire Nation, must await the report of the commission.

There are necessary studies of great problems which Congress might well initiate. The wide spread between production costs and prices which consumers pay concerns every citizen of the Republic. It contributes very largely to the unrest in agriculture and must stand sponsor for much against which we inveigh in that familiar term—the high cost of living.

No one doubts the excess is traceable to the levy of the middleman, but it would be unfair to charge him with all responsibility before we appraise what is exacted of him by our modernly complex life. We have attacked the problem on one side by the promotion of cooperative marketing, and we might well inquire into the benefits of cooperative buying. Admittedly, the consumer is much to blame himself, because of his prodigal expenditure and his exaction of service, but Government might well serve to point the way of narrowing the spread of price, especially between the production of food and its consumption.

A superpower survey of the eastern industrial region has recently been completed, looking to unification of steam, water, and electric powers, and to a unified scheme of power distribution. The survey proved that vast economies in tonnage movement of freights, and in the efficiency of the railroads, would be effected if the superpower program were adopted. I am convinced that constructive measures calculated to promote such an industrial development—I am tempted to say, such an industrial revolution—would be well worthy the careful attention and fostering interest of the National Government.

The proposed survey of a plan to draft all the resources of the Republic, human and material, for national defense may well have your approval. I commended such a program in case of future war, in the inaugural address of March 4, 1921, and every experience in the adjustment and liquidation of war claims and the settlement of war obligations persuades me we ought to be prepared for such universal call to armed defense. [Applause.]

I bring you no apprehension of war. The world is abhorrent of it, and our own relations are not only free from every threatening cloud, but we have contributed our larger influence toward making armed conflict less likely. [Applause.]

Those who assume that we played our part in the World War and later took ourselves aloof and apart, unmindful of world obligations, give scant credit to the helpful part we assume in international relationships.

Whether all nations signatory ratify all the treaties growing out of the Washington Conference on Limitation of Armament or some withhold approval, the underlying policy of limiting naval armament has the sanction of the larger naval powers, and naval competition is suspended. [Applause.] Of course, unanimous ratification is much to be desired.

The four-power pact, which abolishes every probability of war on the Pacific, has brought new confidence in a maintained peace, and I can well believe it might be made a model for like assurances wherever in the world any common interests are concerned.

We have had expressed the hostility of the American people to a supergovernment or to any commitment where either a council or an assembly of leagued powers may chart our course. Treaties of armed alliance can have no likelihood of American sanction, but we believe in respecting the rights of nations, in the value of conference and consultation, in the effectiveness of leaders of nations looking each other in the face before resorting to the arbitrament of arms.

It has been our fortune both to preach and promote international understanding. The influence of the United States in bringing near the settlement of an ancient dispute between South American nations is added proof of the glow of peace in ample understanding. In Washington to-day are met the delegates of the Central American nations, gathered at the table of international understanding, to stabilize their Republics and remove every vestige of disagreement. They are met here by our invitation, not in our aloofness, and they accept our hospitality because they have faith in our unselfishness and believe in our helpfulness. Perhaps we are selfish in craving their confidence and friendship, but such a selfishness we proclaim to the world, regardless of hemisphere or seas dividing. [Applause.]

I would like the Congress and the people of the Nation to believe that in a firm and considerate way we are insistent on American rights wherever they may be questioned, and deny no rights of others in the assertion of our own. Moreover, we are cognizant of the world's struggles for full readjustment and rehabilitation, and we have shirked no duty which comes of sympathy, or fraternity, or highest fellowship among nations. Every obligation consonant with American ideals and sanctioned under our form of government is willingly met. When we can not support we do not demand. Our constitutional limitations do not forbid the exercise of a moral influence, the measure of which is not less than the high purposes we have sought to serve.

After all there is less difference about the part this great Republic shall play in furthering peace and advancing humanity than in the manner of playing it. We ask no one to assume responsibility for us; we assume no responsibility which others must bear for themselves, unless nationality is to be hopelessly swallowed up in internationalism. [Applause.]

At 1 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m. the President and the members of his Cabinet retired from the Hall of the House.

The SPEAKER. The joint session of the two Houses is now dissolved.

At 1 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m. the Senate returned to their Chamber.

At 1 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m. the House resumed its session.

REFERENCE OF THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the President's message be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and that it be printed as a public document.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves that the President's message be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and printed as a public document.

The motion was agreed to.

TREASURY APPROPRIATIONS.

On motion of Mr. MADDEN, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 13180) making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, with Mr. SANDERS of Indiana in the chair.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Tax Simplification Board: For expenses of the Tax Simplification Board established in the Treasury Department under the provisions of section 1327 of the revenue act of 1921, approved November 23, 1921, as authorized under paragraph 2 (e) of said act and section, $7,500, to be available for personal and other services and expenses in the District of Columbia and elsewhere.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do that for the purpose of asking a question with reference to the activities of the Tax Simplification Board. I have had a good many complaints, and I am sure other Members have, about the length of time it takes the income-tax department to finally dispose of reports of individual income taxes. I have had complaints and heard a good many when I was at home the last time to the effect that after a report is filed and the books are thrown open to the agents of the Government, they send round at two or three different times different men who check up; and one will make an assessment perhaps and say the books are all right. At the end of six months or a year or two years another man comes around, checks up again and makes some further changes in the report, until the man who renders the report can never tell if his taxes are finally disposed of.

Now, it seems to me, except in cases of fraud and concealment, the Government ought to be able to dispose finally of a review of all income taxes within a year from the time the report is filed. It seems to me the revenue law should be amended so as to make it unnecessary for any review to be made and checking up the report in the absence of fraud and concealment, where the books are thrown open and the Government makes a review within a period of one year.

I know there are some instances in particular—and I am sure all gentlemen of the House have knowledge of them—where the taxes of 1917 have been reviewed by three or four different agents of the department, and they are coming back this year and checking up and levying additional assessments. I have wondered if the Tax Simplification Board is engaged in the work of straightening that out. In some instances they came back after three or four years and changed the report and made additional assessments until the taxpayer can never have assurance that he is finished with any year's payment. I have wondered whether the appropriation made in the next paragraph following the one we are considering is sufficient to enable these men to check up and review the reports within a year.

Mr. MADDEN. I am not quite sure that I understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I am talking about these tax men coming around one, two, and four years after the report is filed in individual income taxes. Of course, the Government should have ample time for thorough review but it seems to me that full auditing and review could be had within a year.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman refers to the Tax Simplification Board; that has nothing to do with the assessment of taxes. The Tax Simplification Board is a board appointed by the President by authority of law to try to simplify the form of the returns made by the taxpayer.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes; I have merely referred to that, but I am speaking of these agents that come around one, two, three, or four years after the books have been thrown open to the agents of the Government.

Mr. MADDEN. The Tax Simplification Board has made a report, and I think they filed their report yesterday with the Senate, at the request of the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I did not ask with particular reference to the Tax Simplification Board. The paragraph following this provides for the assessing and collecting of the revenue taxes, and it comes within the limit of what I am talking about, and it seems to me that provision ought to be made by the department.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know what the regulations are, but I think this process is gone through with.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask that the gentleman have three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the time of the gentleman from Texas be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. The individual states his own case. You incorporate your income and expenses, and you deduct such expenses as you may think proper, including the reduction of inventoried stock. You make the return of what you honestly believe to be the case. When the audit is made they discover that you have claimed credits you are not entitled to. There may be some doubt about certain credits, and they send men out to examine your books; they may send one man to examine your factory. They may not be satisfied with the report these men make from information which they have in the office. They send another man out, which is proper, until they finally find facts upon which they base the deduction in the case. I do not think it improper for the Government to send out these men to get at the facts.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It seems to me it would not be much more expensive to send them all out in one year so as to enable a man to know some time, somewhere, what his exact tax is.

Mr. MADDEN. The trouble in this particular has been that they have not been able to get an audit of the returns within a year. In the first place, there were no claims audited until 1921, as far back as 1917, so that the Treasury Department has been charged with the responsibility of auditing all those returns. They are now auditing returns for 1917, and they will not get through with them until the 4th of March, and then they will begin auditing the returns for 1918. There are certain classes of returns which have been audited for 1920 and 1921.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Are they catching up, and is there any assurance that they will ever catch up?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; they are catching up. The personal returns are up to 1920. The consolidated corporation returns are not completed for 1917.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I have offered an amendment to the income tax law because of the confusion, uncertainty, and consequent hardship occasioned by assessments that are made two, three, four, and five years after taxes become due and payable.

I have provided that except in cases of fraud and concealment returns must be reviewed and any additional assessment made within one year after the filing of the return. This will give the Government ample time to make any corrections that may be necessary.

As the measure is administered now it frequently happens that a Government agent has assured a man that his return was correctly made out and a year or two later another Government man has come along and levied an additional assessment and still another at a later time.

Sometime, somewhere, the taxpayer should have assurance that his taxes for any particular year are fully paid. The uncertainty of never knowing when the matter is disposed of has in some cases been worse than the payment of the taxes.

I can see no good reason why when a taxpayer makes a full and complete report and permits the examination of his books the Government should not take final action within a year. It frequently happens that a person would be able to pay his taxes at the time, but relying on payment having been made business conditions may be such at the end of three or four years that it frequently means ruin to pay additional assessments.

The amendment I have offered protects the Government in case of fraud.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I would like to ask a question of the chairman of the committee. Why is it that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has not been able, or rather why has he not brought this matter more nearly up to date with the force that he now has. In 1913 there were 4,000 people in the Internal Revenue Bureau, including the Washington office and field service. In 1922 there were over 20,000 in the service. It was costing $4,000,000 in 1913, and it is now costing more than $35,000,000. Now, with this extension of the force and this increase of expenditure, why this delay? Is it the lack of system, is it the lack of an arrangement of business methods, or what is it? I would like to have some information from the chairman of the committee in response to these inquiries.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the answer to that question ought to be very simple. In 1913 we had no income-tax returns, and the total collection, if I recollect right, though I do not pretend to say accurately, was about $218,000,000. We have collected since that time $21,580,000,000.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. That may mean something and it may mean nothing.

Mr. MADDEN. It does mean something, because we had no income-tax returns then, and we have 7,000,000 now to take care of. These income-tax returns have been accumulating long since before these people here were responsible for them.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, let me call attention to this fact: When we were considering here a short time ago a bill proposing to increase the internal-revenue districts by 10, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue submitted a report to the Committee on Ways and Means, and through it assumed that there had been no increase of the force from 1913 to 1922, and on that basis they had absolutely ignored the fact that from 1913 to 1920 the force had been increased from 4,000 to over 20,000 and that the expense had been increased from $4,000,000 to over $35,000,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; and as a result of the employment of a large part of that force they have been collecting $35,000,000 a month on back taxes, on underpaid schedules.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Why did they not audit those schedules long ago? They have the men.

Mr. MADDEN. They have not the men. The schedules were not audited because they could not reach them. I am sure that the gentleman would not misstate the case. Let us take a consolidated return schedule. The gentleman knows there are several wagonloads of papers connected with some of those schedules.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Yes; and they let them accumulate while they loiter about and curse the Government because their salaries are not increased almost monthly.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I do.

Mr. MADDEN. We have no control over that.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. We ought to put something into operation that would bring about a change.

Mr. MADDEN. We are doing the best we can to cut the expenses and increase the revenues.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. But what have the gentleman and his committee done to prevent these inexcusable duplications and the unwarranted delay in refunding the excess payments made by taxpayers? It is useless to brush these matters aside as though they were of no consequence. Is not it important to prevent the illegal disbursement of money from the National Treasury by means of these duplicate payments?

Is it not also important—in fact, is it not the imperative duty of the Bureau of Internal Revenue—to refund to the taxpayers without undue delay the amounts illegally paid in excess of their legal requirements?

Let us consider a few examples which may be traced out by those in the department to establish beyond dispute the matter of duplicate payments. I cite a few instances:

In March, 1920, Morris Strain, of San Antonio, Tex., paid his taxes and afterwards submitted an application for refund, which was not passed upon by the Bureau of Internal Revenue until July, 1921. Payment was made in September, 1921, by warrant No. 15020 for $1,411.60. Upon receipt of that warrant Mr. Strain discovered that it was a duplicate payment and returned to the department his personal check No. 237 in repayment of that amount, for which he had, as authorized, taken credit in the payment of his tax for 1920.

W. D. Cleveland, jr., of Houston, Tex., paid taxes in March, 1920, and the commissioner allowed a refund in July, 1921, which was audited and paid in August, 1921, by warrant No. 13250, for $1,952.87. He likewise returned the warrant, as he had already taken credit for that amount in payment of his taxes for 1920.

The Northern Trust Co., of Chicago, Ill., paid taxes in May, 1917. The excess payments thereof were allowed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, partly in November, 1920, and partly in April, 1921. The company was paid by warrant No. 57463 for $3,188.73. Upon its receipt the company discovered a duplicate payment, and repaid the amount to the Government by its check No. 8142, because credit had been taken in payment of taxes for a previous year.

The Debevoise-Anderson Co. (Inc.), of 56 Liberty Street, New York City, paid taxes in June, 1918; excess payment allowed by the commissioner on schedule income tax No. 260, in August, 1921. Immediately after that allowance the claim was audited and paid by warrant No. 16442 for $11,133.22. That warrant was returned to the Government by the company because only a very small amount, about $52.86, was due them.

The Mulberry Coal Co., of Pittsburg, Kans., paid taxes in March, 1918, on schedule No. 253; the commissioner allowed a refund in June, 1921, which was audited and paid in August, 1921, upon warrant No. 11217 for $3,427.92. Upon receipt of the warrant the company found that it had already taken credit in its tax return for 1920, and accordingly repaid the allowance by personal check No. 1612.

Examples of this character could be cited almost indefinitely to show the laxness and inefficiency on the part of those handling the details of this business in the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

In 1922 official inquiry was made to ascertain how many refund claims for excess payment of taxes had been filed during the fiscal year 1921. The replies from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in response show that about 55,000 claims were filed in his bureau and that 35,000 were adjusted during that year. Thus it appears that 20,000 were delinquent or remained unsettled at the end of that year. With equal receipts and adjustments from year to year the bureau is running behind 20,000 settlements each year and in two years these will accumulate to 40,000 unadjusted refund claims for taxes in excess.

At this rate, when can we expect the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to bring the business of his bureau up to date? With an expenditure of over $35,000,000 a year for his force of over 20,000 people on the rolls, why does he allow this large delinquency to accumulate from year to year?

The taxpayers are entitled to a prompt return of their money and it is the duty of Congress to continue in the future as it has in the past to supply the commissioner with an adequate force. He has that force and he should be required by some means to bring the business of his office up to date.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of assessing and collecting the internal-revenue taxes, including the employment of the necessary officers, attorneys, experts, agents, accountants, inspectors, deputy collectors, clerks, janitors, and messengers in the District of Columbia and the several collection districts, to be appointed as provided by law, telegraph and telephone service, rental of quarters outside the District of Columbia, postage, freight, express, and other necessary miscellaneous expenses, and the purchase of such supplies, equipment, furniture, mechanical devices, stationery, law books and books of reference, and such other articles as may be necessary for use in the District of Columbia and the several collection districts, $31,200,000: Provided, That not more than $100,000 of the total amount appropriated herein may be expended by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for detecting and bringing to trial persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws or conniving at the same, including payments for information and detection of such violation.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to inquire of the chairman if the employees under this paragraph are permanent employees of the department?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; they are permanent.

Mr. DOWELL. Why are these not under the same rule as those provided in the paragraph on page 23, the employees of the department?

Mr. MADDEN. We are reducing this force all of the time. You could not have a statutory force, because the emergency work requires a larger number of people than we would want to put on the statutory roll. We can dismiss these people the very minute that their services are not needed, and you can not always do that when the employees are on the statutory roll.

Mr. DOWELL. As a matter of fact, they are not being dismissed, as I understand it.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, yes, they are. They have been reduced by the amount of $3,000,000.

Mr. DOWELL. Thirty-one million two hundred thousand dollars is a large amount.

Mr. MADDEN. It is a large amount.

Mr. DOWELL. Does not the gentleman believe that the Members of the House should have a more itemized statement of just how this is expended?

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman will find an absolutely itemized statement of the whole thing in the Budget.

Mr. DOWELL. I understand, but this does not precisely follow the Budget.

Mr. MADDEN. It cuts out some of the recommendations. If we carried an itemized statement of all of the appropriations, we would have a bill here of five or six hundred pages. We are just carrying out the law.

Mr. DOWELL. That is true, but you can itemize the number of employees. You can give the different items for which the money is to be expended. It seems to me that ought to be done instead of putting in a lump sum of $31,200,000.

Mr. MADDEN. If we did that, we would have to appropriate more money than we do now.

Mr. DOWELL. Under what theory would it cost more money?

Mr. MADDEN. Under the theory that when you have a man at a fixed salary for a fixed period, he is there. They interchange, and we put men on under this provision temporarily and we are able, by reason of the right to use these funds, to employ a certain number of men to-day and less to-morrow, and this saves a lot of money.

Mr. DOWELL. At what salary are these being employed?

Mr. MADDEN. They are all under the statutory salaries, every one of them.

Mr. DOWELL. But with no limit as to the number?

Mr. MADDEN. You can not limit the number, because you do not know how many they want to-day. They may want 200 to-day and only 100 to-morrow. They put them on only when they need them.

Mr. DOWELL. Has the gentleman investigated to ascertain that no one is being employed except those absolutely necessary?

Mr. MADDEN. Absolutely.

Mr. DOWELL. Has the fund appropriated last year all been expended for that purpose?

Mr. MADDEN. There have been only four or five months of this year up to this time.

Mr. DOWELL. My notion is that this is not a very good way to appropriate for these departments.

Mr. MADDEN. After a thorough investigation I have reached the conclusion that this is the way to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment for the purpose of making an inquiry. Perhaps this does not pertain particularly to this bill, but a number of Members have spoken about these dislike instruments which have been placed upon several of the desks here in the Hall of the Chamber—I believe they are called amplifiers, though they seem to me, and to many others who have spoken about it, to be nothing less than buzz wheels. Does the gentleman from Illinois know who is responsible for the placing of these in the Chamber?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Or out of what fund they are to be paid for? If this is an experiment, it seems to me that the Congress of the United States ought not to be used for experimental purposes. To anyone who has paid attention to it, it is quite true that they seem to amplify the noise, but to very effectually destroy the enunciation, so that it is impossible many times, though sitting only a short way from the speaker, to understand exactly what he is saying. Is this to be followed by some moving-picture device, or is it contemplated that after a time our speeches shall be set to music?

Mr. MADDEN. I can assure the gentleman that they have not been placed in the Chamber at my request.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It makes the voice sound, at least on the floor here, as though one were talking into a barrel, and perhaps it might be an improvement to carry the overtones musically. Actually they seem to give the voice of the speaker the accents of a funeral director and the tone of an old-fashioned phonograph.

Mr. MADDEN. I am sorry, but I can not give the gentleman any further information than I have given, though I find it hard sometimes to hear myself.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses to enforce the provisions of the national prohibition act and the act entitled "An act to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon, all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or cocoa leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes," approved December 17, 1914, as amended by the revenue act of 1918, including the employment of executive officers, agents, inspectors, chemists, assistant chemists, supervisors, clerks, and messengers in the field and in the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the District of Columbia, to be appointed as authorized by law; the securing of evidence of violations of the acts, and for the purchase of such supplies, equipment, mechanical devices, laboratory supplies, books, and such other expenditures as may be necessary in the District of Columbia and several field offices, and for rental of necessary quarters, $9,000,000: Provided, That not to exceed $750,000 of the foregoing sum shall be expended for enforcement of the provisions of the said act of December 17, 1914: Provided further, That not to exceed $25,000 of the total amount appropriated shall be available for advances to be made by special disbursing agents when authorized by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, the provisions of section 3648 of the Revised Statutes to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HILL: Page 27, line 22, after the word "expenditures," insert: "(not authorizing, however, any expenditures for the alleged publicity or information bureau now conducted under the supervision of one Sherman A. Cuneo, or for any similar bureau)."

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MADDEN and Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, the hearings on this bill before the Appropriations Committee on pages 498 and 500 show the purposes of my amendment and the situation as to this publicity department of Prohibition Commissioner Haynes. I have here a large number of documents of the style which are daily issued, and all I wish to do is to call attention to some of them which are typical. Here is one.

[Release afternoon papers date indicated.]

WASHINGTON, April —.—Federal Prohibition Director McClenahan, of Colorado, reports that children are being used in that State also to protect moonshining. A still was found in a Denver home, where in an adjoining room 10 children occupied two beds. The parents on being arrested said that they obtained the still from a woman and mortgaged a cow to make the purchase. They set up the defense of providing support for the children.

WASHINGTON, April —.—Federal Prohibition Director Daily, of Mississippi, reports that the new State law that makes it compulsory for any individual caught with more than a quart of whisky in his possession to serve not less than 30 days in jail, with the privilege of suspension by a justice of the peace or circuit judge denied, is likely to land a number of those caught in the raids behind the bars. Their only escape from serving a jail sentence is said to be a pardon from the governor.

WASHINGTON, April —.—Federal Prohibition Director Morris, of Texas, reports 29 arrests in the Carrizozo enforcement area, among the number being a deputy sheriff of Lincoln County, whose 40-gallon still was raided and 14 gallons of liquor seized. The deputy sheriff had his badge on at the time, and Sheriff Harris assisted in the arrest.

Here is one I want to call to the attention of the committee. This is against law enforcement. It is one which no Government bureau should ever possibly issue to the American people.

WASHINGTON, April —.—Federal Prohibition Director Rowden, of Arkansas, reports that the Ku-Klux Klan has inaugurated a campaign against moonshiners. A dozen men, sheeted and masked, deposited a fully equipped whisky still on the sidewalk of a prominent corner of Texarkana shortly after midnight, with a quantity of mash and corn whisky. One of the men then wrote on the sidewalk with a piece of chalk. "Bootleggers, beware," and "Captured by the Ku-Klux Klan." Another went to the office of a newspaper and told the editor that the still had been captured by the klan at a point about 6 miles south of town. All of the party then got back into automobiles and quickly disappeared.

Mr. Chairman, I agreed with the President of the United States when he said in this hall a few moments ago that we need a strict law enforcement, and any bureau of the Government which sends out stuff of this kind which encourages lynch law should not be given funds with which to do it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I made the point of order that the amendment of the gentleman is not in order, because it is in direct opposition to the purpose of this appropriation. One of the purposes of the appropriation of $9,000,000 is to enforce the national prohibition act. That requires many administrative functions. One of these administrative functions is the one to which the gentleman now directs attention.

The CHAIRMAN. What rule of the House does it violate?

Mr. BLANTON. Well, it is not germane. It is not a limitation. All of the authorities hold that any limitation which is authorized under the rules must be germane to the purposes of the bill. This is not germane, but it is a limitation that is directly opposed to the fundamental purposes of this appropriation, and I make the point of order.

Mr. HILL. Does the Chair care to hear me on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, here is a provision of the Treasury act appropriating $9,000,000 for the enforcement of the Volstead Act. My amendment is a limitation upon that appropriation in order to prevent any portion of that $9,000,000 being wasted on a personal publicity campaign or in issuing propaganda that appears to applaud the use of lynch law with the approval of Federal Prohibition Commissioner Haynes. [Applause.]

Mr. TINCHER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to speak to the point of order?

Mr. TINCHER. I do not care to discuss the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. HICKS. No. I thought that no point of order had been reserved, and I was going to make the point of order that the point had been raised too late, but I understand it was reserved.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I make this additional point of order. It seems to me the amendment in certain respects is too vague and indefinite and imposes an impossible task upon the comptroller. It names certain work and then says "and other work of a similar character." It occurs to me that the language would be so indefinite as it might make it impossible of enforcement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The question of vagueness or indefiniteness is not the question before the Chair. It occurs to the Chair this is a limitation on the appropriation and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is in keeping with the attitude and general demeanor of those who are attempting to defeat the enforcement of national prohibition and hope to bring about the repeal of the national prohibition law. Every department of our Government I know anything about, in order to save time, has a habit of giving publicity for the newspaper reporters in some kind of a systematic way and the opposition, as I understand the gentleman from Maryland has to prohibition enforcement, is that in one interview they gave out they quoted some man in Arkansas who said that the Ku-Klux Klan had destroyed some moonshine liquor.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Not just now. If I get out of order I will have to yield. [Laughter.] I do not know for sure what objection the gentleman from Maryland would have to anyone destroying moonshine liquor. As a matter of fact I do not know anything much about Maryland. I understand there is a city in Maryland named Baltimore, but I never was there. I guess I have been there. I guess the train that I came to Washington on came under the city of Baltimore, but what I means is, I never had occasion to look out of the window as we came through. This amendment and the other amendments suggested by the gentleman from Baltimore last night are in direct opposition to the message of the President this morning. But there is nothing to be surprised at in that, because yesterday he announced that from now on he was going to be half Democrat and half Republican in his votes, and I suppose these amendments that he is offering are as a Democrat, being offered on the part of his Democratic half, for surely he would not come here but a few minutes after his own Executive has left the floor, asking that we do nothing to hinder, but on the other hand get behind the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead law and get behind this work. This amendment should not receive a large vote, but I do not know of any way to prevent the gentleman from Baltimore from voting for it. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, this is the first of a series of six amendments to be offered to this section by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL]. In the consideration of all these amendments the House should remember, particularly in the light of the splendid appeal for Americanism and law observance which our President has just offered in this Chamber, that the gentleman from Maryland speaks on this floor on this question as the authorized, duly credentialed minister plenipotentiary and envoy most extraordinary of the Association Opposed to the Prohibition Amendment [laughter], and that when the gentleman offers here an amendment to the item carrying the proposed fund for the enforcement of that law, carrying into effect one of the provisions of our Constitution, in that act he represents an organization that is known by all of its propaganda as being opposed to the eighteenth amendment, an organization which has no idea of ever securing its repeal but desires to nullify that part of the Constitution by hamstringing and defeating its enforcement. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman is sure that I can get three or four minutes additional time, I will yield.

Mr. HILL. I want to say to the gentleman that President Harding——

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, I can not yield to a speech from the gentleman.

Mr. HILL. Let me make but a minute speech. Answering the gentleman's question, the President said in the Senate of the United States four years ago that it was the right of the American people to repeal any constitutional amendment or any law they wanted to, and the association to which the gentleman refers—I have not consulted them about this, but I think they will agree with it—I will say to you that we have in this country the right to repeal an objectionable law.

Mr. CRAMTON. Now, I will resume my part of my speech. [Laughter.] The gentleman, or any other American, or any association in America, has the right to attempt to repeal any provision of the Constitution; but so long as that constitutional provision remains in effect it is the duty of every patriotic American to try to make it effective. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. No; I can not yield further now. No citizen has the right to say, "This part of the Constitution I will support, and this part I do not like and I will oppose," and the only purpose entertained by the association opposed to prohibition and their 29 coworkers in a most immoral vineyard is not to repeal it—because, as the President said, it never will be repealed—but they hope to defeat its purpose and make it ineffective. They hope to hamstring and destroy it by indirection and nullification. [Applause.]

Now, if the gentleman will permit, this country is not in sympathy with any such policy. The recent election has been heralded by the press of this country as a mark of the reaction of the country from its stand for prohibition. We have been given to understand that the loss of seats on the Republican side was due to prohibition enforcement. What is the truth about it? We have no right, no one has any right, to try to make prohibition and temperance a scapegoat for the serious loss suffered by the Republican Party in this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. May I have three minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. HILL. If the gentleman will yield for a question I will have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield to another question?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. HILL. Directing the gentleman's attention to the particular amendment pending before the House, does the gentleman approve of the law enforcement by the Ku-Klux Klan?

Mr. CRAMTON. I have not anything to do with that proposition, and I do not wonder that the gentleman wishes to divert me at this particular time. I want to give the information that the country needs, and that is this: We lost 80 seats; the Republican Party lost 80 seats in the last election. Now of those 80 seats where Republicans went out and Democrats or others came in, how many of them were dry Republicans succeeded by wet Democrats? If you can answer that, then you can measure how much prohibition and the splendid stand of the Republican Party for law enforcement had to do with our difficulties in the last election. I will tell you. Of those 80 seats we suffered a net loss of only 9, and if the Republican Party had lost only 9 seats in the last election we never would have noticed it at all. That is the situation. Generally speaking, the country is not in harmony with the gentleman's program. In my own State——

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRAMTON. Briefly.

Mr. FESS. Where the issue was straight on wet or dry, as in Ohio, it went 200,000 for dry.

Mr. CRAMTON. Ohio went 200,000 dry, California went dry, and nearly every other place in the country where the issue was squarely drawn in the congressional contest the dry Member retained his seat. Further, in my own State, the gentleman's association——

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman does not contend that New Jersey or New York went dry?

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, those States never were dry. But if either one of those States could go back to the old days of the saloon for a year they would after that be dry, too.

Mr. STAFFORD. That was not the issue in this fight.

Mr. CRAMTON. There are only three ways of selling booze, as the gentleman knows. One is to sell it from a saloon. I do not care what its name is. If the place serves liquor, it is a saloon. Another is to sell it for use only in the home, with no opportunity for legal regulation. The third is to continue the policy of bootlegging. Which does the gentleman want?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I will see that he gets more time.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman have three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may proceed three additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Has the gentleman any information as to the number of illicit stills in his district or his State?

Mr. CRAMTON. I know that there are only two or three States in this Union where more money went into the Treasury this year from the enforcement of the law than in Michigan, which means a splendid attempt at enforcement, situated as we are upon the Canadian border.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman has not answered my question.

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not know. I have never looked for one. I do not know where there is even one.

Mr. KNUTSON. Did the gentleman hear any statements being made during his campaign this fall as to the number of stills?

Mr. CRAMTON. I did the best I could to make this question an issue in my campaign in the primaries. The other gentleman started in to make it an issue, but he got cold feet and tried to ride both horses before he got through. I was especially pleased by the indorsement I received from my district, and I will say that in the November election the association opposed to the enforcement of prohibition, represented on this floor by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL], broadcasted in the State of Michigan the announcement that two Republican candidates there especially ought to be defeated for their position on this question. What was the result, or what followed? One of them, with a total vote of less than 50,000, received a majority of 22,000, the largest majority given to any contested candidate for Congress in the State this year. The other one, a former State Anti-Saloon League superintendent, in a district where the vote was much larger, a district having the industrial cities of Highland Park, Flint, Pontiac, and Lansing, received a majority of 17,000; and a third one, coming from the Upper Peninsula, a mining district having a large labor vote that it might be claimed would be wet, was triumphantly reelected notwithstanding his consistent support of prohibition, by a vote of 26,228 to 6,784. That was the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES].

The country expects Congress to stand for the Constitution, and such statements as come from the association opposed to prohibition should be taken at their real value and as intended to destroy enforcement, as they are. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORPE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on this amendment. I feel that I am qualified to speak on this subject.

THIRTY-FIVE YEARS OF EXPERIENCE.

I have had considerable experience along these lines, covering a period of more than 35 years, since I left my home in Indiana to enter the business world when I was a boy only 13 years of age.

In these years I have had many experiences; some of them I would like to forget; some of them I remember with pleasure; but I am going to confess to some things that I am really ashamed of in my first attempt at addressing this House. I would hesitate to refer to my own unfortunate experience if it were not for the fact that certain distinguished gentlemen are attempting to raise an issue here that forces me to muster all the weapons at my command to help defeat their nefarious schemes.

TRUE TO MY CONSTITUENCY.

I would not be true to my constituency, to my family, my country, and my sense of honor if I did not raise my voice against this amendment, which will nullify and render inactive every purpose and intent of the Volstead Act. This amendment is nothing more nor less than a smoothly worded camouflage, a smoke screen, behind which is very strongly intrenched unlimited wealth and a great array of able men who hope to destroy this act and once more return the liquor traffic to its former power.

POISON PROPAGANDA.

Ever since the passage of this act they have been spreading a poison propaganda among the people of the various States, under the guise of personal liberty, demanding the return of light wines and beer, which is nothing less than the opening wedge for the complete overthrow of the national prohibition act. They have appealed to the very lowest depravity of human nature, they have enlisted in their ranks the worst alien population of foreign lands who have come to our shores, preying on their prejudice and ignorance of our laws and claiming that they are representing the wishes of the majority of the people. These hordes of newcomers have no knowledge of the fundamental principles of our Government, and it is safe to say that a large percentage are not naturalized, and whose only idea of liberty is their power to abuse it; and, on the other hand, there are a very large number of apparently respectable people striving for the complete overthrow of this act for the sole purpose of great financial gain.

MOST DANGEROUS CLASS.

This is the most dangerous element the friends of prohibition and law enforcement have to contend with to-day, because from their standing in the business world they give their methods an air of apparent respectability.

A POSTGRADUATE.

I claim to have had considerable experience upon the subject of the liquor traffic in these 35 years of contact with humanity. I have traveled in every State in the Union except one. I have had every opportunity to study this question among all classes of our citizenship. For the benefit of the distinguished gentleman from Baltimore [Mr. HILL] I would like to say that I have passed through the elementary school of light wines and beer, and I claim to be a postgraduate of the university of old king alcohol. [Laughter.]

And I hereby declare from this floor that for this education I have paid the price in sorrows, disappointments, and heartaches, such as this distinguished gentleman [Mr. HILL] in his apparently innocent attitude would force upon the present and unborn generations by the nullification of this act.

I am here for the purpose of opposing this amendment, and all other amendments which may come from the floor of this House attempting to nullify any amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which I know to be the most sacred document of our American history. [Applause.]

THE ISSUE INVOLVED.

The only issue to be considered here by this able body of men is the great moral principle involved. Shall we take a backward step at this time before the eyes of the civilized world and permit ourselves to be defeated by all the evil influences which will be mustered against law and order and the welfare of society? No, gentlemen of this House, we will not permit this to be done.

I was commissioned by the people of my district to come down here and support the provisions of the Volstead Act. I am glad to have this opportunity to voice my sentiments on this great moral question.

I have great admiration for the distinguished gentleman from the city of Baltimore [Mr. HILL]. I admire his stately form. [Laughter.] I recognize that he, no doubt, has a great judicial mind and that he is a man of wonderful learning, but I want to say to you, gentlemen of this House, that under the present conditions, as indicated by the will of the American people, and from the standpoint of civilization and Christianity, which ever strives to uplift mankind, "the gentleman's heart is wrong"; and I wish that some time in the near future he would come out beyond the placid waters of the old Missouri and become inoculated with some of the spirit of true freedom and love for law and order. Then I believe he would gladly come back here and follow the wise counsel of President Harding, that great leader, who just spoke to us a few minutes ago advocating the strict enforcement of this act.

TURKEY BANISHED ALCOHOL.

It is also pleasing to note, on the very day President Harding made his eloquent appeal, that far-away Turkey, one of the most criticized and troublesome nations of the present time, had put into effect the most drastic prohibition law of any nation in the world, and had forever banished alcoholic liquors from its boundaries, and the white ribbon was hoisted up beside the crescent as Mohammedan Turkey joined the few other nations of the world which now ban intoxicating liquors.

ALCOHOLISM A DISEASE.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, alcoholism is not only a curse, but it is a deadly disease; I have learned this from scientific men who have made this subject a life study. One of the authorities of one of the State insane asylums in the State of Iowa told me a number of years ago that more than 82 per cent of the inmates, confined there at that time, were victims of the ravages of alcohol, either directly or indirectly; I was also informed that 87 per cent of the insane patients of the State of Wisconsin were brought to their deplorable condition, either directly or indirectly, by this deadly disease.

This Government has spent millions to eradicate the yellow fever from the Southland; it has spent millions to stop the deadly ravages of smallpox, influenza, tuberculosis, and other kindred contagious diseases; it has also spent millions to destroy the deadly toll of cholera in hogs.

Tuberculosis in cattle and the foot-and-mouth disease in sheep and all of these diseases shrink into insignificance in comparison to the deadly ravages of the unrestricted use of alcohol to the human race. Its toll has been countless millions since the beginning of our Christian civilization, and if it were possible to rehabilitate these victims of this deadly disease in human form as they once existed, and march them in spectral array through the streets of Washington and permit any one of them to tell their story from the floor of this House it would be harrowing in the extreme, and no Member could reconcile it with his conscience to cast his vote against the appropriation to insure the enforcement of this act.

THE HISTORY OF MY ANCESTORS.

I come of Revolutionary stock; my ancestry dates back to the siege of Yorktown, where my great-great-grandfather gave his life in the defense of this Republic.

To me the Constitution of these United States is one of the most sacred documents of modern time. I believe in upholding it and in its strictest enforcement. It is the eternal foundation of all our liberties, not only to our own people but to the people of every land.

I may never have an opportunity to address this House again as my term of office is short, but I wish to be recorded here in defense of this law. [Applause.]

I want this message to go forth to my constituency, and to all the people throughout this land, that the greatest pleasure that came to me in the short time I was here was to record my vote for God and home and native land, and for the upbuilding and upholding of an outshining record for the strict enforcement of the Constitution of the United States. [Applause.]

NO SANE ARGUMENT CAN BE PRODUCED.

Yes, gentlemen of this House, there can be no sane argument used in its favor; alcoholism in any form is not only a deadly disease but a menace to society and good government. Degradation, sorrow, poverty, shame, crime, insanity, and untold suffering ever follow in its wake. With exceeding pleasure I shall vote to uphold the dignity of this law. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. HILL) there were—ayes 2, noes 98.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 28, line 8, after the word "standing," strike out the period, insert a colon, and then insert the following: "And provided further, That no part of this $9,000,000 shall be paid in salary or expenses to any employee of the Internal Revenue Service who willfully fails or refuses to perform his duties connected with the enforcement of the laws mentioned in this paragraph."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that amendment. I do not think anybody can justify it.

Mr. BLANTON. It is merely a limitation.

Mr. MADDEN. That is already covered in the law itself. The law provides that men who fill these places are under oath to enforce the law, and where a man willfully refuses to do that, of course the remedy is to put him out of office. If he willfully violates the law and commits a crime by so doing he ought to be prosecuted. I do not think this is a proper amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this amendment is simply a limitation. Whether it is desirable or not is for the committee, and not the Chair, to decide.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am with the President of the United States in the message which he delivered here an hour ago on the enforcement of the prohibition laws. He called attention to the fact that their enforcement is lax and that this laxness must stop; that the law must be enforced if people are to continue having proper respect for this Government. Here we are spending $9,000,000 in this bill for the enforcement of this law and it is not enforced; but my amendment will help enforcement, and when we come to the salaries of the district attorneys and the judges in the judicial appropriation bill, who are called upon to enforce the law, I expect to offer just such an amendment. They ought not, any of them, to receive a cent of the money of the people unless they are going to do their duty. The reason why 80 Members on the Republican side lost their seats in this House at the recent election was not, as the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL] suggests, because of the prohibition question. It was because of other things, one of which, I might mention, was the long delay by the President of the United States in submitting to the Congress the question of aid to farmers, which he, for the first time, submitted an hour ago. Why was not that question submitted two years ago in his inaugural address? Was not the need of the farmers of the country just as dire and necessitous then as it is now? Why should not he, before the lessons of the recent election, have brought that question to the Congress? Everyone knows it was the dissatisfaction of the farmers of this country, above everything else, that caused the loss of many of the 80 Republican seats. All I have to do is to refer the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL] to the record of our distinguished friend Doctor FESS, from Ohio. Where would Doctor FESS be if it had not been for his strong, determined, unflinching attitude on this question of enforcing the prohibition law? He goes to the United States Senate because of that stand. The good people of Ohio stood up in his behalf and behind him on prohibition to the exclusion of every other question. I want to say that when the time comes, when we take up the judicial appropriation bill, I am going to offer just such an amendment in respect to the district attorneys and the district judges. There are too many district attorneys and district judges where men come in and plead guilty to a violation of the prohibition law and are fined 1 cent or $1, where the fines are not commensurate with the offense committed, and where there is no jail sentence whatever. Enforcement is left entirely to the State administration in many States. I do not think a man in the department ought to receive a dollar of this $9,000,000 fund where he willfully fails to perform his duty. Every day you take up a newspaper and read where a guard of some burglarized warehouse has failed to do his duty and hundreds of gallons of whisky are taken away, barrels of whisky stolen and taken away by wagon loads, because some official or employee of the Government has failed to do his duty. That must stop. These employees must understand, every one of them, not only that they will lose their position, but they will not get a single dollar of the people's money unless they perform their duty.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt about the good intentions of the gentleman from Texas in offering this amendment. But it is wholly unnecessary. The law of the land provides for the punishment of men who violate their oath of office and how they should be dealt with. If the amendment of the gentleman from Texas should prevail it would place the Comptroller General of the United States in the position of having to pass upon the question whether a man on a given pay roll somewhere in the Government employ had performed his duty, and whether he could be paid, because there was some doubt as to whether he had performed that duty. This is an accounting question, the question of dealing with the men in the Government service. If men fail to perform their duties, no amendment of this sort will make them do it. It does not seem to me that we ought to complicate the situation by making it necessary for the Comptroller General to pass upon the eligibility of a man on the Government pay roll to receive his pay. If he violates the law he ought to be punished. If he does not perform his duty he ought to be dismissed. The law ought to be enforced, whatever the law may be. I am in favor of law enforcement and of doing everything possible to see that the law is enforced, no matter whether I believed in the law before it was passed or not.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I yield.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that under this amendment the man who receives his pay performs his duty, and would not the adoption of this amendment complicate it?

Mr. MADDEN. That is what I have said.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee a question. What was the amount carried in the first appropriation bill after the enactment of Federal prohibition?

Mr. MADDEN. I think it was $2,000,000. I am not quite sure. Then I think a million was appropriated in a deficiency bill, which made $3,000,000, and later on there was further appropriations which made it $9,200,000, and now it is $9,000,000.

Mr. KNUTSON. What was the total the first year?

Mr. MADDEN. Three million dollars.

Mr. KNUTSON. What was the total amount the second year?

Mr. MADDEN. Five million five hundred thousand dollars, including a deficiency.

Mr. KNUTSON. The information I have is that as the cost of enforcing prohibition goes up the price of whisky is coming down. When we passed the prohibition act and the lid was put on, my information is that whisky cost $10 and $12 a bottle. Now it is said one can get home-brew whisky for $8 a gallon.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. What evidence does the gentleman base his statement upon that the price of whisky is coming down?

Mr. KNUTSON. Not only from what I have read, but I will say to the gentleman that in certain parts of the country price lists are being circulated freely.

Mr. CRAMTON. As time goes on the gentleman from Minnesota will become more expert in locating suitable sources of supply. [Laughter.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Well, the gentleman from Michigan, who is an expert, holds out some ray of hope. [Laughter.] I voted for the prohibition amendment to the Constitution and also for the Volstead Act. It is not working out as I had hoped. [Applause.] There are in this country to-day thousands and tens of thousands of illicit stills. Every day boys and girls in many localities are coming home from school paralyzed drunk and sick.

Mr. MURPHY. That is all bunk.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is absolutely true. I visited a home in my own city about a month ago, and the mother told me that her 14-year-old boy had come home from high school the day before so drunk and sick that she thought he was going to die. She asked him the next day where he had procured it, and the boy said that nearly all the boys in the school were carrying it on their hips.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I can not. I have only five minutes. How much money is necessary to enforce prohibition? I am willing to vote every dollar necessary to enforce the laws of the land. If prohibition can not be enforced, as some contend, then I might vote for a modification, as I am not willing to see remain on the statute books of the Nation a law that can not be enforced, for that only breeds contempt for law; neither am I willing to continue by my vote a condition that is ruining the boyhood and girlhood of the Nation. This is a question that must be solved by hard-headed reasoning and not by sentimentality. I would not for a moment favor going back to the old-fashioned saloon. For that institution I have not the least love or concern, but I am deeply concerned about the welfare of our boys and girls, who are the hope of the Republic. In God's name, let us take hold of this great question fearlessly and boldly and do that which we conceive to be for the best interests of the Nation.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Does the gentleman think the open saloon would prevent the condition of which he complains?

Mr. KNUTSON. I have already stated that I am opposed to a return to the open saloon. We have a flaunting of the law that is sad and tragic. My friends, let us do something. Either stamp out the moonshining and bootlegging or come out fearlessly and admit that the law can not be enforced.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. Similar statements to those made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] are found in certain papers of the country. When you come to investigate the majority of them you find that it is something that Smith told Brown that Jones told Smith and Smith told somebody else. Personal observation and experience demonstrate the fact that nothing that has occurred in the last 25 years has done so much for American manhood and womanhood, has advanced the young man and the young woman of our Nation so much, as has the eighteenth amendment and the enforcement of that law. I have heard men say that you can buy liquor wherever you want it. Two years ago, last year, and even this summer I traveled thousands of miles through the mining country, where, necessarily, it used to be found. You could obtain it any place prior to the eighteenth amendment. There were from 5 to 10 to 15 saloons in every town of any size, all over the Western States. Go there to-day and you can not find liquor. You hear men say that you can obtain it, but go there and you will find that it is not obtainable, and you find that people are not drinking; you find that the men who used to drink have bank accounts; that they are sending their children to school; that they are well dressed and provided for; and that the community is prosperous as it never prospered before.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Just one moment. I want to tell a story. Two years ago I was in San Francisco with a man I knew very well. He said, "John, why is it that you voted for the constitutional amendment and these laws?" I said, "You know why; you have seen the results of liquor." He then told me that he could get it whenever he wanted it in San Francisco; you could get liquor at any place. I said very well, and invited him to go and have a drink. He then said, "It will cost you a dollar." But I replied that I did not care, that it would not cost him anything, that I would give $2, and that he could take his drink and I would let them have mine. I said, "Come on, now, and show us." He then replied, "Oh, they will know you, and they will not furnish it to you." That is the same old story you find wherever you go. You find men willing to state what can be had and where it can be had, but when you come to a showdown and ask them they are unable to produce.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman remember the provisions of the Volstead Act that to buy liquor and to furnish it to another is a violation of law? [Laughter.]

Mr. RAKER. I do not quite get the question.

Mr. BUTLER. I am asking my friend whether, when he invited his friend in San Francisco to take a drink, he realized that he was violating the law?

Mr. RAKER. Oh, I realized the position of the law; I knew it well, but I knew that my friend could not get it. His was just like the stories that are told elsewhere. They read well, they sell the newspapers, they make good articles in the magazines. People like to talk about them. People like to talk about something that brings down humanity instead of uplifting it.

Mr. BUTLER. What would my friend have done if the liquor had been furnished? Would he have run away from it?

Mr. RAKER. I would have had to do it; yes. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, for 40 years I have had to run away from it. Gentlemen know what that means when you live in a community such as used to abound in the western country. If you did not go out with the boys, they would make you go. We all know what it means. No man can honestly say, if he thinks anything of his word and of his conscience, but that the eighteenth amendment and the law placed on the statute books to enforce it have done more to advance America and its cause than all of the laws that have been placed there for the last 15 years.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 28, line 8, add a new provision, as follows: "Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the payment of the salary of any employee who shall not have been appointed, after competitive examination and certification, by the Civil Service Commission."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment upon the grounds that this is not a limitation but is a change of law. Section 38 of the prohibition enforcement law is as follows:

SEC. 38. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Attorney General of the United States are hereby respectively authorized to appoint and employ such assistants, experts, clerks, and other employees in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, and to purchase such supplies and equipment as they may deem necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of this act, but such assistants, experts, clerks, and other employees, except such executive officers as may be appointed by the commissioner or the Attorney General to have immediate direction of the enforcement of the provisions of this act, and persons authorized to issue permits, and agents and inspectors in the field service, shall be appointed under the rules and regulations prescribed by the civil service act.

That is the act under which we are operating. The gentleman from Massachusetts is trying to amend that act, and I submit that it is legislation on an appropriation bill and under the rules of the House it is not in order.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. There is discretionary authority in the public officials to pay these men whether they are under the civil service or not?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Then it is a clear violation of the rules of the House to take that discretion away from the appointing power.

Mr. TINKHAM. I desire to refer to section 825 of the Constitution Manual and Digest and Rules and Practice of the House of Representatives, page 368, where it says in reference to section 2 of Rule XXI, under which the point of order has been made—

Although the rule forbids on any general appropriation bill a provision "changing existing law," which is construed to mean legislation generally, the House's practice has established the principle that certain "limitations" may be admitted. It being established that the House under its rules may decline to appropriate for a purpose authorized by law, so it may by limitation prohibit the use of the money for part of the purpose while appropriating for the remainder of it (IV, 3936). The language of the limitation provides that no part of the appropriation under consideration shall be used for certain designated purpose (IV, 3917–3926). And this designated purpose may reach the question of qualifications, for while it is not in order to legislate as to the qualifications of the recipients of an appropriation the House may specify that no part of the appropriation shall go to recipients lacking certain qualifications (IV, 3942–3952).

All references under this statement are to Hinds' Precedents of the House of Representatives, and if the Chair will read the cases cited in Volume IV, 3942 to 3952, the Chair will see that the limitation is completely supported by these decisions.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TINKHAM. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman starts out very properly with a limitation by the language of his amendment, but he winds the amendment up with a direction which is legislation changing the law on the subject and is not in order.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I will.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Does not the amendment seek to establish a method of ascertaining qualifications rather than an ascertainment of qualifications, and on that ground it would be new legislation setting aside the legislation mentioned by the chairman of the committee a moment ago and adopting an entirely new method for the ascertainment of qualifications?

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will consult Hinds' Precedents, Volume IV, 3917 to 3926, as well as the former cases I have cited, he will find that the limitation I have offered is an amendment and limitation and is entirely within the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] desire to be heard?

Mr. MADDEN. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts reads as follows:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the payment of the salary of any employee who shall not have been appointed after competitive examination and certification by the Civil Service Commission.

The Committee on Appropriations, of course, have no legislative powers except such as are prescribed by the rules, and an amendment can not be offered which proposes legislation unless it comes within the rules. However, there is a very long line of decisions which permits limitations upon appropriations. An amendment may be offered which provides that no part of this appropriation shall be paid to any certain class of employees, and the Chair knows of no reason why an amendment which provides that no part of this appropriation shall be paid to employees unless they have certain qualifications is not a proper limitation. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, the President of the United States, who has just finished his annual address to Congress, has referred specifically to conditions relating to the enforcement of prohibition which savor of Nation-wide scandal, and said that this scandal is a most demoralizing factor in our public life. He also specifically referred to official corruption and individual demoralization in relation to this subject. If this committee is honest in its opinion and expressed desire to enforce the eighteenth amendment and the statutes which lie under it, its duty is to withdraw the enforcing arm of the Government as represented by the prohibition enforcement Federal service from partisan politics and its present atrocious misuse for personal and corrupt ends. The limitation I have offered will establish rules that have been established in nearly every department of this Government in order to protect the department from partisan manipulation and to best obtain results from work honestly and efficiently done. What are some of the admitted facts in relation to the present scandalous conditions? You will find upon page 493 of the hearings before the subcommittee on the Treasury Department appropriation bill now before us, held within 30 days, the following:

The CHAIRMAN. How many men are there employed altogether in the service?

Mr. HAYNES. We have 380 men on the general agents' force, and 3,518 will be the total under this estimate.

Mr. JONES. That is what we estimate for, 3,518, Mr. Chairman. We have now about 3,800, but this estimate that you now have under consideration contemplates a reduced appropriation.

Mr. HAYNES. You see, Mr. Chairman, we had built up to the maximum provided for with the $9,250,000, which will now have to be somewhat readjusted and which we are already anticipating on the basis of a reduced appropriation.

Mr. MAGEE. Do I understand there is a reduction of 300 in the force, from 3,800 to 3,500?

Mr. JONES. The estimates are for 3,518. The work under prohibition enforcement is more or less spasmodic, and sometimes you have to have a larger number than at other times, and right now we have about 3,800.

In other words, they have now 3,800 men. Now, on page 509 of the same report appears the following colloquy:

Mr. GALLIVAN. Also please include a statement showing how many of your agents or employees have been arrested during each of those years.

Mr. JONES. I might state that during last year about 6 per cent of the agents were dropped for delinquency or misconduct. That might give you some idea of it.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I am not talking about anybody being dropped, but I am talking about those who have been arrested and prosecuted.

The CHAIRMAN. Arrested by State authorities or Federal authorities?

Mr. GALLIVAN. By any authorities.

Mr. JONES. You want a statement of the number of agents arrested and prosecuted during what time?

The CHAIRMAN. During each year since the act has been in force.

(Statement referred to follows:)

"I am submitting to you herewith for inclusion in the hearings on the Treasury appropriation bill (after the eighteenth line, on page 593, of the transcript of the stenographic report) such data as are contained in our files regarding arrests and prosecutions of prohibition agents during the fiscal years 1920, 1921, 1922, and from July 1, 1922, to date.

"Very truly yours, JAMES E. JONES,
"Acting Prohibition Commissioner."

Arrests and prosecutions of prohibition agents.

Fiscal year 1921	4

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. TINKHAM) there were—ayes 7, noes 56.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, line 19, after the word "securing," insert "without violating the national prohibition act or the laws of any of the several States."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. That the amendment is in violation of the Constitution and in direct——

The CHAIRMAN. That is not ground for a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I was going to suggest that I used that as a preface for making the point of order. It is not germane to the purposes of this bill or to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HILL: Page 27, line 24, after the word $9,000,000, insert: "Provided, That none of the money so appropriated shall be used for the payment of travel or other expenses of any person engaged upon a speaking trip to address private or nongovernmental organizations."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HILL: Page 27, line 19, after the word "law," insert: "None such employees, however, to include legal advisers, counsel, assistant counsel, special counsel, attorneys, or law clerks."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 2, noes 64.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the RECORD disclose the instances where, when there was a division on the Hill amendment, the vote was one for and the opposition all the rest?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HILL. I will say to the gentleman that I am glad to have it shown.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HILL: Page 27, line 24, after the figures "$9,000,000," insert: "Provided, That none of the money so appropriated shall be expended for political propaganda intended to defeat Members of Congress."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that amendment, that it is not germane to the proposition, and also that it involves a conclusion or construction on the part of the Chair that is not a part of the functions of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HILL: Page 27, line 6, after the word "violation" strike out the following paragraph, beginning line 7, page 27, and terminating with line 8, page 28.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of the appropriations made herein for the Internal Revenue Service shall be used to increase the compensation of any class or grade of officers or employees.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a few weeks before the recent election a letter was sent out by a noted magazine requesting expressions on the part of certain Members of Congress as to the Volstead law and the eighteenth amendment. In my answer was included a statement that this prohibition legislation, instead of being "put over" on the country, was the deliberate conviction of the Nation, with the largest majority ever known in the history of America. I stated that in the Continental Congress, in 1777, a resolution was passed calling upon the States for the enactment of laws prohibiting the distillation of alcohol from grain.

Later I had a letter from a benighted being in the black belt of Baltimore saying my statement was untrue. He declared he had gone through every page of the records of the Continental Congress, and no such resolution was ever passed.

I went through those records the other day to refresh my memory, and here is what I find:

Thursday, February 27, 1777.—Journals of Continental Congress, Volume VII, page 165:

Resolved, That it be recommended to the several legislatures of the United States immediately to pass laws the most effectual for putting an immediate stop to the pernicious practice of distilling grain, by which the most extensive evils are likely to be derived if not quickly prevented.

Thus we see that 145 years ago the Continental Congress, the predecessor of the Congress of the United States, in the midst of a revolutionary struggle for its very existence, passed a bone-dry law, the most effective within its power.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman spoke of the "black belt" in Baltimore. That is an entirely different one from the one that uses "white horses," is it not? [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes. This is the black belt of ignorance in Baltimore, which never mounts. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. FOCHT. Without expressing any opinion on the question, but in order that we may have the history accurately stated, is it not a fact that Thomas Jefferson in a published document deplored the fact that people were consuming so much spirits and recommended that they use malt liquors? Is not that correct?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I have heard it so stated. I know that Dr. Benjamin Rush, of Pennsylvania, a Member of the Continental Congress and chairman of the independence committee, published a book in which he cited the evils of alcohol and condemned its use either as a spirituous or malt beverage. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee: On page 28, line 9, strike out the paragraph ending with line 11.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have offered an amendment to strike out the paragraph, lines 9, 10, and 11.

I feel that this provision in the bill is particularly an injustice to the deputy collector branch of the service. During the previous administration deputy collectors were enjoying lucrative salaries, ranging from $2,000 to $2,500. When the new administration went into power the new collectors started their employees at $1,500 as a base salary. If this provision is left in the bill, the collectors can not promote these men, except in case of vacancies, and there are no vacancies. There will be a great many vacancies, however, if this provision continues in the bill, because good men will be forced to resign. That is the situation in Tennessee. I have conferred with the collector in my State and he tells me that a number of men there have signified their intention to resign unless some provision is made for their promotion.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman made the statement that in the previous administration deputy collectors were enjoying big salaries and that those salaries have been greatly reduced. I would like to know the basis for that statement.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I can state from my own personal observation that they were drawing $2,200 to $2,500 in the Knoxville office.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There has been no action by Congress reducing their salaries.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. That was done by the collector's office. Under the previous law they were allowed to advance their salaries, but the collector for Tennessee started his men at $1,500 with a bonus of $240, and if this provision is left in the bill the collector will be powerless to promote these men, and, of course, good and capable men can not be retained for that compensation. The Knoxville, Tenn., office consists of a chief and four deputies. Each of these deputies draw a salary of $1,500 per annum. Before they could be appointed it was necessary for them to show that they had had experience in bookkeeping or in auditing work. Of course, men who possess such qualifications should receive more compensation than $1,500 per year, and unless they do receive it they will naturally find employment elsewhere. I am in favor of economy just as much as anyone, but I contend that a campaign of economy that looses the Government capable employees is very poor economy indeed.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If the gentleman will allow me, of course, everybody knows that this administration is practicing economy.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The provision which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] seeks to strike out is one that I am responsible for having put in the law. It provides—

That no part of the appropriation shall be used for the purpose of increasing compensation.

That does not apply to increasing compensation where a promotion can be made legitimately.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. In a moment. For example, if a man goes into the service at $1,500 and there is a vacancy in a higher grade there is nothing to prevent the man in charge of the department from promoting him up to that higher salary; but it is not a $1,500 salary. It is a $1,740 salary that these men are getting. If you did not have this limitation in the law they would be paying them up to $2,500 and $3,000. And it would not be a question of merit. It would be a question of favoritism.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. The gentleman understands that before the collector could promote them it would be necessary that a recommendation be made, and that would have to be approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course I understand that, but just as soon as anybody with any influence wanted to get a deputy collector promoted, he would get the recommendation of the local collector to the Internal Revenue Commissioner, and from the Internal Revenue Commissioner to the Secretary of the Treasury, and they would act on the recommendation.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Under the system as provided now by this paragraph there are different salaries paid.

Mr. MADDEN. No.

Mr. DOWELL. Yes; and men doing the same character of work are being paid different salaries. The man taken in now is taken in at $1,500 salary. He is working side by side with a man who is receiving $2,000 salary. There is no provision here for equalizing those salaries. Consequently the very thing the gentleman desires to stop, namely, favoritism, is now being practiced all the time and can be because there is that difference.

Mr. MADDEN. No; there are certain grades through which men can be promoted when there are vacancies in a grade, but there are no men working side by side doing the same class of work and receiving different pay. The pay is $1,500 with a bonus of $240.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman certainly is mistaken. These men are not all drawing the same pay under this provision.

Mr. MADDEN. They are getting $1,500 and the $240 bonus.

Mr. DOWELL. Some of them are receiving more than that.

Mr. MADDEN. True, there are men in higher grades who have been longer in the service who may be getting more, and there is nothing in this act to prevent the promotion of a man from the lowest grade to the next grade. But there is a provision here to prevent the indiscriminate promotion of men regardless of the justification for the promotion, and that is why the provision is in the bill. I hope it will remain there.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. There is great variation in the salaries paid to State prohibition directors. In some States they get $4,000 and in others $3,000.

Mr. MADDEN. And in some $5,000.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. That is manifestly unfair.

Mr. MADDEN. Depending on the importance and volume of the work.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Even if the work increases, the salaries could not be increased under this provision.

Mr. MADDEN. You can not do it where there are 300,000 people in one State and there are 8,000,000 in another State.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Suppose the population is approximately the same and there is a difference in the salary of $1,000. The director in Idaho receives $3,000 while the director in Nevada, Wyoming, and Utah receives $3,500 and in Montana he receives $4,000 per annum.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I yield.

Mr. TILSON. Is there any objection to placing these employees under the classified civil service and let them be promoted as civil-service employees are promoted?

Mr. MADDEN. Not at all; no reason in the world, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. TILSON. Ought not that to be done?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. There will be pressure for their promotion and increase of compensation until you take it out of politics.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman what class of employees does this refer to. I want to say that I am in favor of this provision.

Mr. MADDEN. Internal-revenue collectors and all others under the Internal Revenue Department.

Mr. BUTLER. Classified employees?

Mr. MADDEN. All kinds.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand the salary is fixed according to the grade, and how can the administration official raise the salary of a man when he is graded and must act accordingly?

Mr. MADDEN. He can not as long as this provision remains in the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Well, how can he do it now?

Mr. MADDEN. If he has a lump-sum appropriation he can pay anybody what he wants to, and it is for the purpose of stopping them from doing that that this provision is put in the bill. It is in the interest of the taxpayers. I want to say that I have no places in any department of the Government, so I am not pressing for any increase in compensation.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. KETCHAM. Reserving the right to object, to what extent, by inserting material?

Mr. TINKHAM. By the insertion of material and also several remarks. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection.

Mr. DOWELL. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to refund money covered into the Treasury as internal-revenue collections under the provisions of the act approved May 27, 1908, $250,000.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to read a communication from E. C. Yellowley, chief general prohibition agent, dated April 13, 1922.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to the paragraph under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois). The Chair has not the benefit of what the gentleman is about to read, but the Chair will suggest to the gentleman that he may proceed in order.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, we are discussing a question on page 28, and the gentleman is about to discuss something entirely different.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent of the committee that the gentleman from Massachusetts may proceed for two minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts may proceed out of order for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TINKHAM. I will read the letter of Mr. E. C. Yellowley, chief general prohibition agent, as I understand, to all State directors or employing agencies of the Government, dated April 13, 1922, in relation to prohibition employees:

APRIL 13, 1922.

You will no doubt receive a large number of applications for positions, some of the applicants being qualified for the work, while others will not reach the educational qualifications or have the experience to make efficient officers.

Upon receiving applications it is suggested that you carefully review them, and if you find that a man is not qualified for the place that you settle the matter immediately by advising him to this effect. In such cases do not forward the applications to this office, as we are receiving them by the hundreds. If, however, a man who has the necessary experience and educational qualifications applies to you for a position it is desired that you make a thorough investigation as to his ability, character, etc., and suggest that he secure congressional indorsements, indorsements of the Anti-Saloon League, and other indorsements that he may be able to obtain to accompany his application, which should be executed in duplicate with photographs attached, and forward to this office with your report for consideration.

Even in such cases it is not desired that you give applicant too much encouragement or lead him to believe his application will be approved, for you well know that there are many delays in making appointments.

In the event that members of the Federal prohibition director's force apply to you to be transferred to the general agents' force it is desired that you make a general investigation as to their character, ability, efficiency, etc., and if you find that they would not make efficient and trustworthy officers for our force so advise the agent in order to eliminate correspondence with this office. If, on the other hand, you find that such agents have all of the qualifications necessary and are trustworthy and reliable suggest to the applicant that he secure a letter signed by his Federal prohibition director approving the transfer. Also have him execute Form 1401 in duplicate, with his photograph attached, and forward to this office with your report and recommendations.

I wish to impress upon you the importance of making the proper selection and recommendations for appointments to the position of general prohibition agent. It is desired that this force be kept up to the highest standard possible, and all appointees must have had at least a high-school education and considerable experience to qualify them for the position.

Very truly yours,

E. C. YELLOWLEY,
Chief, General Prohibition Agents.

(During the reading of the letter the following occurred:)

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, may I, with unanimous consent, be allowed to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the remainder of this letter?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the remainder of the letter. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. KETCHAM. I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

For refunding taxes illegally collected under the provisions of sections 3220 and 3689, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of February 24, 1919, including the payment of prior year claims, $12,000,000: Provided, That a report shall be made to Congress of the disbursements hereunder as required by the act of February 24, 1919.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I notice that in this paragraph there is appropriated $12,000,000 for refunding taxes illegally collected. What is the limitation of that provision, three years?

Mr. MADDEN. It is for any years that the taxes may have been illegally collected.

Mr. WATSON. There is a new ruling that where taxes are illegally collected the amount is deducted from the next tax. Why does it need this great amount of money?

Mr. MADDEN. They need a lot of money for these schedules where they have discovered an illegal collection of taxes.

Mr. WATSON. Do they deduct it from the next assessment of taxes?

Mr. MADDEN. Here is what they do: When they ascertain that a man has overpaid—this is a new innovation—they send a credit slip to the collector of the district in which the taxpayer resides. Then the collector must ascertain whether or not the taxpayer owes any taxes. If he owes any, instead of paying the taxpayer the cash they apply the credit to what he owes.

Mr. WATSON. That is for three years?

Mr. MADDEN. We have paid out $102,000,000 since 1917 on the overpaid tax schedules. There is now pending in the Appropriations Committee a recommendation for an appropriation of $42,000,000 more for this very same purpose. Now, let me say that every time we order the payment of a dollar on the overpaid schedules we collect $12 on the underpaid schedules. Of course nothing comes before the House to show what is collected on the underpaid schedules.

It shows only what we pay, because we must legislate in order to authorize the payments, and as a matter of fact we are not only paying on overpaid schedules but we are collecting on underpaid schedules. We are collecting about $300,000,000 a year on underpaid schedules and paying out perhaps $100,000,000, or will be in the next year, on overpaid schedules, so that we will have a net credit of $200,000,000 to the Treasury between the two proposals. This $12,000,000 does not mean much of anything. It simply means that we are providing for the payment to the extent that it will apply.

Mr. WATSON. Does the new ruling work out satisfactorily?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I shall take the floor in my own right.

Mr. BRIGGS. The gentleman from Illinois made mention of the fact that there is about $42,000,000 yet to be provided, for the return of overpaid taxes.

Mr. MADDEN. There is a recommendation before our committee for legislation to that effect.

Mr. BRIGGS. The gentleman's committee is expected to act upon that at an early date?

Mr. MADDEN. Some time between now and Christmas.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will that money when provided, if it should be recommended by the gentleman's committee, become immediately available for the payment of those sums?

Mr. MADDEN. It will.

Mr. HAWLEY. And what interest is allowed to those who have overpaid their taxes?

Mr. MADDEN. Six per cent from the date of the approval of the claims. We try to report the appropriations as rapidly as possible for these payments, because we do not want the Government to have to pay any interest, and we are also anxious to pay those to whom money is due.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay and allowances prescribed by law for commissioned officers, cadets and cadet engineers, warrant officers, petty officers, and other enlisted men, active and retired, temporary cooks and surfmen, substitute surfmen, and one civilian instructor, $8,300,000, of which $640,000 shall be immediately available, and not to exceed $397,000 of the amount appropriated for the fiscal year 1923 for "Rations, or commutation thereof," is hereby transferred and made immediately available for expenditures for "Pay and allowances."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to the fact that this paragraph contains an item making $640,000 of the appropriation proposed for 1924 available for expenditures during the present fiscal year of 1923. Yesterday I took occasion to call attention to what I believe to be a very bad practice into which the Bureau of the Budget is falling in recommending to Congress appropriations to be made immediately available. Gentlemen will recall that yesterday we passed a paragraph which made $200,000 in the customs service immediately available. That with this makes $840,000 which has been added to the appropriations for 1923; and I dare say that after this bill is passed, if any Member of Congress should undertake to go back and investigate in order to determine just how much has been appropriated for these two services for 1923 he would overlook these two items, certainly, unless he took the pains to go through every appropriation bill passed at this session.

This is not the only case in which the President and the Bureau of the Budget have made such a recommendation. As I said yesterday, the President has recommended—and I take it that the committee will so report—an item in the Department of the Interior bill making something over $20,000,000 immediately available in the Pension Bureau for expenditures during this year. Gentlemen will recall one of the reasons advanced for the passage of the Budget law was to prevent this practice. The practice had grown up during previous years in every appropriation bill of making funds appropriated for the succeeding fiscal year immediately available for expenses during the year in which those bills were passed. The result was that it was absolutely impossible for anyone, without an immense amount of work and without reading numerous appropriation bills, to ever satisfy himself as to just how much had been appropriated for different services in any particular fiscal year.

I had hoped that the Bureau of the Budget would not fall into that practice, and I had particularly hoped that the present very efficient Director of the Bureau of the Budget would realize what a bad practice it is to adopt that sort of thing, so severely condemned in the past, and that we should have a deficiency bill instead of the practice of making funds immediately available. This is nothing more nor less than a deficiency, and there is no reason why an estimate should not have been submitted to the Congress asking for a deficiency of $640,000 and have it appropriated in a deficiency bill, so that Members of Congress would know just what is being appropriated.

This paragraph appropriates $8,300,000 for this particular service of the Government during the fiscal year 1924. We must assume that the committee reported that sum because it thought that sum was necessary for the year 1924. If it is not necessary, then the committee ought to have reduced it; but we are here in the same paragraph taking from the sum of $8,300,000 which the committee says is necessary for 1924 the sum of $640,000 for use during this year. Then when we come to pass the appropriation bill for 1925 we will under this practice have to take care of this sum for 1924, and so on during the years following. The result will be that no one will ever be able to know just what is being appropriated for a particular service during any given year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think this is a very bad practice, and I have called attention to it in this public way so that it may be brought to the attention of the Director of the Budget with the hope that hereafter when he submits his estimates he will submit them for the purpose stated and will not ask Congress to make deficiency appropriations in this indirect and improper way.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. Are any of these amounts referred to due to legislation passed by the Congress subsequent to the enactment of the last appropriation bill, or are they deficiencies pure and simple?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This is for commissioned officers, and due to legislation, but I submit to the gentleman that that does not remove the objection that I make, because it would be a very proper item for a deficiency bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is the $20,000,000 item to which the gentleman has referred, to be asked for by the Interior Department, due to legislation passed since the last appropriation bill was enacted?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know whether legislation was passed since the last appropriation bill was passed or not, but whether it was or not there is no reason why it should not have been submitted in a regular way as a deficiency and presented to the Congress, so that the Members would know exactly what they were appropriating. When you hide items as they are hidden here in this paragraph and the one preceding, Members of Congress are unable to determine just what is being appropriated from year to year for particular services. That is the point of my objection.

Mr. THORPE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rebuilding and repairing stations and houses of refuge, temporary leases, rent, and improvements of property for Coast Guard purposes, including use of additional land where necessary, $250,000.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee, with reference to this Coast Guard appropriation, what consideration did the committee give to a further appropriation which may be made necessary by the bill which the House was considering the other day?

Mr. MADDEN. None at all.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Does the gentleman have any information as to whether any additional amount will be required?

Mr. MADDEN. I notice that the gentleman's committee chairman said that the cost of the bill would be $13,000. If that is what it amounts to we need not take it into consideration in this bill, because they will undoubtedly have unexpended balances here.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I notice that. Of course, I was not in harmony with the bill myself.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course we could not take that into account now. We do not take anything into account until it is submitted to us by the Budget Director.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. And up to this time the gentleman has no official notice that there will be a deficiency asked?

Mr. MADDEN. No.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make just a few remarks on the same subject as that upon which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] has spoken. It would seem to me that we ought to try in every way to simplify our appropriation laws. It has been one of the chief evils of rider legislation that all sorts of legislation when enacted must be looked for in all sorts of places; in other words, it adds greatly to the difficulty of locating the law. When it comes to appropriations it is equally an evil. We have deficiency appropriations passed every year, and the word "deficiency" does not mean necessarily that there has been a failure on the part of the Committee on Appropriations properly to estimate expenditures for that particular purpose for that year, but deficiency in a parliamentary sense means simply an appropriation to be expended during the current or a prior fiscal year. There is no discredit in bringing in a deficiency item, if legislation has been enacted during the current year which creates the deficiency. In such cases, of course, the Committee on Appropriations can have no possible knowledge as to what appropriation the legislation will call for.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. TILSON. I will yield.

Mr. BLANTON. But where it is known for months that there are deficiencies like the $24,000,000 for the pension department and the $42,000,000 for the internal revenue department that must be brought here right away in a deficiency bill, in commenting upon probable expenditures of the Government that should be properly taken into consideration.

Mr. TILSON. They will be in the end. I am speaking now only for a simplification of our appropriation acts. All such appropriations are eventually rounded up and brought together, but it entails a lot of work, and there is apt to be confusion in the minds of people in attempting to arrive at the aggregate of annual appropriations. In my judgment it ought not to be in order, if anyone makes the point of order against it, to make an appropriation immediately available. The subject of the appropriations in this bill, for instance, is "Appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924," and any appropriation for a different department or for any other period than the fiscal year 1924 should not be in order.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. The practice was, as I think my colleague will remember, that estimates would be brought in and denied in the amount which was asked, and then they proceeded on the basis as if they had gotten them, and when they had spent the amount of money they got, the deficiency would come in. Is that practice still continuing?

Mr. TILSON. I do not know how far that practice has been eradicated, but it ought to be, root and branch. I think we ought, in the interest of economy and good government, to confine appropriations in any particular bill to the particular objects and the particular period for which it purports to appropriate.

I think it was a great advance when we adopted the present scheme of appropriations by departments. I think it a very great advance, because the same department would come to a half dozen different appropriating committees and get a little or big appropriation, if they could, from each one, and no committee would know exactly what the other committee had done. I think that we should go one step further, so that no appropriation would be in order except for the fiscal year for which the bill purports to appropriate. The point of order would then lie if the appropriation is made immediately available. I hope that the Director of the Budget will take this view of it in presenting the Budget hereafter.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am very glad to have these gentlemen offer their criticisms. I feel exactly as they do about this proposition. Here we have two very important things that seem to be pressing that justified a departure from the ordinary practice. We had just passed the tariff act. They wanted money. They can not take the commodities off the docks and have them passed upon by the experts with their present force. It will take some time to pass a deficiency bill. It was thought that by making the money immediately available in this bill they would get the money a little sooner. Then came this other meritorious question of the Coast Guard, to whose membership everybody's heart goes out. An act was passed increasing their pay last June. They were not able, of course, to get that increased pay. They are all poor men and need the money, and yet we can not pass a deficiency bill for some time to come. I do not favor the practice and would not. I have refused, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to grant requests made for appropriations to be made immediately available in many other cases.

It may be that occasionally we will think that the justice of the case makes it of sufficient importance to act, but wherever it can be avoided it should be. Unless there is some great hardship caused by the delay, I intend to follow out the suggestion made by my friends here on the floor, because, after all, I recognize myself as a servant of the House, and I shall tell the Director of the Bureau of the Budget in the future that we do not want any recommendations of the sort that appears in this bill.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. You say the Coast Guard personnel would not receive the increase that was granted them by law?

Mr. MADDEN. They received the increase, but they did not get the money.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. It will be retroactive and go back?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; it will go back to the time it was authorized. We are now appropriating the money.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. They will get it absolutely? It will go back?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. There is no question about that. They will look after that.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I think, after the remarks of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], the parliamentary situation ought to be recited in the RECORD. The gentleman from Connecticut was instrumental in following at one time, when he was Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, a very noted decision made by Mr. Speaker Carlisle, who, as is known, was a distinguished parliamentarian, when he held that the membership of the House have the right, when they are called upon here in the committee to consider an appropriation bill, to depend upon the fact, first, that there is no matter of legislation in the bill, and, secondly, that there is no deficiency item in that bill. They have a right to depend upon that, and when the Committee on Appropriations brings in an appropriation bill, neither the chairman himself nor any member of it has any more right than anyone else to offer an amendment on the floor of an item that is either a deficiency or an item of legislation.

That was the ruling of Mr. Speaker Carlisle, and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], who is one of the greatest parliamentarians in the present House, followed the decision of Mr. Speaker Carlisle, and it remained the decision of this committee for many months and years, and only lately, since the reorganization scheme was adopted in regard to appropriation bills, has that ruling been changed. The question then came up while the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] was in the chair, and upon reviewing the question he overruled the decision of the gentleman from Connecticut, and held that inasmuch as under the reorganization of the Committee on Appropriations it has the general power to bring in all appropriation bills, it has the right to put a deficiency item upon an appropriation bill.

There is the parliamentary situation. I think we ought to go back to the decision of the gentleman from Connecticut and the decision of Mr. Speaker Carlisle on that proposition, because if we give this Committee on Appropriations, already having most of the powers of the House, the extra power of bringing in here on every single appropriation bill items of legislation or items involving a deficiency, we shall get into the confusion that has been referred to. There has not been a single appropriation bill brought in by this committee since that rule was changed that did not contain some item making appropriations immediately available; not in separate deficiency bills, where the membership can expect them, but on an appropriation bill; and I hope the committee will wake up some day and overrule the decision of the gentleman from Ohio and go back to the decision of the gentleman from Connecticut.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs to Coast Guard cutters, $375,000.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, how many cutters are there in the service?

Mr. MADDEN. Seventy-five vessels.

Mr. WATSON. Are they under the control of the Internal Revenue Bureau?

Mr. MADDEN. No; of the Coast Guard.

Mr. WATSON. Is this $375,000 appropriated to the Internal Revenue Bureau to take care of the Coast Guard?

Mr. MADDEN. This is not under the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Mr. WATSON. It is under the internal revenue section.

Mr. MADDEN. No; it is a new section.

Mr. WATSON. The internal revenue has nothing to do with it?

Mr. MADDEN. Not at all.

Mr. WATSON. Are not those vessels all very old?

Mr. MADDEN. Not at all. They have some very new vessels.

Mr. WATSON. The testimony before the committee some time ago was to the effect that they were old and unfit.

Mr. MADDEN. No. Some of the vessels are old. They used to go up to the Arctic regions. They are trying to rebuild them, but we did not authorize them to be rebuilt or repaired.

Mr. WATSON. They got some more recently?

Mr. MADDEN. They got some from the Shipping Board and repaired some old ones, and now all of them are in a good state of repair.

Mr. WATSON. What vessels are used to look after bootleggers on the high seas? Do these have that work to do?

Mr. MADDEN. This has nothing to do with that.

Mr. WATSON. What department looks after the bootlegging? I did not know but that the coast line vessels are also in that service.

Mr. MADDEN. That is all done by the Prohibition Enforcement Bureau.

Mr. WATSON. Where do they get the boats from?

Mr. MADDEN. They have boats of their own, or they may get the use of them from the customs service. They cooperate with the customs service. The customs service has boats in all the ports.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total Coast Guard, exclusive of commandant's office, $11,328,100.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, quite a number of gentlemen, some opposed and some in favor of the provision of the bill embraced in the item for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, wanted to go away this afternoon, some to hear Monsieur Clemenceau and some for other purposes. Before they left they asked me if I would try to get consent to pass over the item for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing until to-morrow. I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to do that and to proceed with the balance of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to pass over the Bureau of Engraving and Printing item, to be called up later, and proceed with the reading of the bill, beginning on page 35, Secret Service. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. From line 21, on page 31, to line 12, on page 35.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Will that come up to-morrow?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. It will not come up this evening?

Mr. MADDEN. No; to-morrow.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if it is his intention to bring this up immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow?

Mr. MADDEN. Immediately after the reading of the Journal, and I think it is only fair to say that if the Members want considerable time in which to discuss it I will have no objection to that.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes: For expenses incurred under the authority or with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury in detecting, arresting, and delivering into the custody of the United States marshal having jurisdiction dealers and pretended dealers in counterfeit money and persons engaged in counterfeiting, forging, and altering United States notes, bonds, national-bank notes, Federal reserve notes, Federal reserve bank notes, and other obligations and securities of the United States and of foreign Governments, as well as the coins of the United States and of foreign Governments, and other crimes against the laws of the United States relating to the Treasury Department and the several branches of the public service under its control; hire and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles when necessary; per diem in lieu of subsistence, when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, and for no other purpose whatever, except in the protection of the person of the President and the members of his immediate family and of the person chosen to be President of the United States, $415,000: Provided, That no part of this amount be used in defraying the expenses of any person subpœnaed by the United States courts to attend any trial before a United States court or preliminary examination before any United States commissioner, which expenses shall be paid from the appropriation for "Fees of witnesses, United States courts": Provided further, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a compensation greater than that allowed by law, except not exceeding three persons, who may be paid not exceeding $12 per day.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee concerning this appropriation of $415,000 for the Secret Service. How does that sum compare with the appropriations for that service for the last five years?

Mr. MADDEN. I think it is about $10,000 one way or the other, either $10,000 under or $10,000 over the last appropriation.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I have seen statements made that it is a considerably larger amount than was appropriated formerly.

Mr. MADDEN. For 1922 we had $400,000 and for 1923 $390,000.

Mr KELLY of Pennsylvania. But go back to 1917.

Mr. MADDEN. In 1917 it was $200,000; in 1918, $275,000; in 1919, $300,000; in 1920, $325,000; in 1921, $400,000, and so on.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. In 1917 it was $200,000. Here is an increase since that time of $215,000. There are various published reasons for that great growth. One is that which was called to the attention of the American Bankers' Association, a convention of 11,000 bankers meeting in October, that the increase in counterfeiting is due to poorer materials and workmanship in turning out securities, notes, bills, and so forth. The bankers' convention, as I understand it, went on record asking Congress to order a return to the methods of manufacture in use prior to 1917. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether in his estimation that resolution was justified?

Mr. MADDEN. Before the war all the paper money used in the United States was made from linen. During the war we had to go to all cotton. Of course, cotton does not make very good paper money. After the war we were able, first, to go to 25 per cent linen and 75 per cent cotton; then last year we went to 50 per cent linen and 50 per cent cotton. This year we are getting 75 per cent linen and 25 per cent cotton, and next year they hope to go back to all linen. They used cotton because they could not get the linen. Now, if there were any defects it was due to the kind of material of which the paper was made. That is what they tell us. The information which I have received from experts is that the quality of the printing depends mostly on the quality of the engraving of the plate. If the engraving is poor, of course the printing will be poor. If they have a high-class printer he can make a better job of printing from a poor plate than a poor printer would, but as a rule where there is defective printing it is due to the imperfect plates.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Then, in the gentleman's opinion, this $215,000 increase in the appropriation is due to defects in the material?

Mr. MADDEN. No. The gentleman is referring now to counterfeiting?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I am referring to the money spent for detecting counterfeiting.

Mr. MADDEN. I will say that the great amount of counterfeiting that has taken place is not due to defective printing but is due to the greater perfection of the art of photography than has heretofore existed. They say there is no danger whatever of counterfeiting the money made on any of these plates as far as defects in the printing is concerned, but it is because of the development in the art of photography that counterfeiting has become more prevalent than it was in the past.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This increase of $215,000 to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania refers is not made solely on account of the increase in counterfeiting?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, no.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is made on account of the increased duties of the Secret Service. They have many other duties besides the enforcement of the law against counterfeiting.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I understood that a great part of it was due to the increase in counterfeiting.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I dare say some of it was due to that; but not all of it by any means.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I should like to have one minute more in order to answer more fully the questions asked by the gentleman. We had Mr. Moran, Chief of the Secret Service, before our committee, and in the course of his examination Mr. MAGEE asked him this question:

What I had in mind was that ordinarily a man who counterfeits is skillful in the work and he imposes on some innocent person for value received, while in this case, of course, he passes counterfeit money to a violator of the law.

We were talking about prohibition. Mr. Moran made this answer:

With reference to the skillfulness a large percentage of the counterfeit issues of to-day are clearly the work of amateurs. They are not to be compared with the output of the old counterfeiter who hand engraved. The grade is very much cheapened. To-day they do not resort to the old hand-engraved work. You do not find in circulation to-day a hand-engraved piece of work. It is all of the mechanical process.

Mr. MAGEE. And they are counterfeit notes which are more easily detected?

Mr. MORAN. They should be; but for some reason they obtain a ready circulation. I have stated there were two reasons for it, ignorance and carelessness. That practically sums it up.

It is not the engraving which causes the increase in counterfeiting, but the greater perfection in the art of photography.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Of course, thousands of innocent persons are being victimized, and should be protected if we can do it.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; but the plate printing has nothing to do with it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. Since the chairman of the committee made his speech yesterday and called attention to the fact, just as he has done now, that counterfeiting does not follow the use of the power presses, and that as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations he and his committee were going to put the public interest above the interest of any organization employed in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and preluding the President's speech of this morning when he said the same thing, that he was going to put the interest of the public above the interest of any particular organization, we find in to-day's press the following:

ZIHLMAN TO FIGHT ENGRAVING CHANGE—CHAIRMAN OF LABOR COMMITTEE TO OPPOSE SUBSTITUTING POWER FOR HAND PRESSES—PRINTERS ATTACK PROPOSAL—DECLARE TREASURY PLAN WOULD TEND TO INCREASE THE POSSIBILITIES OF COUNTERFEITING.

[Washington Post, Friday, December 8, 1922.]

Lines were drawn for a battle in the House over the provision of the Treasury Department appropriation bill which proposes to substitute power presses for hand presses in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, thereby reducing the plate printing force by 220 workers.

Andrew J. Fallon, president of the plate printers union, and Frank J. Coleman, editor of the Plate Printer, were at the Capitol yesterday urging Members to have the controverted provision referred to the Committee on Printing, so that public hearings may be held.

Then they go on to say the question of preventing counterfeiting and economy is why they want this matter changed. We are not going to be able to escape the real question to-morrow morning when this matter comes up. The paper says that they have our friend from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] prepared to make a point of order against the provision. I do not blame the gentleman from Maryland; he represents their interests. He is their spokesman, carrying out their ideas in asking that this be stricken from the bill. I do not blame him at all. He is doing what they and some of his constituents expect of him.

But I want to say that you can not do it on account of economy. You can not do it on the assertion that it is going to produce more counterfeiting, because the chairman has exploded that idea. He showed yesterday and in his remarks a few minutes ago that Chief Moran, of the Secret Service, and others testified before the committee that the use of power presses could have no effect whatever on the question of counterfeiting. So if we take that action of continuing the use of hand instead of power presses as the representative of these two unions employed in the Bureau of Printing and Engraving have desired, if we do it in accordance with their desire to strike this section out of the bill we are not only making it cost the people of the United States $750,000 more, and ultimately $1,377,000 more annually, as testified before the committee, but we will be doing it simply on the demands of the union as against the interest of the people.

I am a loyal Democrat, I am a partisan Democrat, but I am with the Republican President of the United States in what he said this morning as to the interest of the whole people being paramount to that of any class. These little union bodies down in the bureau have dictated to Congress long enough, and the membership of this Congress ought to rise up and follow the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] and his committee in adopting the provision in this bill. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For medical examinations, including the amount necessary for the medical inspection of aliens, as required by section 16 of the act of February 5, 1917, medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for beneficiaries (other than patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau) of the Public Health Service, and persons detained under the immigration laws and regulations at Ellis Island Immigration Station, including necessary personnel, regular and reserve commissioned officers of the Public Health Service, personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, maintenance, minor repairs, equipment, leases, fuel, lights, water, freight, transportation and travel, maintenance and operation of motor trucks and passenger motor vehicles, transportation, care, maintenance, and treatment of lepers, court costs, and other expenses incident to proceedings heretofore or hereafter taken for commitment of mentally incompetent persons to hospitals for the care and treatment of the insane, and reasonable burial expenses (not exceeding $100 for any patient dying in hospital), $4,869,925: Provided, That the Immigration Service shall permit the Public Health Service to use the hospitals at Ellis Island Immigration Station for the care of Public Health Service patients, free of expense for physical upkeep, but with a charge of actual cost for fuel, light, water, telephone, and similar supplies and services, to be covered into the proper Immigration Service appropriations; and moneys collected by the Immigration Service on account of hospital expenses of persons detained under the immigration laws and regulations at Ellis Island Immigration Station shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts: Provided further, That no part of this sum shall be used for the quarantine service, the prevention of epidemics, or scientific work of the character provided for under the appropriations which follow.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois about this new language, the proviso beginning at line 23 at the bottom of page 38. Will the gentleman explain what the reason is for this legislation?

Mr. MADDEN. We carried this provision in the deficiency bill for 1923, and we did that because when the Veterans' Bureau was transferred to the Public Health Service—that is, the hospital that had been conducted by the Veterans' Bureau—under the order of the President there was a question whether the Public Health Service could use the hospital on Ellis Island. We had then reached the point where we had to decide the question, because by the end of June the Public Health Service would have the responsibility of doing something and they would have no place in which to do it. That is all this does, it gives them the right to use the hospital. They have been doing it all the time. The comptroller decided that they had no right to do it under the law, and we corrected the decision of the comptroller by giving them the right under the law.

Mr. TILSON. Does not the gentleman think it ought to be permanent law?

Mr. MADDEN. Well, it will be permanent law.

Mr. TILSON. I do not so read it here.

Mr. MADDEN. We did not put such a provision in the bill because we had no authority to do so.

Mr. TILSON. It would be all right unless some one made the point of order against it.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, we can try that next year.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation.

ELLIS ISLAND.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, press reports from London carry the story that Roland McNeill, undersecretary of foreign affairs, on Wednesday of this week in the House of Commons protested against the treatment of English immigrants at Ellis Island. The statement, in part, reads:

McNeill said conditions there were evidently adapted for persons of a very low standard of living.

Mr. McNeill's chief objection, as I read from the press reports, was based on the fact that the United States Government fails to furnish English immigrants with "separate rooms and bath." It would be well for Mr. McNeill to study with purpose of improvement their own immigrant hotels.

I know that the immigrant station at Ellis Island is ideal in location and general arrangements and sanitation and for its solicitation of the welfare of immigrants.

It might also be well for Mr. McNeill and Great Britain, in their solicitude for their subjects, to see whether or not the British steamship companies separate the British subjects from other foreigners on their way over; whether or not, as is commonly being reported, steamship companies are selling first and second class tickets to immigrants and bringing them over third class. There seems to be no protest of McNeill against these practices, and yet relatives of immigrants complain of this state of affairs.

I can not understand how these particular people can travel from 7 to 14 days in steerage accommodations on the steamships, and do so willingly, and then suddenly develop the most acute culture and sensibilities as soon as the Statue of Liberty comes in view; how they will travel across the ocean with foreigners of all nations and develop the greatest hostility to them on Ellis Island; how they accept the table accommodations and food on the steamship, but object as soon as they enter the well-ventilated, sanitary, and clean dining room at Ellis Island; how they obey willingly the orders shouted at and to them by steamship employees and as soon as they step their foot on Ellis Island become exponents of freedom and resent America's right to make laws for herself and for the protection of American citizens; how, finding the economic conditions so unfavorable in their own country, particularly the million or more unemployed in Great Britain, that they are willing to sell all they possess and come to America and seek to take advantage of our free education, the opportunity to escape class distinction, and immediately, even before permitted to enter this country, begin to abuse it by claiming rights superior to the nationals of other countries.

Congress passed laws to permit them at Ellis Island to apply for admission. The right of admission is determined by showing proper qualifications at Ellis Island, and these qualifications must be determined from an American, not an English, standpoint. Their admissibility should be solved for the benefit of America, not for Europe, or for the foreigners who flock here and whose coming will eventually result in forming, to a great extent, America's policies. The immigration problem is one of the first problems of America.

The effectiveness of the work at Ellis Island is one of the chief factors in determining our country's future. The admission of mentally, morally, or physically unfit into this country, even in small numbers, would, in the future, weaken our Nation and place a huge burden upon generations to come. Millions of dollars each year must now be raised by the various States for the maintenance of foreigners heretofore admitted and now confined in State institutions. The United States must of necessity have a force of intelligent, well-paid, efficient employees at Ellis Island.

I was privileged to visit Ellis Island last week and study the conditions there. Am proud to report that the commissioner of immigration there is Robert E. Tod, who was persuaded through patriotism to accept that position. He is a college graduate, a retired business man. He was enrolled in the United States Navy in March, 1917, and has a war record of which he can be justly proud. He was first appointed naval port officer of Brest, France, and later appointed public works officer for the Navy for the whole of France, and for his service during the war was recommended by General Harries and awarded the Army distinguished-service medal. Mr. Tod received a citation signed by General Pershing for his services to the Army.

Admiral Wilson recommended him for the Navy distinguished-service medal and he was awarded the Navy cross.

Mr. Tod also received the chevalier of the Legion of Honor from the French Government, and also the officier of the Legion of Honor from the French ambassador in Washington. He held the rank of commander on being retired to inactive duty.

I mention this to show the class of man who now is commissioner of Ellis Island. The same spirit of patriotism that caused Mr. Tod to join the Navy during the war also induced him to accept the present position he now holds. Upon accepting the appointment, at his own expense, he went abroad and studied the immigration conditions in Europe, and from investigation I made at Ellis Island I find there is no one devoting so much work and effort for the good of the service at Ellis Island. His assistant, Mr. Landis, is a highly qualified and capable man.

The Public Health Service at Ellis Island is represented by Dr. William C. Billings, who has served for about 25 years as a commissioned officer in the Public Health Service and now holds the rank of major. Assisting him is Doctor Corput, also an experienced physician and surgeon, who has charge of line inspection. The Public Health Service maintains one of the largest and best-equipped hospitals for the benefit of the immigrants and for the protection of the American people at Ellis Island. The hospital is well equipped, maintaining a high standard of professional care and treatment.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CABLE. I will yield.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that the accommodations for immigrants at Ellis Island are first class?

Mr. CABLE. Ellis Island, so far as I have ascertained, is the best equipped of any immigration station in the world. Great Britain would do well to use it as a model.

Two steamships came into port at 12.01 the morning of December 1 in order to have their passengers come within the December quota. I was on the island that day. The immigrants were loaded onto barges and transferred to Ellis Island. Here they receive their physical and mental examination through the officials of the Public Health Service and the immigration department. I might add that these officials are all loyal, serving at too low a compensation, but have the interest of the work and of the American people at heart.

Am glad to report that because of the 3 per cent law a more effective and careful examination of these immigrants is now made. Prior to the war their admission to the United States in some years averaged 100,000 a month. The examination was chiefly that of line inspection by the Public Health Service. If the appearance of the immigrant was good, he was given but little further examination. However, the Public Health Service now makes a separate and careful examination of the immigrants seeking admission because the number coming to the island each month is greatly reduced. If the immigrant passed the physical examination, the literacy test, and other requirements, and comes within the quota, he is permitted to land. On the other hand, if the immigrant is held for further examination every facility possible is offered him. For example, there are 17 different organizations represented on Ellis Island, with offices in the buildings there, that look after his needs. Many of the racial groups are represented by individual societies, such as the Italians, Irish, and Hebrew; and by societies representing no racial group, as the National Welfare Catholic Council, which represents the Catholics of every race; the Y. M. C. A.; the Y. W. C. A.; the W. C. T. U.; the Presbyterian Board of Missions; the Congregational Board; the city missions; Bible societies; D. A. R.; and others. These organizations are doing splendid work and the spirit of their cooperation was manifest.

If an immigrant appears to be "clearly and beyond doubt" entitled to admission he passes over to the discharging quarters, where he is turned over to the agent of the authorized transport company or recognized representative. If, on the other hand, the alien does not appear to be clearly entitled to be admitted, he must appear before one of the several boards of special inquiry, which goes into his case deliberately and thoroughly, giving him the right to appear and produce witnesses and testimony in his behalf. If the board of special inquiry holds against him, he then has the right of appeal from the decision of the board, in cases provided by the statute, to the Secretary of Labor, whose decision is final.

America to-day is no longer the melting pot of the world. In the earlier history of our country people of northern Europe came here because there was free land and homesteads upon which they could settle and remain as citizens of this country. Gradually, as this free land became exhausted, the class of immigration changed, larger numbers coming from southern Europe, congregating in the large cities and where the population was dense. They did not forget their old customs or language or their country itself. Of the 14,000,000 foreign born in the United States less than half are now American citizens. Seven hundred newspapers and magazines are to-day printed in foreign languages and being read by hundreds of thousands of these people. What America needs to-day is not additional immigration so much as that those who are now here, being protected by our laws and obtaining the privileges and benefits of our country, should themselves become American citizens.

Immigration to the United States should not be based upon numbers, but rather quality—and quality can not be determined entirely by the 3 per cent restrictive immigration law. The law permits a more thorough examination of those within the quota, however. The quality of the immigrant can best be determined by the intelligence test, now applied by the Public Health Service at Ellis Island in a limited number of cases. This test is not a theory; neither is it a new proposition. It was used by our Army in the recent war. Robert M. Yerkes, lieutenant colonel, United States Army, and one of the world's foremost psychologists, had charge of these examinations. They were given to our soldiers to determine their qualifications for various duties during the World War. The results were accurate and in agreement with the experiences of the officers. Thus the men were placed in positions where they were best qualified to serve. The tests were given to the soldiers in groups and consumed not to exceed an hour or two of time. The commanding officers were given the results, which would have taken six months to learn in ordinary routine of drills. So also by these intelligence tests were the officers selected from the various training camps of our country. The intelligence rating was useful in indicating the man's probable value in the service, and the records of many of these soldiers and officers during the war substantiate the accuracy of the tests.

If the intelligence test could be applied to all foreign born, either abroad or when they reach this country, the undesirable would not be able to pass our inspectors and could be detected and debarred. If these tests were made in the Army with results that were confirmed by actual record, why, with restricted immigration, can not these tests be applied to those who seek to enter this country? A broad line of demarcation could be established between those who should be debarred and those who should be admitted to this country. It is my firm belief that such intelligence tests will provide the only remedy toward the elimination of the criminal and the undesirable from the ranks of the immigrants seeking admission into the United States, and that it is the true rule of determining what additional immigrants should come here.

The immigration problem is one of vital interest to the American people. The United States stands for what, in its judgment, is the highest and best civilization in the world. Surely the United States Congress, rather than the British Parliament, has the right to determine who shall be admitted and the method and manner of such admissions to our country.

The Clerk read as follows:

Field investigations: For investigations of diseases of man and conditions influencing the propagation and spread thereof, including sanitation and sewage, and the pollution of navigable streams and lakes of the United States, including personal service, $279,480.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question with respect to the pollution of waters. There has been a great deal of pollution of the waters in my district from ships that are carrying oil either as cargo or as fuel, and also because of the cleaning out of their engine rooms. Does the appropriation here include investigation of that sort of pollution of waters, or does it apply only to the pollution due to sewage and matters directly pertaining to the public health?

Mr. MADDEN. This applies to all waters used for human purposes. It applies to waters used on trains and to waters in rivers that may be polluted by sewage where the public health may be affected.

Mr. HICKS. I do not know whether or not the dumping of oil into a navigable stream would be considered detrimental to health, but it is detrimental to property. Does this investigation apply only to matters appertaining to health?

Mr. MADDEN. To health only, and the question about which the gentleman speaks is under consideration by the Engineer Corps of the Army.

Mr. HICKS. And entirely separate from this bill?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rural sanitation: For special studies of and demonstration work in rural sanitation, including personal services, and including not to exceed $5,000 for the purchase, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, $50,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for demonstration work in rural sanitation in any community unless the State, county, or municipality in which the community is located agrees to pay one-half the expenses of such demonstration work.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

Amendment offered by Mr. ROACH: Page 40, line 21, after the word "vehicles," strike out "$50,000" and insert "$100,000."

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I invite the attention of the committee to the importance of rural sanitation, where it has been carried on under the appropriations heretofore made, and to express my belief that the appropriation carried in this bill is wholly inadequate to successfully carry on the splendid work which has been done during the past several years under this heading. Is it not true that the Department of Health and the Treasury Department concurred in the recommendation for this item of $150,000, I will ask the chairman of the committee?

Mr. MADDEN. The Budget recommended $50,000 to the committee.

Mr. ROACH. I am not asking about the Budget.

Mr. MADDEN. We do not know about anything except that which comes to us.

Mr. ROACH. It has been my information, since the chairman of the committee does not seem inclined to answer the question——

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, no; I want to answer the question. I simply say that we do not know anything about anything except that which comes to us.

Mr. ROACH. It is my information that the Health and the Treasury Departments have agreed on the recommendation of $150,000 for carrying on the rural sanitation work; that they conceived that to be the irreducible minimum to effectively and successfully carry on the work under way, and that estimate has been reduced by the Budget to the amount carried in this bill of $50,000. I invite the attention of the committee to the fact that in a large number of States this work has been economically and satisfactorily carried on. It will be observed that this bill has a limitation that the appropriation is available only to States which match it with a similar appropriation. I want to refer particularly to my own State of Missouri. The State legislature and the municipalities, together with other ways of raising revenue, not only matched the appropriation last year but cooperated on an average of 10 to 1 or more. Calling attention to the specific figures, the Federal appropriation for the State of Missouri was $7,245, while we raised $16,301.31, and I believe if gentlemen will refer to the table summitted by the Health Department, on page 426 of the hearings, they will find that their States generally averaged about the same. In the limited time I have, I have not time to discuss the value of this work, but I want to emphasize it and express the hope that the many States now engaged in this particular work, taking the benefits of this Federal appropriation, will assist in raising this appropriation up to the irreducible minimum called for by the Health Department. My amendment proposes to increase the amount to $100,000. I appreciate that there are some reductions being made in this bill, but I am not willing to have it all taken off the rural sanitation appropriation.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH] is a very attractive talker, and I am sure that he is very deeply interested in the subject of rural sanitation. I think his State displayed a very great deal of activity, and certainly a lot of influence, if it succeeded in getting seven thousand and odd dollars out of the $50,000 appropriated for rural sanitation last year.

Mr. ROACH. But that is less than the amount that a number of States obtained; for instance, Illinois, the gentleman's own State.

Mr. MADDEN. You could not get very much out of $50,000. That is all there was for the whole country, and this appropriation is not made to be allotted to the States, and it is not allotted to the States. The limitation placed on the appropriation is to the effect that the demonstration work made by the Public Health Service in any particular case shall not be made except where the community pays half the expense of the demonstration. There is no allotment. It has never been intended that the Public Health Service should do all of this rural sanitation work, because that is a local function. What the Health Service does is, as far as it can, to educate by circular, demonstration, and in other ways the local communities as to what is best to be done. Let me give an example. In Virginia not long since in one of the counties where the sanitation was not very good there was a good deal of typhoid. One of the young doctors of the department went down there and met the people in the township where the typhoid existed. He delivered a lecture and they were very much pleased with the lecture. He then told the people of the community that he was going before the board of supervisors to ask them to make an appropriation to cover the needs of the community, and asked them to appear there on that day. He made his speech before the board of supervisors and thought he had convinced them.

The people who came from the district where he had made the speech two or three nights before antagonized the work that the Public Health Service man was proposing, because they said they did not want these dudes coming down from the Public Health Service telling them how they should spend their money. After the meeting was all over he persuaded them to have another meeting with him and let him make a few demonstrations. They held the meeting and he proved to them what could be done, and at the end of the year he was able, through their own efforts under his direction, to almost eradicate the typhoid. But there was not any money of any consequence spent out of the Federal Treasury for that purpose. That was spent by the local community. The $50,000 is all the money we need for the kind of work to be done in respect to rural sanitation through the Public Health Service. The Public Health Service is not proposing to spend the money for sanitation. They are really writing circulars in most cases and delivering lectures in others.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I am not advised as to the particular kind of work done by the Public Health Service under this appropriation, but it strikes me that there must be duplication along these lines and similar lines.

For many years there have been appropriations carried in agricultural bills to enable the officers and employees of the Department of Agriculture to advise and suggest along these very lines.

Mr. MADDEN. These, of course, are scientific—that is, they are doctors—and they know a little more about certain things on certain lines.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It is supposed men who go out from any department are competent to speak of the work they are sent out to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I hope that members of the committee who are present will give their serious and favorable consideration to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri to increase this appropriation from $50,000 to $100,000. I happen to be in a position where I can testify to the invaluable services which are being rendered to the rural populations of the country by the activities of this rural sanitation division of the Public Health Service. I represent, I believe, a rather typical agricultural country in the South, with a number of mining communities that have no adequate health facilities, and a few years ago in the operation of these activities the department sent a number of its staff down there, some three or four physicians, experts on sanitation, and they made a thorough and complete survey of the entire county in which I reside. The mortality of that county, on account of the ravages of typhoid fever and other preventable diseases, had been very heavy. After this survey and actual consideration by these representatives of the rural sanitation division the mortality from these same complaints the succeeding year after their visit was reduced to a negligible ratio. And we, of course, naturally attributed that fine result purely and solely to the activities of those representatives. It is a rather amazing thing to me that we will sit here and deliberately vote millions and tens of millions and hundreds of millions of dollars for purposes of destruction in certain events for our Army and Navy, but when it comes to the question of undertaking to conserve the lives of the people of America, especially those who need it most—those sections where they are deprived of the benefits of active medical societies and eleemosynary institutions for the prevention of those diseases—that we cut the appropriation to the very lowest minimum.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Why are the people in those communities depriving themselves of this kind of service? Do they have no interest in regard to the appropriation of money to look after their own people?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, I know that is an old argument of the gentleman from Michigan; but I tell him that the purpose for which this service is established, as justified by the suggestion of the distinguished chairman of the committee, is not to undertake the performance of a purely local function in relation to the conservation of health, but that the Federal Government should occupy the position of stimulation and leadership as far as possible with a reasonable degree of expenditure, not only by literature and lectures but by the personal visitation of these experts themselves, and that is where the actual benefit comes in. The gentleman talks about why should the Government take charge of these activities, and he is a member of the Committee on Agriculture. Why is it we appropriate money for farm demonstration work? That is on a parity with this same proposition.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman make that statement on the theory that this is a cut?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do it on the theory that you have not given these people as much money as they need.

Mr. MADDEN. All they asked.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, no; you have not. That is where the distinguished gentleman is in error. He gives what the Budget said they ought to have; that is all.

Mr. MADDEN. We had these very people before us.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman assert that the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service and the Chief of the Bureau of Rural Sanitation have only recommended an appropriation of $50,000?

Mr. MADDEN. They have not asked us for any more.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Did you have a hearing, and did they appear?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is not my information. My information is that in their report made to the Director of the Budget—the information which comes to me and what I rely upon is from an absolutely and entirely reliable source—they say they ought to have at least $200,000 as a minimum.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman believe in giving every bureau just exactly what they ask?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not, and I have voted consistently to slash a great many appropriations, but I am very confident that this one ought to be increased.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BANKHEAD) there were—ayes 12, noes 22.

So the amendment was rejected.

For incidental and contingent expenses, $1,000.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WILLIAMSON: Page 45, after line 2, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

DEADWOOD, S. DAK., ASSAY OFFICE.

Salaries: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $1,800; assistant assayer, $1,200; in all, $3,000.
For wages of workmen and other employees, $1,000.
For incidental expenses, $300.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 10 minutes if necessary. I think I can finish in less time than that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I am inclined to think that the Deadwood assay office was left out of the Treasury appropriation bill now under consideration by the Appropriations Committee by reason of their not realizing fully the importance of maintaining this office. I observe from the hearings in connection with the Deadwood assay office that the only testimony with reference to whether it should or should not be retained is that offered by Miss O'Reilly, who, I understand, is an employee in the office of the Director of the Mint, in which she testified that only 10 deposits had been made during the past year in the Deadwood office. The truth of the matter is that this has very little to do with the question of whether an office should or should not be retained. The value of the office is to be measured by the services which it renders to the community in which it is located.

The Black Hills section is one of the richest mining regions in the United States, the production of gold alone during the past 20 years averaging close to $7,000,000 annually. The production of silver, while not large, amounts on an average to at least $100,000 a year. Various other metals and ores are also mined in the hills. There are a good many prospectors and small mining companies to whom the assay office is very essential in order to permit them to conduct their operations in any satisfactory manner. The prospectors can ill afford to send their samples away for assaying, and to discontinue this office is to discourage the revival of mining, which is now taking place in the Black Hills.

The income of the office, while not large, is greater than that of a number of the offices which are being retained in the bill, so there is no justification on that score for discontinuing the office. The value and utility of the office should be measured primarily by the number of assays made during the year, which, in the case of the Deadwood office for the year 1922, was 1,194 for the precious metals and 136 for the base metals, making a total of 1,330.

As the Members of the House know, the Black Hills region in South Dakota is one of the most important mining regions in the United States. The bullion produced within 6 miles of the Deadwood office amounts to around $8,000,000 annually. It is the only commercial assay office in that territory, and if it is discontinued prospectors will have to send their ores to Denver, Colo., many hundred miles away, causing great inconvenience, expense, and delay.

For the information of the membership permit me to read a telegram, under date of December 6, which was sent to me by the assayer in charge in response to an inquiry which I made for data:

DEADWOOD, S. DAK., December 6, 1922.

Hon. WILLIAM WILLIAMSON,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.:

Bullion valued at $8,000,000 originating within 6 miles of this office is diverted by operation of Pittman Act. No commercial assay office nearer than Denver serving this territory if Deadwood office is closed. Deadwood office made during fiscal year 1922, 1,194 precious-metal and 136 base-metal assays. Mining industry here hard hit by present high cost of supplies, but one new property now started operating and two buildings insure double activity. While office does not directly show profit, it is big advantage to community at large. Appropriation less than for current year would be inadequate.

H. H. STEWART, Assayer in Charge.

The importance of the Deadwood assay office is not necessarily determined by the number of deposits received. At this office, according to the testimony, there were only 10 deposits of bullion made during the year 1922. If correct, this, of course, is a small number, but the fact of the matter is that the Pittman Act has diverted the silver and other bullion to the mints at Denver, New York, and elsewhere by reason of the fact that the local office can only pay the market price for silver, which at the present time is only 65 cents on the dollar, while the mints are authorized to pay $1 an ounce for the silver.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes.

Mr. RHODES. The gentleman has made reference to the Pittman Act as affecting this office.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes.

Mr. RHODES. I desire to ask the gentleman whether or not it is a fact that the Pittman Act will expire in the near future by reason of its own provisions?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes. I called up the Director of the Mint this morning and he said that the act would expire by virtue of its own provisions in about 15 months, perhaps less. By the end of that time, at the present rate of purchase, all the silver bullion permissible under its terms will have been bought.

Mr. RHODES. Well, if that is true, then will the amount of work to be done by this office be necessarily increased or diminished?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. There is not any question but that it will be greatly increased, as it will then resume the purchase of silver upon the same terms as the mints. Being more accessible, the smaller operators will naturally patronize it.

Another thing to which I want to direct the attention of the House is the fact that there has been a considerable revival of mining activities in that region in the past year, and it is stated by those who are in position to know that the work of this office will be at least doubled during the next fiscal year. I think that in fairness to that district and for the encouragement of mining this office ought to be maintained.

Let me read another telegram here, from the Gold Feather Mining Co., which I received on November 7. It says:

DEADWOOD, S. DAK., December 7, 1922.

Representative WM. WILLIAMSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

We have invested a large amount of money in mine, and need mill in the Black Hills, which we are operating. It would work hardship on us and other mining companies to have the United States assay office abolished as it is the only assay office in this part of the country.

GOLD FEATHER MINING CO.

I have the same sort of a telegram, somewhat longer, from the Cutting Mining Co., which is as follows:

DEADWOOD, S. DAK., December 6, 1922.

Hon. WILLIAM WILLIAMSON,
Member of Congress, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.:

Mining industry, which is again coming to front, needs the Deadwood assay office. No commercial assay office closer than Denver. New mining companies now starting will increase business of this office several times. Closing of the office would be a severe blow to the mining industry, which has been so hard hit during the past few years and now just getting back on its feet. Our company now building oil flotation mill on property adjoining Homestake mine and on which we have spent $175,000.

CUTTING MINING CO.,
BURT ROGERS,
General Manager.

Other telegrams received read as follows:

DEADWOOD, S. DAK., December 6, 1922.

Hon. WILLIAM WILLIAMSON,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.:

It is felt in view of the fact that mining activities are reviving in this section the Deadwood assay office should be retained. To close it at this time would be discouraging to the revival of the mining industry.

DEADWOOD BUSINESS CLUB.

DEADWOOD, S. DAK., December 6, 1922.

Hon. WILLIAM WILLIAMSON,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

Strongly urge Deadwood assay office be retained. Is only commercial assay office nearer than Denver. Its loss would work hardship properties now operating and new ones starting. Estimated next year's business double this. While Deadwood office may show loss, this more than offset by benefit to mining industry, which bound to come back again here if every encouragement given.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK.

I hope the chairman will not oppose the reinstatement of this appropriation in the appropriation bill this year.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, Mr. Chairman, the action of the Committee on Appropriations in recommending the elimination of this office was based on the statement of the Director of the Mint. It was said that there were only 10 deposits in this assay office; that the value of the gold and silver was only $3,286; the income of the office was only $566, and the expenses $5,557.

Now, of course, $8,000,000 of the silver bullion from the Homestead mine goes to other places, on account of the price of silver, under the Pittman Act. The Pittman Act expires, however, in about another year.

I asked the representative of the mint who appeared before the committee if there was any likelihood of any improvement in the value of the office, and she said "No." I asked if she thought the office ought to be abolished, and she said the Secretary of the Treasury recommended that. I asked her if she thought there was any sense in keeping the office open, and she said she did not want to say that. I said, "Put it any way you like," and she finally said, "I think the business of the Deadwood office has diminished considerably." Then I said, "You know that, do you not? Do you recommend the continuation of the office in the face of the fact that there were only 10 deposits? I realise that you do not control the policy, but your judgment is good." She said, "I would recommend the closing of the office, but I think I am in a rather awkward position in recommending the closing of the office." I said, "If this is closed up, where would these deposits go?" She said, "They would probably be diverted to Denver or New York." Then I asked her what the amount of business was there? Then I asked:

What is the cause of the diminution of the business there?

The reply was:

The Homestake Mining Co., which previously supplied a large part of the business to this office, gave it most of its business, is now sending its deposits directly to New York—

And so on.

Mr. LONDON. What deposits are referred to?

Mr. MADDEN. Deposits of ore—minerals.

Mr. RHODES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RHODES. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether or not the business done by the other mints showed any falling off during the past year as compared with former years? And I wish to supplement that question by asking, further, if it is not also a fact that there has been considerable inactivity in the mining business generally throughout the country during the past two or three years because of the general depression of business?

Mr. MADDEN. The Philadelphia Mint had 28,331 deposits; San Francisco, 23,449; Denver, 14,095; New York, 18,748; New Orleans, 456; Carson City, 241; Boise, 527; Helena, 357; Deadwood, 10; Seattle, 1,302; Salt Lake, 106. I do not know how the number compares with the previous year.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Does not the gentleman recognize the fact that the value of an assay office is not to be measured necessarily by the number of deposits? They simply deposit the bullion for sale and purchase; but the fact of the matter is that the value of an assay office lies in the assays made.

The usefulness of the office is in making assays for prospectors and miners. They have made over 1,300 assays during the past year, and the income of the office is larger than that of any other office which was mentioned.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, no.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Larger than any other outside of Philadelphia.

Mr. MADDEN. I will say that the income has nothing to do with the value of the office.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. That is true.

Mr. MADDEN. My attitude toward this is not based on the income, because the Director of the Mint says the income has nothing whatever to do with the importance of the office, and he says the assay offices are not organized for the purpose of making revenue, but they are organized in order to accommodate the mining interests of the community, and that whatever assaying they do in the way of commercial work for which they charge is aside from the importance of the office.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I do not think the deposits from bullion there for sale are of any importance at all. At least that has been my experience, and I have lived in a mining region most of my life.

Mr. MADDEN. I would not want to do any injustice to the people out there.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. The value of the office lies in the fact that it takes care of the small prospectors and miners.

Mr. MADDEN. If we have made any mistake I would be very sorry, because I do not want to injure the community.

Mr. TILSON. Is it not a fact that the deposits of bullion are small because of the provision that when the bullion is brought to the mint it may be coined and the amount of coin returned to the owner of the bullion?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes; that is exactly why it has been diverted.

Mr. TILSON. Whereas if it was for sale it would have to be sold for its intrinsic value?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMSON) there were—ayes 9, noes 10.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I call for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota demands tellers.

Tellers were refused, not a sufficient number rising to second the demand.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Remodeling, etc., public buildings: For remodeling, enlarging, and extending completed and occupied public buildings, including any necessary and incidental additions to or changes in mechanical equipment thereof, so as to provide or make available additional space in emergent cases, not to exceed an aggregate of $20,000 at any one building, $375,000.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I notice that the amount asked by the Treasury for this purpose was $500,000 and that the amount was cut to $375,000 by the Bureau of the Budget. The hearing is at page 576. The Chairman of the committee is very familiar, probably as familiar as anybody in the House or almost anybody in the United States, with the conditions in reference to this matter.

The post-office buildings of the United States were not built with a view to carrying on the parcel-post business. They were constructed before we took on the parcel-post business, and they are inadequate and have not sufficient space. It is estimated that a given number of feet should be allowed to each employee, but in almost all of the cities which have grown to any considerable extent the buildings have a very much smaller amount of space than is considered necessary for the health of the employees and for the proper dispatch of business. In the case of any city that has grown the parcel-post business to-day is larger than all of the other postal business combined and takes more space. It is not simply a question of lack of space, but the buildings were not constructed with reference to the doing of a parcel-post business. They have not the facilities of equipment to do the business efficiently. Some of the post offices with which I am familiar attempt to do their parcel-post business by bringing the parcels in and letting them down to the basement, then elevating them back to the first floor and doing the business piecemeal in that way, by several operations, where it could be done by one operation if it were possible to make the building adequate and proper for the transaction of the business.

Take the business at the city of Niagara Falls in my district. That city has grown within a very short time from 3,000 people to 60,000 people. The postal facilities are absolutely inadequate, and it is costing two or three times what it would cost to do the business if they could have an enlargement of the building. The Treasury Department has been promising us throughout the past year that they would enlarge the building and remodel it so that that business could be done expeditiously and economically, but we are not reached because they say that the appropriation is so small, and they have so many listed ahead of us that it is utterly impossible for them to do the remodeling which is absolutely necessary.

The same condition applies in a very much larger way in the city of Buffalo. The same condition applies in the city of Lockport.

Take another instance. In the city of Niagara Falls, which, as I say, has grown from 3,000 people to 60,000 people, we have a very large customhouse business. When the new post office was built we transferred the customhouse from the customhouse building to the post office.

The old customhouse building was discontinued, and now the post office is utterly unable to accommodate its own business, and much less can it furnish facilities for the transaction of the customhouse business. It is absolutely necessary that the old customhouse should be remodeled, and yet there are no funds with which to do it, and the Treasury Department says there are 40 buildings ahead of us and we can not hope to be reached until all of the prior demands have been met.

Take another instance in my own district. At Buffalo we have the old post office that was occupied before the new one was built. The old post office has not been used for many years. It could be utilized for the parcel-post business. The building itself, the new building, needs to be remodeled, and yet we are unable to get anything done. There are four instances of the need of remodeling and enlarging in one congressional district.

If the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations please, I want to be in accord with him on all of these matters as far as I can, but it does seem to me that the Government will save money, will save two or three dollars to each dollar of business done if the appropriation is made adequate so that the buildings may be remodeled and meet the parcel-post business which has sprung up and grown to such a splendid magnitude that it has become the most important branch of the post-office business.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, it does seem to me that we should recognize the fact that these public buildings were constructed without any idea at all of the doing of this parcel-post business. The business has come into existence since they were planned; they were planned only with reference to the business that existed at the time they were constructed. Now they are utterly inadequate for this greatly increased business.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield.

Mr. TILSON. Does not the gentleman see where that would land us? Instead of attempting to make over every post office, does not he think we ought to enter on a different policy and go to the center, the railroad center, to the union station if there is one, and there acquire quarters for the parcel-post business and separate it from the strictly postal matters. Would not that be a better policy than to enlarge all the post offices to accommodate the parcel-post business? If you started on a policy of enlarging all the post offices to accommodate the parcel-post business, there is no telling what the magnitude of this public building bill would be.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I appreciate the importance and the practical effect of the gentleman's suggestion, and I think we should do both. Take the two offices that I have already referred to, that of Niagara Falls and at Lockport, and I know from practical observation the business they are doing and how they are doing it. The increased business could be accommodated by a slight change costing $20,000 or $25,000. It would be unnecessary to go to the railroad and acquire new quarters and spend $125,000 or $150,000. On the other hand, take the city of Buffalo, which is partly in my district. There the gentleman's suggestion would be a proper suggestion and a thing that should be done. But because this should be done in the way the gentleman suggests in the large centers, we should not make it impossible to supply the great need of the small post offices in the small centers, which can be done, and that is contemplated by just the kind of appropriation that we now have under consideration. This appropriation was designed for the remodeling necessary in all the small places. It was designed for remodeling on a small scale in larger places also. But that would not answer in the large and congested centers. But because the increase of this appropriation would not answer every place in the United States, because it would not answer the largest cities, is no reason why we should not increase it to a reasonable amount, so that in the smaller centers, where it can be utilized and bring relief, the relief should be extended. As I say, if the gentleman has any small towns in his district where they absolutely need the relief, and if he has any small towns he will find they do need it, to remodel and increase the facilities and make it economical as well as expeditious in handling the parcel-post matters, he will find that he can not get it done now, and the only way to see that it is done is to have this appropriation greatly increased.

Mr. ROACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. ROACH. The same conditions relating to the larger post offices in the gentleman's district prevail in a large number of smaller post offices in my district.

Mr. DEMPSEY. It prevails in all the post offices of the United States where they do any considerable parcel-post business.

Mr. ROACH. That is true.

Mr. DEMPSEY. If the gentleman goes to the Treasury Department, he will find not only that the appropriation is inadequate but he will find that the appropriation is so small that they do not have enough draftsmen, they do not have enough architects, they do not have enough men to prepare the plans so that any adequate amount of work can be done in a given year.

Mr. Chairman, I send to the desk an amendment to page 48, line 11, to strike out "$375,000" and insert "$500,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Amendment by Mr. DEMPSEY: Page 48, line 11, strike out "$375,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$500,000."

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I oppose the amendment. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] desires to increase this fund in order to add to post offices which are already in existence where the people have had some measure of relief, whereas we are denied the opportunity to get any post-office buildings, at least up to this time and for many years, where we need them and have not any at all. In the town of Lancaster, for instance, in my district, provision was made for a post office in 1913. In 1915 they acquired the site, the appropriation having been made. It is there, a blank site to-day. In 1916 they undertook to get the building constructed and to let the contract. On account of the increased cost of everything, resultant from war conditions, the appropriation lacked $19,000 of being enough to get the post office constructed. Therefore they could not let the contract, because the lowest bid exceeded the appropriation. It has stood in that way up to this time. The Supervising Architect of the Treasury has recommended the appropriation of the $19,000 necessary every time there has been a public building bill before the Public Building Committee, and it has been put in every bill reported by that committee, but no bill has been allowed to pass, and there are about 100 towns in the same fix as Lancaster. To now increase the appropriations for the extension of these buildings where they already have them is an injustice, and I am in favor of holding everybody down tight until the roseate promises of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] a short time before election, that they were going to give all of us a public building, that there would be a post office in every primary town in the United States, are fulfilled to a certain extent, and some of us who have nothing will get something.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman know whether any effort has been made since 1916 to get a bid at Lancaster?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes. They have asked for bids within the last 12 months, and still they do not get a bid that will come within the appropriation.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But the cost is less now than then.

Mr. STEVENSON. That may be possible, but I do not think so. The Supervising Architect informs me, on the other hand, that things are swinging up instead of down.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The people in the smaller cities, I take it, have ceased to expect the same kind of service and treatment that the people receive in the larger cities. In that connection let me call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that in his cities and in mine the Post Office Department will not deliver mail unless people put out boxes, but in the city of Washington the people get their mail whether they put up the boxes or not.

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not want to get off this subject, and that is the subject that these people who already have post offices, in so far as I am concerned, are going to have to get along with them as they are until some effort is made to give the people who have no post office and who have been promised one, and for which legislation has been enacted providing for them, the necessary appropriations to build them. I think it is high time that this committee should be sustained, and we should put every check we can on the increase of this appropriation and hold it down to the very limit of that repair which is necessary for the efficient administration of the affairs of the post office where it is absolutely necessary to do it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take up much time, but it would be folly, it seems to me, to make a larger appropriation than we propose for this work. In order to make an intelligent appropriation to cover the needs of the country we would have to make a very careful investigation. That investigation would require the time of a lot of experts. When we reported the parcel post act to the House I was a member of the committee who made the report, and I said then that if this activity were going to be entered upon by a private concern it would first provide the facilities, but inasmuch as it was going to be entered upon by the Government the Government would start the business first and then take its chances on the facilities later. The Government has been taking its chances on them for some time and has not gotten them yet. This appropriation here ought not to be increased at this time. To do the things that are required to be done throughout the country, such as those alluded to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY], it would take $10,000,000.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think it would.

Mr. MADDEN. Ninety-eight buildings have been remodeled out of this appropriation during the last year.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BOX. Does this involve the extension or enlargement of a building?

Mr. MADDEN. It would authorize them to enlarge or remodel.

Mr. BOX. Can that be done without legislative authorization?

Mr. MADDEN. This authority has existed for a long time, but it ought not to be made on any very extensive scale, and so we do not appropriate money except to do the urgent, needful thing, and anything other than the urgent, needful thing for the time being should be authorized by law.

Mr. BOX. Would it not be a possible thing under the system of appropriation such as this to carry forward an extensive line of building at larger places where——

Mr. MADDEN. It would not be justified.

Mr. BOX. But where it is possible.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. In Amarillo, Tex., they built a mail shed that cost thirty-one hundred and odd dollars, and at Appleton, Wis., they built a mezzanine floor that cost $1,817. That is the kind of work they do. At Atlanta they built a mezzanine floor and storehouse for $2,856, and at Baltimore a mezzanine floor for $1,198, and so forth, and new partitions to provide rooms for the courts—a few things like that. That is what this appropriation is intended to do.

Mr. BOX. There is legislative authority for it?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; and it ought not to be extended beyond that.

Mr. STEVENSON. I see it is limited to $20,000 in any one building.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Can the gentleman add anything to the information which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] gave us in the last session touching the passage of a public building bill?

Mr. MADDEN. The latest information I have on the subject is an interview purporting to have come from the President, in one of the newspapers, and it would seem from that interview that he is very much opposed to what the gentleman from Kentucky wants.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I would say in answer to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Box] that at Niagara Falls they propose to utilize what is now an open veranda, cover it in, and make it a room for the parcel-post business. That is an illustration of the kind of work they do.

And at Lockport they propose to fix up the basement so it will be a proper and adequate place in which to handle the parcel-post business.

Mr. BOX. What does the gentleman have in mind when he offers an amendment to enlarge and make additions?

Mr. DEMPSEY. It will not make additions on a larger scale, as the gentleman from Illinois well says. We would probably need at least $10,000,000 to do this work. The amount suggested in the bill is $375,000 and the amount asked for in the amendment is $500,000, and it is simply a small addition, so that the crying needs, where the work is the most congested, where it is hardest for the post-office employees, where it is costing two or three dollars for everyone because of the inconvenience, things like that are proposed to be met.

Mr. MADDEN. I hope there will not be anything added to the committee recommendation.

Mr. DEMPSEY. It seems to me we ought to have a reasonable number here to vote on a question of this kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the necessary number of words for the purpose of asking a question or two. There are two or three items here in which I am greatly interested. For instance, Brooklyn, N. Y., post office, extension of lookout system, $15,000; Buffalo, N. Y., post office, for extension of lookout system, $3,500; Philadelphia, Pa., and Pottsville, Pa., for extension of lookout system. From the gentleman's experience not only as a member of the Committee on Appropriations but from his long experience in connection with postal affairs I would just like a brief discussion——

Mr. MADDEN. A lookout system——

Mr. KETCHAM. I know what they are, but I wanted to know whether or not as a general policy he favors them.

Mr. MADDEN. In some of the buildings they have built mezzanine floors, some of those I referred to a few moments ago. In building mezzanine floors they shut the outlook away so that the inspector can not see the employees.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The employees can not see the inspector; it is just the other way.

Mr. MADDEN. No; they have shut out by the construction of the mezzanine floors all opportunity for the utilization of the lookouts.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I see what the gentleman had in mind.

Mr. MADDEN. Now they have to build lookouts, and it is very important.

Mr. KETCHAM. I understand, of course, the use of the lookout system; but what I wanted the gentleman's judgment upon was whether or not, in this day of advancement and enlightenment, as a general policy he thinks this ought to be inaugurated in public buildings, and whether or not they are absolutely essential as a part——

Mr. MADDEN. They only caught 56 people at one time who were stealing the mails.

Mr. KETCHAM. That is not the result of the lookout.

Mr. MADDEN. It was; 56 of them, and 50 pleaded guilty and signed a confession after they caught them, and that was only one case. You have got to have them.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think I know the circumstances to which the gentleman from Illinois refers, and I am quite satisfied if there had been the lookout system there it never would have happened. A number of young men who never before had been charged with any crime had got into loose ways and got to think that no attention was being paid to what they were doing, and they got into serious trouble, which, in my judgment, never would have happened if there had been lookouts there.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Public buildings, repairs, equipment, and general expenses.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Illinois does not expect to finish the bill to-night?

Mr. MADDEN. I want to finish the reading and have nothing left except the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will there be anything else taken up to-morrow except this bill?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know what the plans are.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have no objection to running on.

Mr. MADDEN. If there is anything, it will be debate on the Departments of State and Justice bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There is no objection on my part.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that where changes have been made by amendments the Clerk will be authorized to change the totals to conform therewith.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SANDERS of Indiana, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 13180 had come to no resolution thereon.

CONSOLIDATING THE WORK OF COLLECTING STATISTICS, ETC.

[SEAL.] CHANNING H. COX, Governor.

By his excellency, the Governor:

F. W. COOK,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

REPORT OF DIRECTOR UNITED STATES VETERANS' BUREAU.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report of the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, pursuant to law, a list of papers and documents on the files of the Board of Inspection and Survey, Navy Department, not needed in the conduct of business and having no permanent value or historic interest, and asking for action looking to their disposition, which was referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments. The Presiding Officer appointed Mr. BALL and Mr. TRAMMELL members of the committee on the part of the Senate, and ordered that the Secretary notify the House of Representatives thereof.

MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by the eighteenth annual convention of the National Farmers' Union, protesting against the proposed merger of meat packing corporations in the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Woodson County Pomona Grange, of Gridley; the fifty-sixth annual convention of the National Grange, at Wichita; and Nikkleton Grange, No. 1722, of Vernon, all in the State of Kansas, protesting against the passage of the so-called ship subsidy bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

MARINE HOSPITAL RESERVATION, CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Mr. FERNALD, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11040) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the sale of the marine hospital reservation in Cleveland, Ohio," approved July 26, 1916, reported it without amendment.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 935) thereon.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. May I ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question? The bill goes to the calendar of course to-day, but I would like to know what his plans are in reference to its consideration.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is my purpose to call it up at the first opportunity on Monday.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator expects to bring it before the Senate on Monday for consideration?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to submit the views of the minority, in connection with the majority report presented by the Senator from Washington, and I ask that they be printed with the report of the majority.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I think it would be well to have the minority and majority reports printed as one document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

LANDS IN GLACIER NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. MYERS. From the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (S. 3593) to authorize the exchange of lands with owners of private land holdings within the Glacier National Park, and I submit a report (No. 934) thereon. Mr. President, I ask leave to be heard for a moment in regard to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator from Montana will proceed.

Mr. MYERS. There are still a few holdings of private lands in Glacier National Park in Montana, and it is desired by both the owners of those lands and the Government that exchanges be made. The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to accept those properties when good title is shown and to convey in return like land of equivalent value elsewhere in the State of Montana. With certain amendments which were approved by the committee, the bill is formally recommended by the Department of the Interior.

As this is a Senate bill there will not be a particle of chance to get it through the House unless we have action upon it at once. I therefore ask that the bill be read, and then I shall ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. The committee is unanimously in favor of it, the Interior Department approves it, and prompt action is very necessary if we are going to do anything with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill which he has just reported.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let the bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 11, to strike out the words "an equal area of" and insert the word "like"; in the same line to strike out the word "Government" before the word "land"; and before the word "value" to strike out the word "like" and insert the word "equal"; on line 12 to strike out the words "elsewhere in the United States" and insert the words "in the State of Montana, after due notice of the proposed exchange has been given by publication for not less than 30 days in the counties where the lands proposed to be exchanged or taken in exchange are located"; and in section 2, page 2, line 11, to strike out the words "to become" and insert the words "be and remain," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, for the purpose of eliminating private holdings of land within the Glacier National Park, is hereby empowered, in his discretion, to obtain for the United States the complete title to any or all of the lands held in private ownership within the boundaries of said park by accepting from the owners of such privately owned lands complete relinquishment thereof and by granting and patenting to such owners, in exchange therefor, in each instance, like public land of equal value situate in the State of Montana, after due notice of the proposed exchange has been given by publication for not less than 30 days in the counties where the lands proposed to be exchanged or taken in exchange are located.

SEC. 2. That the value of all patented lands within said park, including the timber thereon, offered for exchange, and the value of other lands of the United States elsewhere situate, to be given in exchange therefor, shall be ascertained in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may direct; and the owners of such privately owned lands within said park shall, before any exchange is effective, furnish the Secretary of the Interior evidence satisfactory to him of title to the patented lands offered in exchange; and lands conveyed to the Government under this act shall be and remain a part of the Glacier National Park.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would like to ask the Senator from Montana why this can not be done under the general law we passed just a short while ago?

Mr. MYERS. The general law, I understand, does not apply to national parks, but applies only to forest reserves.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This is not a forest reserve?

Mr. MYERS. It is a national park.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, December 9, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; He leadeth me beside the still waters; He restoreth my soul; He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff, they comfort me. Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies; Thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life; and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

STATISTICS OF FOREIGN COMMERCE.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, last Monday the House passed the bill (S. 3295) to consolidate the work of collecting, compiling, and publishing statistics of the foreign commerce of the United States in the Department of Commerce. Since then we have been advised by the Senate that they have disagreed to the amendments that the House put on the bill and we have also been advised that the Senate have asked for a conference. I now ask unanimous consent that the House insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

Mr. GARNER. I did not understand just what the gentleman said the action of the Senate was.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They simply disagreed to our amendments. They did not put on any amendments themselves. The gentleman remembers that this is a Senate bill.

Mr. GARNER. And they simply disagreed to the House amendments and asked for a conference?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a Senate bill, which the Clerk will report by title, and that the House insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (S. 3295) to consolidate the work of collecting, compiling, and publishing statistics of the foreign commerce of the United States in the Department of Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection, and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. FORDNEY, Mr. GREEN of Iowa, Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. GARNER, and Mr. COLLIER.

TREASURY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Treasury appropriation bill, H. R. 13180.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Inasmuch as there is to be a fight made on one of the most important provisions of this bill, a provision that is going to save the Government $1,000,000 a year, does not the gentleman think we ought to have a quorum here?

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. MADDEN. I think we can get on if we simply go into the Committee of the Whole in the usual way.

Mr. BLANTON. The membership will not know what is under consideration unless they are called in.

Mr. KING. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. I object to the vote, because there is no quorum present, and make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors. The Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members. As many as favor the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union will, as their names are called, vote "yea," those opposed "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 266, nays 0, not voting 164, as follows:

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on House Joint Resolution 400.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a few minutes of the time of this House to explain in a general way House Joint Resolution 400, introduced by me on December 6, 1922, which reads as follows:

Joint resolution to promote peace and to equalize the burdens and to minify the profits of war.

Whereas it is the duty of Congress to require that the burdens and benefits of war shall be justly and fairly distributed; and

Whereas it is the duty of all citizens to contribute to our Nation's success in war according to their several capacities and resources; and

Whereas modern warfare rests increasingly upon scientific knowledge and industrial resources and must be carried on by the Nation as a whole and not merely by the young men in arms; and

Whereas to take the profits out of war and to require equal service for all, and deny special profits to any, will be conducive to peace (which is our traditional policy); and

Whereas we should employ the experience of recent wars to work out and enact into law, while we are yet at peace, such provisions and policies to be pursued when war shall come as shall empower the President immediately to mobilize all the resources of the country: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That a commission is hereby created to draft and report to the President of the United States, who in turn shall transmit the same, with or without his approval, to Congress not later than the first Monday in December, 1923, proposed legislation to accomplish in fact the principles and policies expressed in this resolution.

That said commission shall be bipartisan and nonpolitical and shall be composed of four members of the Military Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives and two members of the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of Commerce, and three other persons not holding official or governmental position whatever, and selected with a view to represent in a general sense the views of labor, industry, and capital, respectively.

Within 30 days after the approval of this resolution the President shall appoint and announce the members of said commission and shall direct the same to meet in the city of Washington, D. C., as soon thereafter as may be practicable, and shall supply from the War Department all necessary office and clerical assistance.

When said commission shall meet it shall organize by electing one of its number as chairman, and another as vice chairman, and shall appoint a secretary and proceed to draft proposed legislation to accomplish the aims and purposes of this resolution; and such proposed legislation, with any comment upon same deemed desirable, shall be transmitted to the President not later than November 1, 1923, and the President shall direct that there shall be printed not exceeding 5,000 copies thereof for the use of Congress.

That the guiding principle to control the labors of said commission is that true preparedness demands our calm and careful adoption in advance of another war of a nation-wide policy of service for all citizens to the end that, while young men are laying down for their country the comforts and joys of home and family, their health, their strength and time, their blood, bodies, and life itself, others not required to make these greater sacrifices may be required to lay down equitably and fairly some of their material resources and wealth, to the great end that victory for the Nation's ideals may speedily come, and that after victory there be no need for any adjustment of compensation, and no mighty war debt piled up to sap the strength of the producing activities of the people for scores of years.

That no compensation shall be paid any member of said commission, and no expenses shall be incurred by them except the actual cost of maintenance and travel to the three members of the commission not already holding an official position.

Now, Mr. Chairman, naturally I was greatly gratified to find that the President again championed this manifestly fair and just principle of service in time of war, as evidenced by the following language extracted from his address delivered on December 8, 1922:

The proposed survey of a plan to draft all the resources of the Republic, human and material, for national defense may well have your approval. I commended such a program in case of future war, in the inaugural address of March 4, 1921, and every experience in the adjustment and liquidation of war claims and settlement of war obligations persuades me we ought to be prepared for such universal call to armed defense.

Mr. Chairman, we are very proud of the position that the American Republic has taken since the beginning of its history in promoting world peace. This has manifested itself so far in three different ways: First, in the establishment of a Democratic form of government resting upon the will of the people, whereby war may be declared only by the action of the representatives of the people in Congress assembled; second, by declaring and acting accordingly that it is the American policy not to wage war for the purpose of acquiring territory, nor to aggrandize political power; third, the leadership of America in promoting some form of international agreement whereby the forces making for peace may find a voice when war is threatened, as, for instance, the initiative taken by America in promoting the covenant for the League of Nations, and later in calling and promoting the conference for the Limitation of Armaments. I might also mention in addition that as a corollary to the Republican form of government, the instigation and prosecution of war for the personal glory of some such war hero as Cæsar, Napoleon, or Kaiser is impossible.

However, there is another motive that lurks and has lurked in our Nation, and presumably exists in every nation, and it is the desire by certain institutions and groups to take advantage of the disturbances and necessities of war itself to make immense profits by supplying the Government with materials and by preying upon the needs of the people. I may therefore say frankly that the purpose of the proposition now advanced by the American Legion is "to take the profit out of war." We know that it is a historical fact that many huge fortunes were piled up in the North during the War between the States, and those fortunes have been the foundations upon which many of the immense and vast family fortunes now rest. Before 1860 there were none of those huge fortunes in the hands of individuals and families such as have since existed. Many individuals, firms, and corporations multiplied their holdings many times during the Spanish-American War, and many of these same concerns, with thousands of others, used the opportunities furnished by the conditions prevailing during the World War to swell their fortunes to the tune of thousands of millions. It has been variously estimated that the total of the profits made upon supplies furnished to the Government will aggregate from five thousand million to ten thousand million dollars of the war debt. It is altogether probable that an equal sum was made by exorbitant profits exacted from the civilian population during the stress and trial of war.

Last winter I introduced a bill in Congress to punish as a felon any person, firm, or corporation which should demand and receive from the Government in time of war any price for war matériel that may be necessary for the use of the Government in conducting war, if the profit thus exacted were excessive and unreasonable under all the circumstances of the case. I have sympathized with all the efforts that have been made to bring to trial those persons who during war committed frauds upon the Government, and I have assisted in every way in my power as a minority member the splendid efforts to that end made by the Hon. ROYAL C. JOHNSON of South Dakota and the Hon. ROY O. WOODRUFF, of Michigan. I think that not only the ex-service men but the rank and file of the American citizens who worked and sacrificed and prayed for the success of the allied arms against the menace to humanity and civilization believe that these guilty crooks should wear stripes. We do not care how high they have been nor what financial positions they have held. If they have been trusted officers of the Government, they are all the more guilty. The man who assists in robbing his Government in time of war is worse than an enemy, and is, in fact, a traitor, because he stabs his own country in the back.

It may be asked by some, "Why agitate this question relating to war and the conduct of war at this time?" My answer is, "That in times of peace we must prepare for war." We must not only prepare by maintaining an adequate Navy and a suitable framework for an Army, but we must use the experience of the recent war and of all former wars for outlining a military policy for the whole Nation. In former times wars were conducted by that fraction of the Nation actually enlisted in the Army, but now the conduct of war is a matter for the whole population and all of the industries, commercial agencies, and agricultural resources. The entire Nation must be coordinated and organized into a great team with the Army at the front and with the lines of communication running back into every branch of industry and business. When we contemplate the staggering debt entailed upon us by the recent World War, amounting to more than $200 per head for every man, woman, and child in the Nation, and when we further contemplate that about 93 per cent of the annual expenditures of the Federal Government, aggregating more than $4,000,000,000, is expended either in paying off the obligations of the past wars, or in making preparations for future wars, it appears that the principal business of the Federal Government so far as the money is concerned is making war. And yet our Nation is the most peaceful nation on earth and has had the most powerful influence in preserving world peace. If our Federal Government spends 93 per cent of this enormous revenue for war purposes, what must be the expenditures for the same purposes by those nations that are really warlike and militaristic in policy?

The purpose of the proposed legislation, which is recommended by the American Legion, is "to take the profit out of war." We believe that if there be no prospect to make huge profits out of a war, such as have been made out of past wars, then the great interests that control the mighty metropolitan newspapers will not be disposed to use the columns of those periodicals to fan the public passions into the flame of war. In fact, if those mighty financial interests so largely controlling those great news agencies realized in advance that they were going to have to pay their part of the war expenses as the war progressed, and to contribute their material resources toward conducting the war, without being able to profiteer upon the Government and without the expectation of collecting interest upon enormous bonded debts for all future times, then in such event they would be very cautious and very slow to encourage war. In fact, we can confidently believe that with such a policy formally fixed upon our statute books we might rest assured that any war for the future would surely be a righteous war, such a war that men and women would gladly give their time, their wealth, their services, their blood, and their lives in order to carry on. And to such a war, those too old and infirm to personally participate would be willing to contribute directly without compensation and without hope of return necessary parts of their fortunes.

Mr. Chairman, it is universally accepted as a sound principle of government under republican institutions that there should be "equal rights to all and special privileges to none." This is a rule of government to prevail in time of peace, but obviously it can not control governmental action in time of war, because such persons as commissioned officers must be allowed to exercise special authority and unusual power in order to accomplish military ends. We now submit as an equally sound principle of government to control in time of war the following maxim, "Equal service for all and special profits to none." Equal service is based upon the fundamental truth that all persons are equally under obligations to their Government to obey in time of peace and to serve in time of war. However, all can not serve in the uniform, and yet those too old or infirm to bear arms should do what they can from the same motive and for the same compensation, whether it be digging ditches and building roads in camp, or building cantonments, or building ships, or building railroads and running trains, or furnishing sawmills, blast furnaces, machine shops, factories, and railroads, and, last of all, money, in order to carry on war. Accumulated wealth would be dissipated by an unsuccessful war and tribute would be levied upon the Nation, and that tribute would have to be paid largely by wealthy people. Therefore those with wealth and unable to bear arms or to contribute by personal service to the making of munitions or to building of cantonments or the construction of ships or any other services in aid of actual military operations should contribute directly of their money, and in a ratio to be fixed in advance by law, and to be operated under a universal drafting system. We might as well speak plainly and understand each other now. It will take at least 100 years for the people of this country to pay the $23,000,000,000 of war debts still remaining unpaid with the interest on it amounting to about $1,000,000,000 a year. This principal and interest is paid by the fruits of the labors of those who actually fought or were prepared to fight the battles of this country, and certainly their children and grandchildren must finish the payment. The result is that to a very substantial extent those who bore the arms of the country in her defense must also pay the war debt of the Nation. We respectfully submit that such is unfair. Under the standards prevailing during the recent World War the man who bought Liberty bonds and Victory bonds was discharging a patriotic duty, and we gladly record the ready response of the civilian population in subscribing to the several war loans. But the Nation is paying interest on these loans and must ultimately pay back the principal. On the contrary, the man who spent one year or two years of his life in the Army has given something for which he can never be fully compensated. When we apply the sound maxim of "equal service" to all, then every man will contribute according to his powers and capacities, and if he has physical strength and youth he will give to the uttermost, and if he has neither but has wealth he will contribute of that, so that when the war is over there will be no debts to pay and there will be no adjustment of compensation to make, and the Nation will resume its productive activities just where they were left off when war commenced, and there will be no privileged few that have made enormous profits out of war activities.

TREASURY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury is directed, as soon as possible after the approval of this act and not later than September 30, 1923, to dispense with the use of not less than 196 hand plate-printing presses in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and to substitute therefor not more than 55 power plate-printing presses, and hereafter he is authorized to print from plates of more than four subjects each upon power presses the fronts and backs of any paper money, bonds, or other printed matter now or hereafter authorized to be executed at such bureau; and the Secretary shall in the performance of the duty and exercise of the authority placed upon him by this paragraph reduce the number of persons employed in the operation of plate-printing presses by not less than 218.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order against the paragraph just read on the ground that it is not germane to the subject matter of the bill and that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I base my point of order as to the germaneness of this paragraph on a decision made by Mr. Fitzgerald, of New York, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union in the second session of the Sixty-third Congress. It will be found on page 482 of the Manual, second paragraph on that page, paragraph 951. Chairman Fitzgerald in this decision said:

That an amendment to be germane means that it must be akin to or relevant to the subject matter of the bill. It must be an amendment that would appropriately be considered in connection with the bill. The object of the rule requiring amendments to be germane—and such a rule has been adopted practically by every legislative body in the United States—is in the interest of orderly legislation. Its purpose is to prevent hasty and ill-considered legislation, to prevent propositions being presented for the consideration of the body which might not reasonably be anticipated and for which the body might not properly be prepared.

Now, this paragraph of the bill on page 32, just read, seeks to repeal existing law. It is in substance the subject matter of a bill that is now pending before the Committee on Printing. The Committee on Printing has considered this bill, which was introduced by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, but has taken no action thereon, and it is brought in as a rider on an appropriation bill. This bill provides for the appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year, and in this paragraph it is proposed to repeal existing law, and would cause the removal of the hand presses from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, substituting power presses therefor.

As to the subject matter of this paragraph being legislation on an appropriation bill, I call the Chair's attention to the decision of Chairman GARRETT, page 508 of the Manual, section 959, in which he says:

The Chair is of the opinion that the Committee on Appropriations may not, under this rule, bring in as an integral part of an appropriation bill substantive legislation that if introduced in the ordinary way in the House—that is, by bill or joint resolution presented by a Member—would go to another standing committee of the House for consideration and action; nor does the Chair think that any Member of the House may offer from his place on the floor any amendment carrying such substantive legislation, even though that legislation would retrench expenditures, unless that Member offer it as the report of a committee or as a member of a joint commission which would have jurisdiction of the subject matter under the rules of the House. In other words, the scope is limited and the outposts are fixed by the rule to which the Committee on Appropriations may go or the individual to which a Member may go.

On the next page of the Manual there is a ruling by Chairman Hull of Tennessee, which says that under clause 2 of rule 21 new legislation proposed to be in order as an amendment on a general appropriation bill must come officially from the committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter.

On the next page it states that the same amendment was later offered by authority of the Committee on the District of Columbia, which had jurisdiction of the subject matter under consideration in the bill before the House at that time, and the Chairman ruled that the amendment was in order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman states that it is his contention that this changes existing law. As a matter of fact, is the existing law such that it requires the work should be done by hand presses?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. That is my understanding of existing law.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from Maryland yield on that point?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to call his attention to the fact that until the law was changed in 1912 by a rider on an appropriation bill there was no more restriction on this department than there was by law on any other department as to the kind of machinery they might use for the transaction of their business. But after 1912, when there was a rider—not a proposition brought in from a legislative committee, but a rider—placed on an appropriation bill which restricted and hampered this particular bureau from using power presses. That is not legislation such as the gentleman would indicate. It was merely a rider on an appropriation bill, and it has remained on various other appropriation bills with respect to this department.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will say for the information of the gentleman from Texas that many important statutes have been enacted by riders on appropriation bills, but Congress has been seeking to get away from that method of legislation.

Mr. BLANTON. But they are not substantive law, and can be changed by any other appropriation bill.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I particularly call attention to the ruling of Speaker Crisp, which will be found on page 509 of the Manual, the last paragraph, which states:

As before stated, however, the Chair is not required to pass upon that, for the Chair is clearly of the opinion that any amendment that reduces expenditures, as authorized by the proviso of clause 2 of Rule XXI, to be in order under said Holman rule must come from a committee having jurisdiction of the legislative subject. The Committee on Appropriations in this instance not being a legislative committee was without authority to insert section 6 in the bill, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the very grave danger of allowing the Committee on Appropriations to bring in legislative riders on appropriation bills. A few years ago the House, in conformity with a very widespread sentiment throughout the country, concentrated all of the power of making appropriations into the hands of the 35 Members comprising the Committee on Appropriations. The right and the power to make appropriations were taken away from the Committee on Military Affairs, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and various other committees of the House that theretofore had the power to make and report appropriations. It was stated at the time, and it was so stated repeatedly, that the power to legislate was to be reserved to committees having legislative functions. If this provision is held to be in order, it would be just as consistent for this Committee on Appropriations to bring in a provision abolishing the War College in the War Department and substituting therefor civilian or National Guard officers, or some other class of citizens, in their stead under the guise that it reduces appropriations or that there is a retrenchment of expenditures in the proposition. I think this paragraph comes clearly within the rule that it is legislation on an appropriation bill, and the only way in which the Chair could possibly hold it to be in order is to hold that under the Holman rule there is a retrenchment of expenditures and a reduction in the number of employees. It is not enough for the Chair to merely assume that there is a reduction of employees involved in this proposed change in existing law. I remember last year this same committee brought in a proposition to concentrate all of the liquor held throughout the United States in the various bonded warehouses, and stated that there would be a great reduction in the cost of keeping the liquor in the concentrated warehouses. The scholarly and distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] rose in his place on this floor in the presence of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] and paid him a glowing tribute for his sagacity and foresight and for his statesmanship in proposing to concentrate in a few warehouses of the country all of the liquor then held in the various bonded warehouses. The gentleman from Illinois did not deny the pleasant statements made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, but we find here a year later that we are appropriating for another fiscal year, and, according to the hearings held before the committee, not a single drop of liquor held in the bonded warehouses of the United States has ever been concentrated in any warehouse.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I know the gentleman wants to state the facts, and I know that he is not stating the facts. The number of warehouses has been reduced and liquor has been transported from the warehouses that formerly existed to the concentrated warehouses, and most of the concentration has taken place and is taking place every day.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. As I read the hearings, the concentration has never reached a point beyond designating the warehouses.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, the liquor has been transported and concentrated.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In connection with the point of order, has not a bill proposing something similar to what is expressed in the paragraph on page 32 been introduced, and is not that bill now pending before the Committee on Printing, and has not that committee promised that hearings would be held upon the bill?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. My information is that such a bill has been introduced by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that it is pending before the Committee on Printing, that the Committee on Printing has held at least one hearing on that bill.

In conclusion, I wish to say that I think the House is establishing a very dangerous precedent when it allows a piece of legislation of this nature to come before it as a rider on an appropriation bill, especially in view of the fact that the chairman of the committee himself has introduced substantially the same bill, which is now pending before one of the legislative committees of the House and which committee has been considering that legislation.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, there are two very good reasons why the gentleman's point of order is not well taken. In the first place, the restriction which has been followed since 1912 is not a matter of substantive law. That restriction on this particular bureau preventing it from using power presses is the result of riders placed upon various appropriation bills since 1912 and is not substantive law.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Why not?

Mr. BLANTON. Because it has never been passed in a legislative bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If that be true, does not this paragraph, then, make legislation on an appropriation bill?

Mr. BLANTON. No; for this reason. This particular bureau is no different in its powers from any other department of the Government. The Government Printing Office, without any law, had the right to inaugurate improved linotype machines in preference to the old hand setting type machines. It had a right to inaugurate the use of any improved machinery. It is a matter of discretion which any department can exercise. The departments can pick out a particular kind of typewriter that is better than an old kind, it can pick out a particular kind of adding machine that is an improvement on the older kind. None of the departments, except this one bureau, is restricted in the use of this discretion, but this particular bureau since 1912—and I am sorry to say it continued all during the administration of my own party—has worked under this restriction preventing it from the use of improved machinery which would save this Government at least $1,377,000 a year. That is the first reason why the point of order is not well taken.

The other reason is this. Suppose it is a change of law; suppose there is substantive legislation for it, that it did not result merely from riders on appropriation bills, then it would still be in order under the Holman rule. Under this provision this bureau must by next September get rid of at least 218 employees, cut them off the pay roll of the Government, thereby stopping large expense to the taxpayers of the country. Clearly, it comes within the Holman rule. It is an annual saving of $1,377,000 ultimately, and for this year it would save nearly half a million dollars.

Mr. Chairman, the whole trouble, though it may be outside of the point of order, is that the Chair will find on each side of the clock in the gallery fronting him now a bevy of plate printers from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing who are not at their work to-day but are now up in the gallery trying to force this provision out of this bill. They are causing all this trouble here.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please confine himself to the point of order. The Chair would ask him a question.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman says that this retrenches expenditures by requiring the discharge of employees.

Mr. BLANTON. Two hundred and eighteen of them at least, and possibly three hundred. This will save for the taxpayers annually at least $1,377,000 following the change in system.

The CHAIRMAN. In expressed language. Is there anything in the paragraph that requires an addition in expenditures?

Mr. BLANTON. No; not expressed; but, as a matter of fact, yes. In order to save $1,377,000 a year expenditures this year must be made of approximately $300,000. It is merely a mathematical calculation which the Chair can easily make, or any other mathematician can make, and the Chair is a good mathematician; but the computation must be made from the hearings, not the bill. It is the saving ultimately of $1,377,000 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from Texas indicate to the Chair where in the bill there is indicated just what expenses would be attached to this?

Mr. BLANTON. There is no provision in the bill indicating that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman gets that in the hearings?

Mr. BLANTON. You get that in the hearings. The provision shows they can discharge from the pay roll of this Government at least 218 employees, and their salaries stopped, and the people's taxes cease to be paid for that amount of money.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman from West Virginia desires to ask a question.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. If this bill is thrashed out in the proper committee in a proper way, and it is found it is proper legislation, and then is brought in here in a proper way, would it not reduce expenses?

Mr. BLANTON. I will gladly answer the question because it is a pertinent one. There should be a reduction of war employees on the roll in Washington. There are about thirty odd thousand surplus on the pay roll now who ought to be sent home, and it is more within the province of the Committee on Appropriations rather than any other committee to stop that useless expenditure of the people's money, and I am glad to see that the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is standing up here like a rock-ribbed wall in that behalf in this instance.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. The gentleman admits that if this law is passed it will not accomplish any more than a law properly and orderly considered and passed.

Mr. BLANTON. This committee has sufficient authority. There has been such a proposed legislative measure pending before the Committee on Printing for the past seven months with no affirmative action taken thereon. If it would be a good measure when presented by the Committee on Printing, why is it not equally a good measure when presented by the Committee on Appropriations, inasmuch as it comes within the provisions of the Holman rule in that it removes 218 employees from the public pay rolls and retrenches expenditures to the large sum of $1,377,000 a year?

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, after all the very handsome compliments paid me by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] on yesterday as a parliamentarian I regret very much at so early a day to take issue with him on a parliamentary matter. It is, however, largely as to the facts in the case rather than as to what ruling the Chair should make that I fail to agree with him.

There is no question as to the legislation which it is here sought to change being permanent legislation. The first act on the subject was a proviso carried in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1899, approved July 1, 1898 (30 Stat. L., p. 604). The language is very clear. I read the proviso:

Provided further, That hereafter—which means for all time hereafter until changed—

That hereafter all bonds, notes, and checks shall be printed from hand roller presses.

There have been several changes made in the law. In the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1913, approved August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 430), additional restrictions were imposed in the following language:

Hereafter the proviso of the act of July 1, 1898 (30 Stat. L., p. 604), directing that all bonds, notes, and checks shall be printed on hand-roller presses shall not apply to checks, the backs and tints of all United States bonds, the backs and tints of all United States paper money, the backs and tints of bonds and paper money issued by any of the insular possessions of the United States, any or all of which shall be printed from intaglio plates and on such plate-printing presses as may be directed by the Secretary of the Treasury, said presses to be operated by plate printers, except that checks and tints may be printed by any desired process: Provided, That the backs of all United States paper money shall be printed from four-subject plates, and the faces of all internal-revenue stamps now printed from intaglio plates on hand-roller or power plate printing presses shall continue to be printed from intaglio plates on hand-roller or power plate-printing presses, as the Secretary of the Treasury may determine, said presses to be operated by plate printers: Provided further, That should the Secretary of the Treasury decide to print on the aforesaid power plate-printing presses any of the classes of work hereinbefore permitted to be printed on such presses, not more than one-fifth of the total number of hand-roller presses required to produce the estimated quantity of such work in any fiscal year shall be displaced in such fiscal year: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, apply motors to hand-roller presses that are now, or may hereafter be, operated in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, but such presses, if equipped with motors, shall be regarded as hand-roller presses within the meaning of this act.

Again in 1917, during the war, a modification was made so as to enable the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to use power presses during that critical time. It was carried in the urgent deficiency appropriation act for the fiscal year 1918, approved October 6, 1917 (40 Stat. L., p. 349), and reads as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, during the continuance of the war with Germany, to have all bonds, notes, checks, or other printed papers, now or hereafter authorized to be executed by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of the Treasury Department, printed in such manner and by whatever process and on any style of presses that he may consider suitable for the issue of such securities and other papers in the form that will properly safeguard the interests of the Government, except that such presses as are used in printing from intaglio plates shall be operated by plate printers: Provided, That in the execution of such work only such part of it shall be transferred from the present method of executing it as will permit of the retention in the service of such permanent plate printers as are now engaged in the execution of such work, or such temporary plate printers, similarly employed and who can qualify under civil-service regulations for permanent appointment, and all acts or parts of acts heretofore enacted relative to the use of power and hand presses in the printing of securities of the Government are hereby suspended and declared to be not in effect during the continuance of said war, and at the termination of the war such acts or parts of acts shall be in effect and force as heretofore.

In 1919 it was found necessary to extend the modification of the restrictions so as to permit during the emergency following the war the use of power presses. This extension was carried in the third deficiency appropriation act, for the fiscal year 1919, approved July 11, 1919 (41 Stat. L., pt. 2, p. 44), and is as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, during the emergency growing out of the war with Germany, to have all bonds, notes, checks, or other printed papers now or hereafter authorized to be executed by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of the Treasury Department printed in such manner and by whatever plate-printing process and on any style of plate-printing presses that he may consider suitable for the issue of such securities and other papers in the form that will properly safeguard the interests of the Government, and that such presses as are used in printing from intaglio plates shall be operated by plate printers except on such work as is now being done by other processes and any similar work that may be necessary hereafter: Provided, That in the execution of such work only such part of it shall be transferred from the present method of executing it as will permit of the retention in the service of such permanent plate printers as are now engaged in the execution of such work, or such temporary plate printers similarly employed and who can qualify under civil-service regulations for permanent appointments; and all acts or parts of acts heretofore enacted relative to the use of power and hand presses in the printing of securities of the Government are hereby suspended and declared not in effect until that time, and at the termination of said emergency such acts or parts of acts as shall be in effect and force as prior to the act of October 6, 1917.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. In all of these instances mentioned by the gentleman from Connecticut they were riders placed upon an appropriation bill that came from the Committee on Appropriations, were they not?

Mr. TILSON. That is all true, and it is also just as much substantive law as if passed in any other way. The contention of the gentleman seems to be that the bill as here presented, or the paragraph in the bill to which a point of order is made, is only a rider on an appropriation bill and therefore is not legislation. It is clearly legislation. It was intended to be legislation and it will not accomplish the purpose if it is not legislation.

The real contention here is that under the rules of the House legislation is in order on an appropriation bill under certain circumstances. What are the circumstances that will bring it under the rule? In paragraph 2 of Rule XXI, familiarly known as the Holman rule, it is provided:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except as being germane to the subject matter of the bill—

I believe that there can be no contest here as to this being germane to the subject matter of the bill—except such as, being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures—

How?—

by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States—

And so forth.

We need not go any further than this, because in this paragraph of the bill it is specifically stated that the number of employees must be reduced by a certain specified number.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the gentleman does admit that it comes within the Holman rule?

Mr. TILSON. I certainly do; but I do not base it on the points raised by the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. I still think the gentleman from Connecticut is a very distinguished parliamentarian. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. TILSON. I thank the gentleman; but I must stick to my original statement, that while I agree with the gentleman as to what the ruling should be I do not agree with him upon the grounds stated by the gentleman. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that it is so clear that this paragraph of the bill does retrench expenditures and that it does specifically reduce the number of employees that the Chair can not do otherwise than overrule the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman a question. Is it the gentleman's understanding that this paragraph provides for the purchase of power printing presses?

Mr. TILSON. It requires the substitution of 58 new power presses for a certain number of hand presses.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman agree with the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] that this involves an expenditure of a large sum of money as well as accomplishes a retrenchment of expenditures?

Mr. TILSON. It does not appear that there will be any expenditure, but if so the expenditure is already authorized by existing law. The bill shows that there is a total reduction in the amount of money required to perform the work that is here provided for, and there is a saving on the face of the bill of something like $400,000, as I recall, for the first year, and more than double this amount thereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. Where on the face of the bill does it show the amount of expenditure for the power presses?

Mr. TILSON. It does not show it except in the total of the appropriations carried for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Connecticut will permit me, I think that is at the top of page 35, $355,000.

The CHAIRMAN. That is only by inference. There is nothing in that language to show that that sum of money is to be paid out of the Treasury. Will the gentleman from Connecticut answer further? Since this paragraph involves an expenditure of an amount of money which is indefinite and is not ascertainable on the face of the bill, and also involves actual expenditures, does the gentleman think the Chair can ascertain the actual expenditures?

Mr. TILSON. I do not believe that the Chair is required to do so. This committee has the right to appropriate for new printing presses. This has all been provided for in existing law which authorizes the purchase of all the machinery necessary. It needs only an appropriation, and such an appropriation is clearly in order without reference to the Holman rule. The Chair will find that there is already a sufficient authorization for the purchase of presses, so that it need not be carried in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. But this law directs the substitution of the presses, and in order to accomplish the alleged retrenchment there must be an expenditure for presses?

Mr. TILSON. I have already called the attention of the Chair to the fact that in the sum total required to do the work heretofore done there is a saving of $400,000 in addition to and notwithstanding the purchase of the presses.

Mr. BLANTON. And it specifically provides for the discharge of 218 men.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And it is contemplated that instead of the number of men discharged as hand plate printers, another set of men will have to be employed to run the power presses. Personally I am favorably inclined toward the introduction of new machinery, but I do not think we should destroy the Committee on Printing or other legislative committees. A bill similar to this was introduced and referred to the Committee on Printing which has power to report that bill, if it so desires.

We find ourselves confronted here now with a doubtful proposition. No one can say, unless it be the all-powerful Committee on Appropriations, that 58 plate printing presses are what you need. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union has stated it exactly. It is an apparent economy in the employment of men, but it involves a certain expense in the purchase of presses. It is simply a matter, in my opinion, for the committee that has the power to report legislation to the House, and not within the province of an appropriating committee composed of 35 members, such as the Committee on Appropriations, to bring this into the House. If you keep up this process the Committee on Printing and other committees will fade away.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. BEEDY. How long has this bill been before the committee?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am not able to say.

Mr. BEEDY. Say, roughly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am not the chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing. I imagine six or seven months, part of the time when Congress was not in session.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations included this paragraph in the bill in the firm belief that it comes strictly within the provisions of the Holman rule. The Holman rule provides as follows:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures—

First—

by the reduction of the number and the salary of the officers of the United States—by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

The provision in the bill, I want the Chair to note, is mandatory. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to take the action outlined in the paragraph.

What is the direction to the Secretary of the Treasury? It is that he shall replace hand presses, 196 in number, with power presses, 58 in number. There is not any discretion placed, mark you, Mr. Chairman, in the Secretary of the Treasury in this matter. The legislation specifically states that he shall do it.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question there, right on that point?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. In that one transaction now there is no retrenchment?

Mr. MADDEN. I think we will show that there is a reduction of expense on its face.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. There is nothing in that paragraph that would put the Chairman on notice that the Secretary of the Treasury will have to buy these presses. He only gets that information from the hearings and the statement of the chairman. They may have these presses now in the basement of the building which they may substitute, because from time to time they have had unused power presses on hand.

Mr. DOWELL. That sounds like a foolish argument on this question.

Mr. MADDEN. Let me make my statement, so that it can be understood. I expressly ask the attention of the Chairman to the last sentence in the paragraph, which reads as follows:

And the Secretary shall in the performance of the duty and the exercise of the authority placed upon him by this paragraph reduce—the number of the persons employed in the operation of plate printing presses by not less than 218.

Mark you, reduce—

Now, there is no discretion in the Secretary of the Treasury as to whether he shall reduce the number or not. He must reduce them, and I claim that we come strictly within the Holman rule when we do reduce. It can not be argued that you can reduce the force in a given department without reducing the expense. Here we have a specific direction to the Secretary of the Treasury that he shall reduce the number of persons employed in the operation of plate printing presses by not less than 218.

I contend that comes within the Holman rule and does specifically show on the face of the bill that we are retrenching expenditures. Now, the paragraph does not leave it open to the Secretary of the Treasury to make a reduction in the number of persons of all classes employed in the bureau, but directs him to make the reduction from among those engaged in the operation of plate printing presses, which subjects this paragraph specifically to the rule. I hope I make this clear. In this connection we have a specific compliance with the first clause of the rule which provides that legislation, to be in order on an appropriation bill, must be germane. That is the first requirement, and this paragraph is germane; and it must reduce expenditures by first reducing the number and salary of the officers of the United States. We have a strict compliance with that stipulation. There is a mandatory duty upon the Secretary to eliminate not less than 218 persons. What could be plainer? I will state the direction again so that it may be thoroughly understood:

He shall, in the performance of the duty and the exercise of the authority placed upon him by this paragraph, reduce the number of persons employed in the operation of plate printing presses by not less than 218.

Is that clear?

Mr. DOWELL. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I want to make my argument on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that it is clear that there is a reduction in the number of employees.

Mr. MADDEN. There are precedents for the paragraph recommended in this bill.

In March, 1922, while the House was considering the bill making appropriations for the War Department, a point of order was directed to a paragraph providing for a reduction in the commissioned personnel of the Army. The provision did not state specifically, as this one in this bill does, that there should be a specific reduction of a certain number of officers. It provided for a less number of officers than had theretofore been provided for.

A point of order was raised against the provision. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, Mr. LONGWORTH, in holding the provision in order, said:

The present occupant of the chair has been called to rule quite a number of times on the Holman rule, and he is one of those who believes that it should be construed strictly. In other words, the present occupant of the chair must see to his satisfaction that the provisions in the bill actually and evidently on their face do reduce expenditures in either of the three ways provided under the Holman rule.

Now what are the three ways? One way is that you must reduce the number of persons employed. Another way is that you must reduce the compensation of the persons employed. Another way is that you must, on the face of the bill, show that you have reduced the amount of the bill.

I quote further from the ruling of Mr. LONGWORTH:

It seems to the Chair entirely clear that this provision does reduce the expenditures of the Government by a reduction of the number of officers and by the amount carried in the bill. The Chair thinks that this provision is in order and therefore overrules the point of order.

In March, 1916, Chairman CRISP, of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, ruled upon an amendment proposed to the legislative appropriation bill then pending, which amendment in effect provided that the number of persons in the classified service in the executive branch of the Government should be reduced by one-tenth on or before the 30th day of June, 1917. Coupled with this reduction there was legislation directing the heads of departments to increase the hours of labor so as to require not less than eight hours a day instead of seven, in order to effect the reduction of 10 per cent in the number.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. If this provision goes out of the bill on the point of order, how much will require to be added to the bill?

Mr. MADDEN. Seven hundred and forty-six thousand dollars.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. And how much will be taken out of the bill at another place?

Mr. MADDEN. Three hundred and fifty-five thousand dollars on account of the machines, or a net saving of $441,000.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think that is the question in the mind of the Chair.

Mr. MADDEN. That is the first year, and after that anywhere from $800,000 to more than $1,000,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to ask the gentleman a question right in that connection. I think it might clarify the situation to some of us.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is no doubt in the world about the correctness of the gentleman's proposition if this involves only the discharge of these men. But I apprehend the difficulty with which the Chair is confronted is that in addition to discharging these men it also provides for the purchase of additional machinery. Now, the rule is that it must show absolutely on its face that it means a reduction without any construction on the part of the Chair.

Mr. MADDEN. I will come to that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does this paragraph show that on the whole by necessary construction it reduces the amount of the appropriation? Does the gentleman contend that?

Mr. MADDEN. I will argue that a little later. Mr. Chairman CRISP, in holding this provision in order, said:

Now, what does the amendment in question do? It provides that one-tenth of the employees of the various executive departments shall be discharged or reduced. The legislative part of the amendment provides that when this reduction is made the remaining clerks shall work eight hours instead of seven. The Chair can not escape the conclusion that if you reduce the number of clerks the business of the Government will require those remaining in the service to work longer hours. The Chair thinks the legislation naturally and logically follows the provision reducing the number of clerks.

Now, the Chair, as before stated, believes the Holman rule is intended to have a beneficial effect upon the Treasury of the United States. If the Chair is in doubt about whether or not an amendment is in order, he believes it is his duty to resolve that doubt against the point of order, for by so doing the Chair works no hardship upon anyone, but submits to the committee itself the privilege of passing upon the amendment. If the committee favor it, a majority can adopt it. If they are opposed to it, a majority can reject it.

The Chair believes the amendment in question comes clearly within the spirit of the Holman rule, and therefore the Chair, without any reference whatever to the merits of the proposition, overrules the point of order and holds the amendment in order.

Now, one more case. Here is a precedent on all fours with what the committee recommends. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to reduce the number of persons by not less than 218, and in order to do this it directs him to substitute power presses, 58 in number, for hand presses, 196 in number, and authorizes him to utilize those power presses by giving him the authority to print from plates containing more than four subjects each, instead of restricting him to hand presses, as the permanent law provides. There is no conjecture upon the face of the provision recommended as to what will happen, no conjecture whatever. There will be a reduction of not less than 218 persons. Nobody will deny that. That is mandatory.

The second clause of the Holman rule does not enter into the question very materially, namely, that the provision may be in order if it reduces the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States. The third clause of the rule says that the provision changing existing law may be in order if it reduces the amount of money covered in the bill. This provision does not. No one will deny that, and if we do show that we reduce the amount of money covered in the bill in the paragraph before us, we come clearly within the Holman rule.

Now, what are the facts? The Chair, upon examination of the Treasury Department appropriation act for 1923—and I hope he will examine it—will find that the appropriation for compensation of other employees has been reduced from $2,512,140 to $2,454,400. The appropriation for the compensation of plate printers and their assistants has been reduced from $2,016,795 to $1,230,420. I maintain that that is a reduction in the charge against the Treasury and justifies the action that we propose. In fact, all these reductions have been made on account of the incorporation of this paragraph in the bill.

It is true that the appropriation for the purchase of materials is increased by $301,000, but the Chair will note that the net reduction in all the 1923 appropriations for this bureau as affected by this bill is $540,480. So there is a reduction of the amount of money covered by the bill as compared with current law.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. Has any question been raised as to whether the Committee on Appropriations has the power under existing law to authorize the purchase of these machines?

Mr. MADDEN. None at all.

Mr. TINCHER. Then how does that come into the point of order? Why connect it up if you have the authority?

Mr. MADDEN. Gentlemen making the point of order have argued it.

Mr. TINCHER. Oh yes; they argue a lot. But here is a bill which the gentleman introduced in 1922 and which was referred to the Printing Committee.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; the reason we took it up was because they have paid no attention to it. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to stress this point, that if the provisions of the Holman rule are to be applied to the strict interpretation of the rule in its application to the paragraph in this bill, then that paragraph on its face shows a reduction, very concretely, in the number of persons required in the plate-printing portion of the bill. If the third part of the rule, namely, the amount of money required by the bill, is deemed to be conjectural, then it should follow that the purchase of the new presses and their cost is also conjectural. I think that is not true, as a matter of fact, and should not be considered by the Chair as a reason for his ruling on the point of order. But if the Chair deems there is an element of conjecture in the purchase of the new presses which may affect the economies claimed on the face of the paragraph, I submit to the Chair that he should then admit for consideration as an offset the reductions in the 1923 appropriations on this bill.

Now, I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the temporary war legislation governing the Bureau of Printing and Engraving. There were two acts, one in 1919 and one in 1917, authorizing the Treasurer to disregard the permanent law governing the use of hand-power presses and permit him to use his judgment in the printing of money from power presses, from larger plates than permitted by the permanent law of 1912. There was a restriction upon this authority to him, however, and that restriction was that it required him, under the authority to disregard the permanent law of 1912, to utilize power presses and larger plates, he must give employment to the same number of permanent plate printers and temporary plate printers who could qualify as were employed in the bureau. So the law in effect said it does not matter how modern the machinery may be, what the machinery is qualified to do, the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to employ, regardless of the need, the number of plate printers in the service. That is what has been done.

The law ties the hands of the Secretary and he can not reduce the number of plate printers under the present law. It does not matter whether he needs them or not; he must employ them. Even in the emergency of war he must be governed by the requirements that he must keep a certain number of men employed. The paragraph in this bill unties his hands. That is all it does. It does what you would do or anybody else would do in his business. It places the business on a basis of economic justice. Is there a man in the world who would say that you could carry on a successful business anywhere if you are compelled to hire three men to do the work of one? There is no place except in the Government where that would be tolerated a minute.

Now, I have no grudge against anybody; I am here to perform my duty and I propose to perform it to the best of my ability, regardless of what anybody may think about it, and I leave it with you gentlemen to decide for yourselves. [Applause.]

Even after the emergency of the war I say these men had to be employed. The paragraph in this bill unties the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury. It directs him to reduce the number of persons employed in the operation of plate-printing presses by not less than 218. It is admitted on every hand that they are not needed, and why should they be employed? We are discharging people in every department of the Government. There are 500 dismissals provided for from another division of the Treasury Department, in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose, instead of providing for the discharge of not less than 218 employees, the bill had provided for the discharge of not less than 15 employees. Does the gentleman think the point of order would then lie?

Mr. MADDEN. It depends upon whether that reduced the cost of the Government in doing what we do. I think the point of order ought not to lie if we reduce the expenses of the Government. We are entitled under the Holman rule to submit the legislation, and I contend that it would be in order if we reduced the cost. The Secretary can make larger reductions, if he is able to, but under this specific plan, under the mandatory, inescapable language, he must eliminate 218. I maintain that he will eliminate more than that. It seems to me that we have placed a paragraph in the bill which, strictly construed, eliminating all elements of conjecture of facts, taken upon its face, is in complete harmony with the letter and spirit of the Holman rule. If the Chair be in doubt, then that doubt should be resolved in favor of the Treasury, and the resolving of that doubt in favor of the Treasury will but give the Committee of the Whole an opportunity to pass upon the paragraph. We ask no undue advantage. I am here presenting the case. If the Chair rules the paragraph to be in order, it is still before the House for its decision. No rights can be lost. I maintain that under every precedent, under every right of justice, the paragraph is in order and should be sustained by the Chair. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing as a matter of fact on the face of the bill which shows the amount of expenditures which will have to be made for these power presses.

Mr. MADDEN. There is nothing on the face of the bill showing that there will be any expenditure. It may well be that there will be no expenditures.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Is it not true that these printing presses will be set up as an asset of the Government, so that in one sense it is not a total expenditure—a loss of money?

Mr. MADDEN. It would not be any loss of money if the appropriation were made and the money expended. It would not be a loss because within three months after they are installed they will have paid for themselves. There is nothing on the face of the paragraph to show that we are spending any money.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. There being no limitation on the committee depriving it of the right to appropriate money to purchase these presses, the only legislation, as I understand it, that is in this bill is legislation directing the Secretary of the Treasury to discharge certain employees.

Mr. MADDEN. That is practically all.

Mr. TINCHER. And the gentleman thinks that that comes within the Holman rule?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Does the reduction of 218 employees take into consideration the number of other employees required to run the 58 power presses?

Mr. MADDEN. It does.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, what I shall say does not indicate how I shall vote on the main proposition, if the Chair holds it to be in order, because I do not know the facts, and I have an open mind in the matter. This is rather an important matter from the standpoint of construction and precedent. I call the attention of the Chair, and I am sure he is familiar with it, to the principle that in construing the Holman rule with reference to whether or not there is an actual reduction proposed on the face of the bill, this rule has uniform approval in the consideration of that question:

The reduction of expenditures must appear as a necessary result in order to bring the amendment or provision within the exception to the rule. It is not sufficient that such reduction would probably or would in the opinion of the Chair result therefrom.

If the Chair will refer to volume 4 of Hinds' Precedents he will find a number of decisions. I remember one especially, a very learned decision, by our late colleague, the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. Saunders. I imagine that the difficulty which confronts the Chair ruling on this question has been suggested by one or two questions that he has asked Members on the floor who have been discussing it. While it is undoubtedly true that the last paragraph of the section does come within the provisions of the Holman rule, inasmuch as it specifically provides for the discharge of a certain number of employees that would necessarily involve a retrenchment in expenditures, and the amount carried in the bill, yet at the same time in the body of the text of the provision itself we find the provision wherein the Secretary is directed to dispense with the use of not less than 198 hand-printing presses and to substitute therefor not more than 58 power plate-printing presses.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And further, to print the fronts and the backs of the notes, and that is a complete change of law.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am discussing it only from the standpoint of retrenchment.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I not suggest to the gentleman that the very point that he has just made differentiates this case from the precedents cited.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Absolutely, so that in view of this uniform rule of construction I do not think the precedent cited by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], the decision of Chairman CRISP, will stand up under proper analysis. The precedents hold that the text of the provision itself must be so clear and unambiguous that no other possible or logical conclusion may be ultimately drawn by the Chair in construing it except that it means absolute retrenchment. While the language provides on the one hand for the discharge of a certain number of men and a certain number of instrumentalities, at the same time in the same paragraph there is provision for the installation of other instrumentalities, which, for aught appearing, as far as the construction of the Chair is concerned, might cost infinitely more than the amount of the retrenchment.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman, I think, in his statement assumed that it would cost money to transpose the work from the hand presses to the power presses.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, now let me answer that.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman read that into his statement, I think.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think it is rather a violent assumption upon the part of this committee to want the Chair to infer that the acquisition by the United States Government of 58 additional power presses can be acquired without the expenditure of any money. And, gentlemen, I do not believe the gentleman from Illinois would intend the Chair to put that character of construction upon his language.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, the clause in question consists of four distinct provisions. The first provision is this: The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to dispense with 198 hand plate-printing presses. The second provision is to substitute therefor 58 power plate-printing presses. The third provision is as to the manner of printing, and the fourth provision is as to the reduction of employees. Now, it is important that this section contains these four provisions because of this fact. The only exception to the general rule embodied in paragraph 2 of Rule XXI, upon which the committee relies to escape the rule that they can not legislate, is contained in the second sentence:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order except as being germane to the subject matter of the bill, and shall retrench—

And so forth.

Now, the precedents hold this first, that every provision in a subject which is being considered must be within the rules, and it is not sufficient to say that the fourth provision of this paragraph does retrench. Let us for a moment concede that is true, which I do not concede at all; but let us for a moment concede that that is true. That does not make this a proper subject of legislation. It does not exempt from the provisions of the general rule forbidding this committee to legislate, and I read on this subject the following:

To a clause appropriating for the foreign mail service an amendment reducing the appropriation, and in addition repealing the act known as the "subsidy act," was held not in order because the repealing of this act was not germane to the appropriation bill, and to be in order both branches of the amendment must be germane to the bill.

Now, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in his argument says that the third provision, directing as to the manner of printing, changes existing law, and that must be within the Holman rule as well as the provision reducing the number of employees. It is also provided that they shall not use existing plates but substitute new plates, and those two things change the existing laws. So there can be nothing except the fourth provision of this paragraph that is within the Holman rule. Let us come, secondly, to the question of retrenchment. The rule is not that it is the duty of the Chairman to see if he can find that the provision results in economizing, because he is convinced of the merits of the proposition, and to compute and add and subtract and use mathematics to demonstrate that there is retrenchment. That is not the rule at all. You are not considering the merits of the question. You are considering simply and solely the question of parliamentary law, and you have no right to consider or deal with the question of the merits of the case that is before you.

We do not know what the merits are. They have not been discussed; and the rule is plain—simply that the Chairman must find, not as a matter of deduction but of necessity, that there is a retrenchment. Let us take the question of retrenchment as argued by the chairman of the committee. He does not claim there is anything within the bill which shows that there will be a retrenchment. He says that reducing the number of employees will result in the reduction of expenditures. He does not say what the expenditures for the new power machines will amount to, and it does not appear upon the face of the bill. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations says to the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole that he can turn to the estimates in two different years and contrast the estimates of last year with the appropriations of this year, seeking the result in that way. Of course that is absurd. Of course the expenses of the Treasury may be totally different one year from another year. Of course that would not be any light by which to guide you to your decision at all. Of course you can not consider that. You can consider only this bill which is before you. You must reach a decision that it would necessarily and plainly, upon its face, reduce expenditures. So it seems to me that, first, because the first three provisions of this bill are legislation and are not included within the Holman rule, and are entirely distinct from and not a part of the fourth provision, the point of order is well taken. And, secondly, because it does not appear on the face of the bill that a reduction will be made, the point of order must be sustained also. As was said by the gentleman from Alabama, I do not intend to indicate at all my position upon the merits of this question, which, as well said, is not before the House, but I am simply speaking to the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I judge from the arguments which have been made by those in favor of the point of order that they are basing their argument wholly on the fact that the paragraph in question provides that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to substitute for the hand presses that are to be dispensed with not more than 58 power plate-printing presses. The argument is that notwithstanding the actual and definite reduction in the number of officers of the Government, employees of the Government, coming properly within that term, that there is a probable expenditure involved in executing the provision for power presses, and that therefore it does not appear clearly and definitely from the paragraph that there is to be a reduction in expenditures. Gentlemen have evidently lost sight of the fact that there is nothing in this provision that authorizes the purchase of any power presses.

If this paragraph were adopted there is no possible way without subsequent action whereby the Treasury could be charged with a single penny of expenditure on account of power presses.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. You get that on page 35 of the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, yes; but we are discussing this paragraph, and the gentlemen who have been arguing in behalf of the point of order have been insisting that this must appear upon the face of the bill. I agree with them as to that to a certain extent. They now shift their position. We are assuming their position on the basis of the argument they advance their contention is not sound. There is nothing in this paragraph that authorizes an additional expenditure. Everything contained in the paragraph is a reduction, a definite reduction by the number of persons, and the paragraph that has been so frequently referred to is simply a part of the change of law. It is a part of the new legislation that this paragraph seeks to put into effect authorizing the use of power presses, but it does not provide for the purchase of any power presses, and the Congress might not provide for the purchase of power presses. As some one has suggested, the Government may be in possession of power presses now. The power presses might be secured in exchange for hand presses. One might indulge in all sorts of speculation along that line, but the Chair is not justified in indulging in any speculation in the matter at all. No expenditure is authorized and therefore speculation as to expenditure is not justified.

That provision has been emphasized by everyone who has spoken in favor of the point of order. It does not provide for expenditure. None is provided for in this paragraph.

Now, there is no question in the mind of anyone, I imagine, who is familiar with the rule but that the last three lines of this paragraph bring it clearly within the Holman rule.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment; and there is nothing else in the paragraph that in any way modifies that clear and definite provision that there shall be a reduction in the expenditures by the reduction in the number of employees.

Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I would like to ask the gentleman how many of these plate printers are employed now?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will state it to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think that is necessary.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. What has been the reduction in the number of plate printers in the past year? This bill proposes to reduce them by 218.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think that is a pertinent question.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will say to the gentleman that about 100 were reduced this past year.

Mr. MONDELL. I am discussing the point of order, not the merits of the proposition.

The point of order is that this paragraph does not come under the Holman rule, and does not come under the Holman rule because, among other things, they say it authorizes the use of certain machines. That does not necessarily involve any expenditure. It will involve no expenditure unless later the committee may see fit to make provision for it; and I insist, as the gentlemen who have discussed the matter heretofore on the other side have insisted, that the Chair shall not speculate as to what the Committee or the House may do later.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I do.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I notice the words "substitute therefor." I have been much interested in the argument of the gentleman. Does the gentleman believe that the language to substitute one machine for another would justify the director, if he found he did not have the machine, in going out in the market and buying it?

Mr. MONDELL. Not at all.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That is a question.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, not at all. I think that if the gentleman from Illinois will reflect a moment he will agree with me that that would not justify the purchase of a machine without an appropriation. That is simply authority. If the Secretary has the machines, if he can secure the machines, if Congress gives him the machines, he may substitute them. That is simply authority to substitute. That is a part of the change of existing law, authorized and justified under the Holman rule, by the provision in this paragraph that reduces the number of plate printers.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Well, if the director, it seems to me, can go out and buy machines under this authority, that would be one thing; but if he can not, and this is merely a substitution of machines that he already has, that would be another thing and this would not apply.

Mr. MONDELL. He can not do that without authority, without an appropriation. Every discussion of the Holman rule that we have had emphasizes the importance of a liberal construction of the rule, and the construction of the rule has invariably been liberal; so liberal that I have been inclined to take the other side in one or two cases that have been referred to here. Occupants of the chair have invariably held that there must be a liberal construction of the rule. That liberality of construction has gone to the extent of holding in order provisions repealing important statutes by the reduction of an appropriation in the sum of $1. The construction of the rule has been invariably a liberal one.

Further, gentlemen on the other side are not entirely accurate when they say that the reduction must be clearly evidenced in the provision itself. That is true in a certain sense, but there was a decision—for instance, one of the early decisions under the Holman rule—under which a provision was held to be in order that did not in any way on its face indicate a reduction. It limited the number of pensioners under the pension law, and the chairman was charged with the responsibility of knowing the provisions of the act amended, and it was necessary for him to consult those provisions in order to decide whether the amendment was in order.

But the Chair is not in this case called upon to speculate or make inquiries. The matter is plain on its face. In a case decided by Chairman Saunders, of Virginia, where a reduction in the number of cavalry regiments was to be effected, the argument was made that there would necessarily be some incidental increases in expenditure along with the probable decreases, and the Chair did take that into consideration and said that while it is true there might be some increase of expenditure along certain lines, there would unquestionably be a net reduction in expenditures. In some of these cases the Chair has been called upon to be informed in regard to the provisions of other acts and in other cases to balance as between probable expenditures and probable retrenchment. But in this case the Chair is not called upon to exercise his judgment in the matter of probable increase and probable decrease or to inform himself in regard to matters outside the bill.

He may confine himself to the provisions of the paragraph directly before him; and he will find there is not a provision in the paragraph that necessarily and of itself increases by a single penny the Federal expenditure. On the other hand, there is a clear, definite, unquestioned reduction of expenditures resulting from a very large reduction of the officers or employees of the Government.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Rule, rule!

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. This bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations, under the heading of Bureau of Engraving and Printing, has this paragraph:

The Secretary of the Treasury is directed, as soon as possible after the approval of this act and not later than September 30, 1923, to dispense with the use of not less than 196 hand plate-printing presses in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and to substitute therefor not more than 58 power plate-printing presses, and hereafter he is authorized to print from plates of more than four subjects each upon power presses the fronts and backs of any paper money, bonds, or other printed matter now or hereafter authorized to be executed at such bureau; and the Secretary shall in the performance of the duty and exercise of the authority placed upon him by this paragraph, reduce the number of persons employed in the operation of plate-printing presses by not less than 218.

To that paragraph the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] makes the point of order that it changes existing law and violates the provision of clause 2 of Rule XXI, which says:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

Then there is an additional proviso which is not involved. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] does not dispute the proposition that the proviso changes existing law, but seeks to justify the paragraph upon the ground that it shows upon its face that it is a retrenchment in expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of the amounts of money covered by the bill.

The Chair in passing on this rule is governed by the face of the bill and the law and the rule.

The rule laid down by Speaker Kerr in this respect was as follows:

In considering the question whether an amendment operates to retrench expenditures, the Chair can look only to what is properly of record before him—that is, the pending bill, the specific section under consideration, the law of the land, so far as it is applicable, and the parliamentary rules and practice of the House; and beyond these he is not permitted to go in deciding the question.

The Chair takes it that no one will seriously contend that that is not the rule. The point of order is directed to the whole paragraph. Of course, if there is any part of the paragraph that is not in order, the paragraph must go out. It is all involved in one proposition, which is obviously an attempt at "retrenching expenditures" under the rule.

You will note by the language of the rule that it is not enough that the measure reduces the number and salary of the officers of the United States or reduces the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury. It must "retrench expenditures" by doing that. The many rulings on this question are fairly uniform. They all hold that when, on the face of the bill, the proposed new legislation retrenches expenditures in one of these three ways the point of order should be overruled, and the rule is generally laid down that the construction should be liberal in favor of retrenchment of governmental expenditures.

The noted parliamentarian, the late Mr. Mann, in arguing this question in a case which has not been cited here, but which the Chair thinks is very much in point, laid down what seems to me the rules governing the decision on this point of order.

There was an amendment offered which provided for a vast expenditure for an asphalt machine, and also provided in the same amendment that there should be a decrease in the expense of doing asphalt work. In discussing the different phases of the matter Mr. Mann made this statement:

The original Holman rule provided—

"Except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures."

We put a limitation on that. It must retrench expenditures in certain ways now. It is not sufficient to say now that a proposition shall retrench expenditures or must retrench expenditures by the reduction of the amount of the salary of an officer, by the reduction of the compensation, or by the reduction of the amounts of money covered by the bill. I am not referring to the proviso yet. So, if an amendment was out of order under the original Holman rule, it is out of order under this provision, because this is a mere limitation upon the original Holman rule.

While it is not necessary at this time to discuss the proviso in the Holman rule, because that question is not presented, I take it that there the same rule applies as to the retrenchment of expenditure under the original Holman rule, because now a committee is authorized, which has jurisdiction of the subject matter, to offer an amendment on an appropriation bill which shall retrench expenditures. But the basic ruling of all has been that of Speaker Kerr, that the retrenchment of expenditures could not be a matter of argument. It is not a matter for the Chair to determine whether the transfer of the Indian Office to the War Department is a retrenchment of expenditure. It is not for the Chair to determine whether the construction of an asphalt plant is a retrenchment of expenditure. That is an argument pure and simple. People may differ about that. The Chair can only act upon the proposition which is presented on the face of that proposition.

Now, coming to this provision, to which the point of order is directed: It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to substitute 58 power plate-printing presses for 196 hand plate-printing presses, and also to discharge not less than 218 employees. Of course it is admitted that it is going to require the expenditure of money to purchase the presses, but following the ingenious argument that the Government may already have the printing presses on hand, it seems to the Chair that the Chair is unable to determine as a matter of law that that will effect retrenchment of expenditures, so far as the face of the bill is concerned. It certainly may require the expenditure of a vast sum of money to buy printing presses. It may not, but it may require it. They are to be substituted for the others. There is going to be a change in the cost of the overhead with reference to printing presses. That is clear. The amount of that cost is entirely conjectural, is subject to argument, and depends upon extraneous matters not in the record. I asked the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] if there were 15 men discharged whether it would be subject to a point of order. I think if 5 men were to be discharged it clearly would not be, and the Chair is unable to go up to the point where he can say what number of employees to be discharged makes the provision in order. It would require the Chair to go out and try the question of fact, which depends on statements which might vary, and require the Chair to determine questions of fact, weigh evidence, and search the record in the hearing, which would be a dangerous precedent. Where one paragraph containing new legislation provides in one part for a discharge of employees, which will mean a retrenchment, and to bring about this particular retrenchment substantial expenditures will with reasonable certainty be made and the amount of those expenditures is not capable of definite ascertainment, the Chair is unable to hold that the net result will retrench expenditures. The Chair is of the opinion that this paragraph is subject to the point of order, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, with great respect for the Chair I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman withhold that?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the gentleman from Illinois has an amendment that may obviate that, and I withdraw the appeal.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 32, after line 10, insert: "Hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to print from plates of more than four subjects each upon power presses the fronts and backs of any paper money, bonds, or other printed matter, now or hereafter authorized to be executed at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; and the Secretary shall, in the exercise of the authority conferred upon him by this paragraph, reduce the number of persons employed in the operation of plate-printing presses by not less than 218."

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that this is legislation and repealing existing law, and not in order on an appropriation bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I submit the question without any argument.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair wishes, I will read the existing law which appropriates for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing——

The CHAIRMAN. There is no doubt about its changing existing law. If the gentleman wishes to argue the point of order, the Chair will hear him.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, according to the testimony of the Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, they now have or have had an average of 588 men as the maximum number of plate printers in the bureau. I am informed by men who are employed in that bureau that there has been a gradual reduction since the close of the Great War—an average reduction of about 100 men per annum. So the amendment which provides that there should be a reduction of 218 men does not show that there is any retrenchment of expenses, because, Mr. Chairman, if during the past year there has been a reduction of 100 men in the bureau employed as plate printers, it is certainly not clear that during the coming year, by resignation, death, and otherwise, there will not be a reduction of fully the number mentioned in this amendment.

I wish to call the Chair's attention to the fact that there has been no substantive proof offered that there will be any reduction in the expenditures by this amendment. The testimony before the committee of the director was that it would result in a saving. But I call the Chair's attention further to the fact that during the past few years there has been an increase in the appropriation provided for the detection of counterfeit money of fully 300 per cent. One of the safeguards that has been provided by Congress is in having the front and back of money engraved, and it has minimized to a large extent successful passing of counterfeit money. Notwithstanding that fact there has been an increase during the past few years of 300 per cent in the amount of money appropriated for the detection of counterfeits. There has been nothing here to show that this amendment will result in the reduction of expenses in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, this last amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois is practically the same as the provision in the bill. It authorizes them to print on power presses. That implies the getting of the presses to replace the hand presses. They cut that out in this amendment, but it is as much implied as it was before. The amendment is therefore subject to the same point of order.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the point of order. The proposition now is to cut out the first two provisions of the paragraph and to leave the third and fourth provisions. The third and fourth provisions are entirely distinct. The third provision is that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to print in a certain way, and the fourth provision is for the number of employees.

Now, it seems to me that the case as now presented has been precisely determined, and that is this:

To a clause appropriating for the Foreign Mail Service an amendment reducing the appropriation, and in addition repealing the act known as the "subsidy act," was held not in order, because the repealing of this act was not germane to the appropriation bill; and that to be in order both branches of the amendment must be germane to the bill.

Now, let us assume for the purpose of the argument that the fourth provision is germane and that it does effect a reduction or retrenchment, to use the exact language. The third provision is an entirely different thing. As in the case I have stated, it repeals substantive law, it is entirely distinct from, it is not inseparably connected with, and it in fact has no relation to the fourth provision. It must stand on its own basis. It has no reference to the exception of paragraph 2, Rule XXI. It nakedly and solely repeals substantive law, and being so, it is clearly within the citation. The burden is upon the Appropriations Committee. The Appropriations Committee must show that they are within the exception. The burden is not on the one who raises the point of order. They must show that they have the right to legislate—that they can repeal the legislation. Because there are two distinct provisions, one reducing expenditure and one repealing legislation, and the one which repeals the legislation is distinct and can not stand, and because there is this vice in the paragraph, it follows that as part of the provision is vicious the whole paragraph fails, and therefore the point of order should be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] reads as follows:

Hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to print from plates of more than four subjects each upon power presses the fronts and backs of any paper money, bonds, or other printed matter, now or hereafter authorized to be executed at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; and the Secretary shall, in the exercise of the authority conferred upon him by this paragraph, reduce the number of persons employed in the operation of plate-printing presses by not less than 218.

The Chair is of opinion that the amendment comes within the ruling of Chairman CRISP, which holds that where the retrenchment is apparent upon its face the amendment is in order. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard upon the amendment. The subject matter in the proposed amendment may be the proper method of printing the bank notes in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, providing, as it does, for the substitution of power presses for hand presses; but this is certainly not the proper method of enacting this legislation or any other legislation.

The House has concentrated in the hands of the Appropriations Committee the very great power and responsibility of making all the appropriations for all the departments, and it has reserved to the legislative committees of the House the function of considering and presenting to the House bills dealing with legislative matters.

In conformity with this practice, the Committee on Printing has repeatedly considered bills providing for the proper method of printing the Federal currency and protecting the public against fraud and counterfeiting.

In permanent law it has provided that the backs of the bank notes should be printed on power presses and that the front of the note should be printed on hand presses, from plates made by skilled engravers.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I have only five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I want to ask a question.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I would like to make a brief statement if the gentleman will excuse me. This matter, as I have stated, has been repeatedly before the Committee on Printing, and in 1912 they reported to the House and the House adopted the present law providing for the methods of printing bank notes.

On last January the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MADDEN, himself introduced a bill providing for the discontinuance of hand presses and for the purchase of power presses. The Printing Committee held hearings on that bill, but no action was taken thereon.

We now find the measure brought in as a paragraph in an appropriation bill making provision for the expenses of the Treasury Department during the ensuing fiscal year.

No one, except the Director of the Bureau, appeared in support of the proposition, and those who are opposed to it were given no opportunity to be heard, notwithstanding the fact that a great convention of bankers sitting in the city of New York a few weeks ago passed resolutions calling upon Congress and the Federal authorities to resume the same high quality of material and of mechanical production of paper money that obtained prior to the war, in order to provide the largest possible protection against counterfeiting.

This resolution, adopted on October 4, 1922, is as follows:

Whereas recent reports show unusual activity in the making and circulating of counterfeit money: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the convention requests the Secretary of the Treasury to resume the same high quality of materials and of mechanical production of paper money that obtained prior to the war, in order to provide the largest possible protection against counterfeiting; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Secretary of the Treasury, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the United States Senate, and the chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives.

Resolution adopted by the National Bank Division of the American Bankers' Association, Tuesday, October 4, 1922.

Resolution adopted by the entire American Bankers' Association, Wednesday, October 5, 1922.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. That is what I wanted to ask the gentleman about—to have him point out in what way this affects it. It would have a whole lot to do with my vote.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I shall proceed in my own way and will come to that in a moment. This is a matter of transcendent importance, and it should receive the proper consideration of the legislative committee of Congress authorized to deal with this question, and it should receive the proper consideration of the House. I contend that it is impossible to do it in the way that this subject matter is brought before this body, without any evidence other than the bureau's testimony before the committee and without careful inquiry into the methods used in the production of currency, and as it now has a bill before it dealing with this proposition, it should not be brought in as a rider on an appropriation bill.

The director of the bureau testified before this committee that there was a daily average of 588 plate printers employed in the bureau, and I am reliably informed by men who are employed in this bureau that this number has been reduced to the number of about 100 a year, so that this matter is working itself out, and that if this is the proper method of printing bank notes it will be brought before the House in a proper way in due time.

I call the attention of the committee to the publication I hold in my hand, known as the National Counterfeit Detector, a journal for bankers and merchants in the United States and Canada, published by Grant, Bushnell & Co., publishers, of New York City, which is accepted by the Treasury Department as an authority on matters of counterfeiting.

It calls attention to three new counterfeit notes which have been discovered and are being circulated freely.

The first is a $5 Indian-head silver certificate, check letter "D," faceplate No. 22. The second is a $10 national-bank note on the First National Bank of Ozone Park, N. Y., series of 1902, portrait of former President McKinley, and the third is a $20 national-bank note on the Grand Rapids City National Bank, of Grand Rapids, Mich., with a portrait of McCullough. It calls attention to the fact that the backs of the above three notes are of light green, giving them a washed appearance, and that they are very dangerous counterfeits.

I call attention to the fact that the backs of the notes are printed on power presses. They also call attention to a Federal reserve note on the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, Ga., check letter "H," faceplate No. 83, and call attention that this is printed on genuine paper, and that the genuine paper is obtained by bleaching all print from a bill of smaller denomination, possibly a one-dollar note, so that the statement made by the chairman of the committee that the Government could depend on the quality of the paper for protection against counterfeiting is shown to give no security.

I also call attention to this supplement, giving a list of the counterfeit notes in circulation throughout the United States.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Where are those power presses manufactured, and what do they cost?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. It is provided later in the bill that about 60 of them shall cost $355,000.

Mr. LAZARO. Where are they manufactured?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I do not know who manufactures them or who proposes to sell them to the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. If this is good legislation, if it is protection for the Government, if it is to be acted on here to-day in the appropriation bill, I think that the members of the committee, chairman, and the ranking minority member should be fair with the House in presenting to it the statements made to them before the committee. The chairman of this committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], stated on the floor that the Chief of the Secret Service had testified before his committee that the counterfeiting of a power-press note is no easier than that of a hand press, and I quote his statement herewith:

The counterfeiting of a power-press note is no easier than of a hand-press note, so the Chief of the Secret Service testified. Most of the counterfeits are being made by photographic processes.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] substantiated the statement made by the chairman of the committee; and I have the hearings containing the statement of Mr. W. H. Moran, Chief of the Secret Service of the Treasury Department, and there is not a single word in his testimony that shows that he ever made any such statement. On the contrary, he stated there was a great increase in the counterfeiting of bank notes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Moran did testify to that. He testified to it outside of the record. I did not make any misstatement, and neither did the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If he testified outside of the record, it is not a matter to be reported here, and I make the point of order against the statement.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman will read my remarks he will find that I never made any statement to the effect that the Chief of the Secret Service had so testified before the committee. I made the statement that he had stated, and I repeat it upon the best of authority, that the use of the power press would not make counterfeiting of currency any easier.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I do not know anything about what the Chief of the Secret Service stated outside of the hearings, but in the hearings he stated that counterfeiting and forgery were unusually large.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman has made a statement with respect to a statement that I made which puts me in a false position. I made no such statement on the floor of the House. I did not say that he so stated in the hearings, and I think I am entitled to a correction on the part of the gentleman.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Just a moment. I am trying to get the gentleman's language. If I misquoted him, I withdraw the statement. I do reiterate the statement that the chief of the bureau who testified before this committee stated that there had been an increase in counterfeiting, and I quote the language of the chairman of the committee to the Chief of the Secret Service when he asked him this question:

The CHAIRMAN. Has there been any increase in the work of your bureau in lines other than counterfeiting?

Showing clearly in the mind of the chairman when he asked this question that there had been an increase in counterfeiting and had so been presented to the committee.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Did this relate to counterfeiting of money or labels for bottles?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The counterfeiting of money.

Mr. MADDEN. Counterfeiting of checks and forgeries of every kind.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I notice that Mr. Moran, Chief of the Secret Service, testified at considerable length before the committee. But I find nothing at all in his testimony bearing upon the particular matter we are discussing, the matter of substituting power presses for hand presses. Of course, I do not dispute the statement of the gentleman from Illinois and my friend from Tennessee that Mr. Moran may have made some statement outside of the hearings, but he certainly made none before the committee that afford any basis for any action we may take. The only statement was by Mr. Hill, supplemented by Mr. Clark, who, I believe, is one of his subordinates. My difficulty is that the case has been very casually and insufficiently considered.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. This legislation will reduce the quality and high standards of Government currency and securities, which has been protected by law as far back as 1887, and when power presses were first introduced.

On August 24, 1912, after years of consideration Congress decided to print the back—or green—of all paper money on power presses, realizing that in retaining the printing of the face of currency by the better method of hand presses they were providing a certain measure of security against counterfeiting.

The World War, with its excessive demands on all resources of Government activities, had a corresponding effect on the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and the enormous demands for Liberty bonds, in addition to the current demands of the Treasury Department, made quantity production of paramount issue rather than quality, it being contended that the short-term bonds could be replaced by a higher quality of security that would baffle the skill of the expert counterfeiters.

As has been pointed out, the comparison of the currency situation in Europe to-day with the printing presses working over time and the admitted flood of paper money and the ease with which it may be imitated should be a warning against this at this time, and which may lead to such conditions in this country. Surely the American Bankers' Association should be the best judge of this, when they adopted the resolution heretofore referred to at a great convention held in New York City.

I insert here the statement of Mr. W. H. Moran, Chief of the United States Secret Service, on November 13, 1922, before the Subcommittee on Appropriations:

Mr. MORAN. The service is primarily charged with the suppression of counterfeiting and the protection of the obligations and the securities of the Government. In addition to that we are charged with the protection of the President, his immediate family, and the President elect. The work of the service has increased in the last three or four years to a greater extent, probably, than ever in its history. Counterfeiters and forgers, I suppose, in common with the other criminals along other lines, are unusually active. We have had more different counterfeit issues in the last year than in two years previously, and while the quality of those counterfeits is not as good as in years past, they are sufficiently deceptive to pass on unsuspecting storekeepers in the hurry of business. We do not hope to wholly suppress their activities, of course; the best we can do is to reduce to a minimum the output of counterfeit money.

I again reiterate what I have previously stated, that this matter should be dealt with with deliberation and investigation, and should be brought before this House by the proper legislative committee, and I hope that the amendment proposed by the chairman of the committee will not be adopted.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, in discussing and voting on this amendment we had better let our minds wander back home to our constituents, to the neglected and despised taxpayer, including the farmer, the laboring man, the professional man, the school-teacher, and all of those people of our land in whom we profess to have such an abiding faith and interest. If we vote right on this proposition, perhaps those various groups will accumulate more of the products of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing than they would if we did not keep a surplus number of employees on the public pay roll; for when it comes to the last analysis of the bill—we need not delude ourselves with any idea that we are going to prevent counterfeiting or are going to improve the service—it is simply for the purpose of keeping 218 or more unnecessary employees—consumers, if you will—on the roll, keep them in Government employ, at the expense of the people, or whether we are going to let them go into the ranks of the producers and amount to something in the building up of the country and its industries.

Mr. Chairman, this thing has been a disgrace to the country and an injustice to the people for at least 10 years. All over the country, wherever you go, you are constantly asked why are not modern business methods introduced in carrying on the Government, and in the inaugural of our President he said that one of the chief desires he had in mind was to have more business in Government and less Government in business. I think we can subscribe on both sides of this House to that sentiment. How can we have more business in Government if we are going to refuse to adopt the methods and machinery used in private business? In order to give employment to the maximum number and properly pad the pay rolls let us abandon the typewriter and write all our letters in long hand, cut the telephone and telegraph wires and send all our communications by messenger, set all our type by hand, scrap the automobiles and railroads and travel by stagecoach, restrict production and block the path of progress and invention, so the favored Government employee may hold his or her job. It would be better, if there were not one single dollar of saving under this amendment, to get rid of these men.

I do not call them loafers, that would not be the right designation, but they are unnecessary and unfairly employed at the expense of other people and an economic loss to production. In my district 3,500 men have been discharged from employment in the Charlestown Navy Yard. Why should these men without a job support 218 men who can go out and get another job probably somewhere in the vicinity of Washington, if not in Washington itself, when they themselves are in serious need of employment. Why should the farmers in the gentleman's district, who have been complaining about the readjustment burdens they have had to carry, why should they carry on their backs 218 surplus employees?

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman allow me to answer that right now?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I would rather contine my argument before I yield. I want to present for your consideration a cartoon which appeared in one of the daily papers not so long ago. It was a pyramid of men, one standing upon the shoulders of the other. The fourth and top figure was that of a soldier, and his motto was, "I fight for all." He stood on the shoulders of the bishop, and the bishop's motto was, "I pray for all." And he in turn stood upon the shoulders of the justice, and the justice said, "I plead for all," and down at the bottom of the heap, with sweat pouring down his face into the dust at his feet was the laboring men, the backbone of this Republic of ours, and his motto was "I pay for all." Gentlemen, I want you to consider this proposition. You have no right to keep men in the employment of the Government unnecessarily while the man at the bottom of the heap is paying for all. Before you vote for this amendment let us think of the poor, despised, neglected taxpayers who, in the last analysis, be the consumers and workers of this country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am in opposition to this amendment which has been offered in lieu of the matter ruled out upon a point of order. This substitute is to all intents and purposes the same as the paragraph that went out, and yet by the change of a few words it escapes. In effect it says that "hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to print from plates," meaning print Treasury notes on both sides. The "hereafter" makes it permanent legislation and a substitute for the legislation of 1912. Then it says, "and the Secretary of the Treasury is to reduce the number of plate printers by 218."

That is the small part of it, but that is what lets the thing in under the Holman rule. Two hundred hand-press note printers will step out under this legislation on an appropriation bill, and a large number of power-press plate printers will be employed in place of them. We will buy the presses, we will eliminate a few places, perhaps 50, and after it is all done we shall have on both sides of your highly sensitized, silk-threaded, high-priced paper common printing-press money. That may be all right, but where is there any discussion of both sides? When was any notice given to anyone?

What plate printer has been heard on this proposition? What becomes of the Printing Committee's promise to hear them after the distinguished chairman of the grand committee should have been heard?

But more important than whether the United States shall go into the printing-press money business, along with several of the countries of Europe, is the fact that the all-powerful Committee on Appropriations sees fit to usurp the rights of still one more of the small committees. I have protested; I continue to protest. Every subcommittee of the grand Appropriations Committee takes a crack at will at some poor little third-rate committee, knocks it cold, and leaves it gasping for breath. If the Holman rule does not serve the purpose, then the words are changed, but not the intent.

New Members are cajoled into believing that they are given desirable places when they are placed on these minor committees, and yet when these committees try to perform they find their public bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar—usually so far down the list that they can not be reached in the lifetime of an ordinary session—or given the privilege of being called up on some Calendar Wednesday, which said Calendar Wednesday comes around about as often as the 29th of February, owing to the disposition of the leaders to dispense with it as if it were a stench in the nostrils of regular procedure.

Mr. Chairman, how long are Members going to sit here in their places and permit one grand committee to usurp the rights of all the others? Must every well-taken point of order be beaten by the clever jockeying of words? To-day it is your little Committee on Printing that gets a smash on the nose. When that committee called a meeting to consider the bill embracing this plate-printing matter the proponent of the bill did not appear. Your Committee on Printing is called upon freely enough to do all of the little undesirable odds and ends. Only to-day we had before us a calendar containing 200 items. All had to be gone over carefully. Occasionally a member of that committee is privileged to rise in his seat and move, Mr. Chairman, that a President's message be made a public document. Then, as a reward, we may sit here and see put over in an appropriation bill an item which is three-fourths legislation and one-fourth Holman rule—an item that brings us to the use of printing-press Government notes in the interest of petty economy, that discharges 218 men and forces the hiring of perhaps 175 different men, probably at a higher pay. You call it "Holman economy."

You wonder why you are called "a cowardly Congress" when you sit here supinely from day to day and see your rights slipping away. You were promised that under the Budget plan, if you consented to a grand Appropriations Committee of 35 members, all legislation on appropriation bills would cease. You were promised that all other committees would be fully protected. And have they been? No. Half of your committees have been stripped until the few members who attend the meetings sit around and twirl their thumbs waiting for quorums to appear. And if you attend the sessions of the subcommittees of the grand Appropriations Committee you find two and perhaps three members representing both parties doing the whole work. The departments are there in force, and the words of their representatives are reported and considered, but if you want a single item considered in any subcommittee's bill you have to be either an extra strong or an extra plausible member, and the chances are that even then you will not get far. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, until 1912 the Bureau of Engraving and Printing had the very right that we are now seeking to restore. It was taken away from it in 1912, and repeatedly since then for just one purpose, and that is to comply with union demands and keep three times as many employees on the pay roll as are necessary to do this particular work.

Now, I am going to bring you right down to the very keynote of the whole proposition. In the hearings Mr. MADDEN asked, on page 335, how much this amendment would save, and in reply Mr. Clark, a bureau official, said it would save $746,555 a year now, and ultimately it would annually save $1,377,300. Here is the keynote. Mr. MADDEN asked this question on page 334:

> Why don't you use the power presses?
> Mr. CLARK. We would like to.

What kept him from it? I will tell you, it was our union friends who now sit in that gallery, watching us, who said to this Government, "You can not do it because we are not going to give up our jobs."

Then Mr. MADDEN again asked the question, "Why do you not do that, Mr. Clark?" And the answer was, "We are waiting for Mr. MADDEN's bill to go through." And my good friend from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON], with whom I am very glad to work, and whom I frequently follow here, asks, "Why do not you let his committee bring in the Madden bill?" The Madden bill has been before his committee, sleeping the sleep of death for seven long months. That is why. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It is only fair to say that Congress has not been in session all that time.

Mr. BLANTON. It has been in session much of the time, and we met frequently from day to day, affording plenty of time to have brought in the Madden bill and to have passed it, if the committee had forced its consideration.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. You can not get a bill like that considered through the calendar.

Mr. BLANTON. I know it is sometimes difficult. But we have got that very proposition here before us now. Why not consider it now? It is brought in by the Committee on Appropriations. Now is the time and place.

Why is not the head of the bureau down there willing to use the power presses now? Our bunch of plate printers you now see up in the gallery will not let them. I am in favor of the interests of the whole people of the United States rather than the interests of any class. I will help any of these employees to get another job. I will work for them as willingly as any other Member here to get them new jobs. They will not lose their present jobs down there for practically a whole year. They have nearly a whole year in which to look around and get other jobs. I have helped many men in Washington to find new civilian jobs. Men whom I have helped here in Washington will tell you that. I do not care whether they come from my own State or not; I do not care where they come from; I go with them and try to help them get new civilian positions.

Yesterday's Post stated that a lot of these plate printers were here in the Capitol day before yesterday, up yonder in the gallery, in the effort to beat this provision. They were not at work day before yesterday. Yesterday afternoon they were again in that gallery, and the very minute that the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] had this matter postponed until to-day you saw the whole bunch of them get up and leave. Now they are up there again. This is the third day that they have been idle. They are here to prevent this legislation from going through. They are here in behalf of a class against the interests of the whole people. I am not afraid to get up here and speak in their presence. I never say anything behind their backs that I would not say to their faces. Personally I have friendly sympathy for them all.

Mr. KING. Why do you not go up in the gallery?

Mr. BLANTON. I face them daily everywhere. They can go into my district and try to beat me; but I am going to speak, so long as I am a Member of this House, in the interest of the whole people of the whole United States, no matter if every union in Washington gets up in that gallery against me. [Applause.]

Mr. KING rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that my good friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] takes every occasion to make appeals to the galleries of this House. The galleries have been very kind to the gentleman from Texas and have frequently applauded him here upon certain sentiments which he has uttered from time to time.

But for some reason, I can not understand why, the gentleman from Texas has great antipathy toward the galleries of the House. These men who are now sitting in the gallery are citizens of the United States, are citizens of our common country, and they have just as much right to be in the gallery of this House as the gentleman from Texas has to be upon this floor. I am not seeking the applause of the gallery. I am not trying to invite the gallery to applaud. Applause of the galleries is reserved for the gentleman from Texas. It belongs especially to him.

Mr. BLANTON. Will my friend yield?

Mr. KING. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. The only difference is that my business is here on the floor and their business is down in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Mr. KING. The gentleman's business for three months was down in the State of Texas running for Congress; which is all right, and I have no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. And I came back.

Mr. KING. I am glad the gentleman did, as far as I am concerned.

Now, the main proposition here seems to be whether you will discharge a certain number of plate printers. They have been held up to ridicule here by a number of Members of the House, especially by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], as though they were simply trying to hang on to their jobs, as though they came here without any right to those jobs.

I desire to read a little appeal that was made to these men to come to Washington during the war, most of them having occupied paying positions in various private institutions of this country.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING,
Washington, D. C., August 15, 1918.

To the Plate Printers of the United States:

Never before in the history of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing has the demand for plate printing been as large as at the present. We are running with all the capacity at our command and still have need for more plate printers.

I am taking this means of appealing to all plate printers whose work is slack or who are out of employment to communicate with me relative to employment in the bureau. I can offer permanent position with good rate of pay, both for hand and power press plate printers. We need your services now, and it is to be hoped that you will respond to this appeal by submitting an application to me, stating whether you have served a full apprenticeship, giving your actual experience, your age, and your nationality.

Respectfully,

So it seems that there was some degree of patriotism which prompted these men to come to Washington during the war when the Government was in such dire need of their services; and it seems to me to be rather ill advised, now that they happen to be in the gallery for a day or two in a matter in which they are so vitally interested, to excoriate them for doing so.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there is only one question involved here. That is, Are we in favor of the economy that we have been preaching? At the very lowest figure there is $800,000 involved in the amendment now under consideration. It will probably run up as high as $1,376,000. The question before us is, Are we going to vote $1,376,000 or even as low as $800,000 out of the pockets of the American taxpayers in order to do something that is not necessary to be done? That is all there is to it. [Applause.] If we are here to do what we ought to do, of course we will vote for this economy. We have heard a good deal said about the inability to print bank notes or any other notes on power presses without making them subject to counterfeiting. There is only one thing connected with the whole subject. The engraving of the plates is done by the engraver and not by the printer. You have a good bill or a bad bill depending upon the character of the engraving and not upon the character of the printing. All of the presses everywhere throughout the United States, except in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, print all kinds of money for everybody outside of the United States on power presses, and nobody raises any question of it not being well done.

It is true that a plate printer may do a bad job on a well-engraved plate, or he may do a good job on a well-engraved plate, but no plate printer can do a good job if there is not a well-engraved plate from which to do it. All the testimony from all the experts goes to show that it is not a question whether the money is printed on a power press or on a hand press when it comes to the matter of counterfeiting. The whole matter of counterfeiting is due to the increase in the perfection of the art of photography and has nothing to do with the printing of the money on any kind of a press. But notwithstanding all that there is nothing here before us except the question whether you want to spend $800,000 or $1,000,000 a year without any justification, or whether under your oaths of office you are bound to save $1,000,000 whenever the case justifies it. Here, gentlemen, we present the justification for the economy. I submit the question now for your consideration without any further debate. [Applause.]

Mr. CROWTHER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. ZIHLMAN) there were—ayes 87, noes 38.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SANDERS of Indiana, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13180) making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that as amended the bill do pass.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to the final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves the previous question on the bill and all amendments to the final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment inserted on page 32 of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment on which the gentleman from Maryland demands a separate vote, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 32, after line 10, insert: "Hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to print from plates of more than four subjects each upon power presses the fronts and backs of any paper money, bonds, or other printed matter now or hereafter authorized to be executed at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall, in the exercise of the authority conferred upon him by this paragraph, reduce the number of persons employed in the operation of plate printing presses by not less than 218.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. ZIHLMAN) there were—ayes 165, noes 26.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I object on the ground that there is no quorum present, and I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 168, nays 85, answered "present" 1, not voting 176, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit, and ask for the yeas and nays.

The Clerk read as follows:

Motion to recommit by Mr. TINKHAM: Recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to that committee to report the same back forthwith, with the following proviso:

"Insert on page 28 a new proviso, as follows:

"'Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the payment of the salary of any employee who shall not have been appointed after competitive examination and certification by the Civil Service Commission.'".

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that is not in order because it changes substantive law. It is legislation on an appropriation bill, and unauthorized.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it is a limitation.

Mr. BLANTON. The present law provides how the employees shall be appointed and employed. That is substantive law. It is within the Volstead law. This is a change, and to that extent it is legislation on an appropriation bill and unauthorized. I call attention to the fact that this same amendment was offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts in the committee and the gentleman from Illinois made the point of order and the Chair sustained it.

Mr. DOWELL. The Chair overruled it.

Mr. BLANTON. Very well, I was mistaken about that.

The SPEAKER. This is clearly a limitation and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts demands the yeas and nays. All in favor of taking the question by yeas and nays will rise. [After counting.] Five Members have arisen, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

The question was taken on the motion to recommit, and the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. MADDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, the Committee on Enrolled Bills reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

Mr. GARNER, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of John W. Harris, Sixty-seventh Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a short summary of the American Legion convention at New Orleans, including a speech made at that convention by Judge Kenesaw M. Landis.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with permission granted by unanimous consent of the House to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a summary of the proceedings of the Fourth National Convention of the American Legion, held at New Orleans, La., October 16 to October 20, I submit the following:

Whereas there was introduced in the Congress of the United States immediately following the armistice, November 11, 1918, more than 50 separate and distinct bills providing for the payment of an adjustment of compensation in various forms to the service men and women of America who served in the World War practically without pay, while the workers at home were receiving unusually high wages with many bonus features; and

Whereas the American Legion in national convention assembled at Minneapolis in 1919, at Cleveland in 1920, and at Kansas City in 1921 indorsed the justness in principle of such adjusted compensation, realizing the great financial and economic handicap suffered by our service men and women, and whereas adjusted compensation for military service in principle and practice is based upon historic precedents; and

Whereas the Nation should pay and is paying all of its other war debts and obligations, and this obligation to its defenders is of supreme importance; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States is to be commended for the careful consideration it has given this legislation, and has affirmed its belief in its justness by passing it upon every occasion that has come before it by increased majorities; and

Whereas, after careful consideration by this convention of all the arguments advanced in opposition to this measure, including the letters of the Secretary of the Treasury, the address of the President to Congress in 1921, and the message of the President to Congress accompanying his veto after this legislation had been passed by the Senate and by the House, we still firmly believe in the justness, the fairness, and the immediate necessity for adjusted compensation legislation: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the American Legion, at the Fourth National Convention assembled, do reaffirm our belief in the American Legion plan for adjusted compensation with full confidence of the support of the American people, and we do now instruct the newly elected national commander, the national executive committee, and the national legislative committee to continue the fight for this legislation until it has been enacted into law.

As a supplement to the report which you have just adopted, and as declaring the policies of the American Legion, the committee on resolutions has instructed me to present the following declaration of policy:

"The American Legion in its fourth national convention assembled submits to the people of the United States this declaration upon the subject of adjusted compensation.

"The Legion recalls that at its first national convention, November, 1919, it passed the following resolution on the subject of adjusted compensation: Be it

"Resolved, That while the American Legion was not founded for the purpose of promoting legislation in its selfish interest, yet it recognizes that our Government has an obligation to all service men and women to relieve the financial disadvantages incidental to their military service—an obligation second only to that of caring for the disabled and for the widows and orphans of those who sacrificed their lives, and one already acknowledged by our allies; but the American Legion feels that it can not ask for legislation—it is selfish interest—and leaves with confidence to the Congress the discharge of this obligation.

"Thereafter the Congress of the United States requested the American Legion to aid it in determining what form of adjusted compensation would best meet the needs of the service men. In answer to this call the American Legion submitted its fourfold optional plan of adjusted compensation, designed to meet the varying needs of the service men in all parts of the country, by its home aid, land project, insurance and cash options—a measure designed to meet the Nation's obligation to the service men and at the same time promote national welfare.

"The Congress of the United States by overwhelming majority votes, recognizing the will of the American people, passed an adjusted compensation measure, which has now been vetoed by the Nation's Chief Executive.

"The American Legion in convention assembled has given consideration to the arguments urged against adjusted compensation. The Legion believes:

"(a) The argument that the Nation can not afford it is unsound. The cost of adequate compensation would not exceed one month more of the war, and the Nation could and would have afforded that. The net debt of the United States is billions below that of our principal allies, though our economic strength is manyfold greater, our allies have granted adjusted compensation to their war veterans.

"(b) The argument that the adjusted compensation measure should fail because it does not carry taxation provisions is insincere. None of the great war acts calling for expenditures, such as the vocational training act, or the war risk insurance act, or, indeed, any of the acts of Congress calling for expenditure, ever contained special taxation features to raise revenue for the purposes provided in the act—revenue-raising measures under our system of government being independent measures.

"(c) The argument that the cost would be five billions is misleading. That figure is arrived at by opponents of adjusted compensation by compounding at 4½ per cent interest for 20 years the real cost, if met now, of one and one-half billion.

"(d) That the Nation is spending millions on the disabled is not an answer, because there is a debt to the nondisabled; it should be paid as all other war debts are being paid, and the payment of one debt does not excuse nonpayment of another.

"The American Legion believes in adjusted compensation not only as an expression of the Nation's gratitude to those who dedicated their all to its service but more especially as an approximate adjustment of the economic losses sustained by the service men by reason of their service. Congress drafted the soldier and ordered him to serve at $1 or $1.25 per day. Labor was not drafted. The wages of those not drafted doubled and trebled in the war period. This basic injustice compels the Nation to do what it can toward rectification. The adjusted-compensation measure passed by the Congress is a recognition of this injustice and an attempt to remedy it by constructive legislation.

"The economic losses thus sustained by the service men are a debt from the Nation to them, and this debt should be paid by all of our people, as all other war debts have been paid. It should not be allowed to remain a burden upon that element of our people least able to bear it, and who themselves bore the military risks of war.

"Instead of meeting this just obligation in the manner indicated by the Congress, with the approval of the representatives of the service men, by the passage of an adjusted-compensation measure which would make home owners, home builders, and possessors of insurance of thousands of American service men, the Chief Executive proposes a pension.

"The American Legion stands foursquare in favor of adjusted compensation and against a pension. What is sought by the American Legion is that the entire Nation shall meet its obligations to the service men by the constructive legislation proposed and not by the creation of a pension system.

"The Legion wants the Nation to pay its debts and not to do charity. Whenever the people have voted, their verdict has been for adjusted compensation.

"Our commander, officers, and committees worked to carry out the will of the people and the wish of the Legion. They were right and their efforts should have succeeded. The Legion presses the passage of a constructive adjusted-compensation measure. The Legion hopes and expects this act will be passed without delay, so that the Legion may devote all of its energies to the other constructive measures of its program productive of good to the Nation we served.

"The Legion desires to stand not in a position of getting something from the Nation but of giving something to the Nation. The Legion must carry on its Americanism program in behalf of better education and aid generally in the development of patriotism and love of country—its program to help inculcate in all our people a sense of individual responsibility to community, State, and Nation, and must now actively help in righting one of the greatest wrongs in the history of the American people—a wrong connected with the prosecution of the war, and therefore the duty of the American Legion to help correct—the exposing of the war profiteers.

"The Legion recognizes this as among its immediate obligations, because when the American people are aware of the extent of war profiteering, a national determination will have developed that in any future war there shall be a draft not only of service men but of the laboring man and capitalist as well. Had there been such a draft, the fundamental basis of adjusted compensation now temporarily thwarted by Executive action would never have arisen.

"The American Legion proposes to render these services to our people, to continue its program for better and truer Americanism, to inculcate patriotism, to develop comradeship, and to aid those of our comrades upon whom the physical burden of the war still rests. The American Legion intends that the American people shall regard it in its true light, not as an organization seeking anything from the Nation for its own selfish purposes but as an organization marching in time of peace as it did in time of war under the banner of service to country."

AMERICANIZATION OF, IMMIGRATION OF, NATURALIZATION OF, AND EXCLUSION OF, ALIENS.

Whereas the continued admission of undesirable immigrants into the United States under the operation of our present laws, taken in connection with the vast number of nonnaturalized and nonassimilated persons heretofore admitted through lax laws and law administration of our immigration laws, constitutes a vital and growing menace to American institutions and American ideals; and

Whereas if this menace is not checked it will eventually undermine and destroy respect for law, orderly government, every patriotic impulse, and the loyal character of American citizenship, as well as disorganize our industrial and economic structure, and ought therefore to be the concern of every true American: Be it

Resolved by the American Legion in national convention assembled, That we earnestly and respectfully petition the Congress of the United States to wholly suspend and forbid all immigration for such period of time as will enable the formulation of a definite and constructive plan for the protection of our people and our Nation from this dangerous influx; and be it further

Resolved, That among other salutary regulations should be preference given by law under restricted immigration to the immediate families of those who have served honorably in the armed forces of the United States, and, secondly, to the immediate families of persons resident in the United States, its Territories and possessions, who are citizens thereof; and be it further

Resolved, That for the purpose of furthering the control of this danger at its source, immigration commissioners should be authorized to be attached to American embassies and legations throughout the world; and be it further

Resolved, That Congress be urged to permanently deny admission hereafter, as immigrants or permanent residents, to all aliens who are ineligible to citizenship under the laws of the United States.

2. A resolution requesting legislation to provide a remedy for veterans who are of foreign birth who are debarred from entry to this country because of the immigration laws.

3. Whereas it is the belief of a very large proportion of our people that immigration to the United States should be completely discontinued for a period of several years; and

Whereas Congress enacted a law, known as the Dillingham bill, providing that not more than 3 per cent of the nationals of any country residing in the United States according to the census of 1910 shall be allowed to enter the United States between the years 1922 and 1925; and

Whereas, contrary to the spirit and purpose of the above-mentioned act of Congress, there has been permitted to enter the United States during the past year a number of tens of thousands in excess of the quota legally authorized: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, The American Legion in national convention assembled hereby denounces the laxity with which our immigration laws are being enforced, and the American Legion hereby calls upon Congress to investigate the matter and take every means necessary to see that our immigration laws are rigidly and properly carried out.

4. A resolution urging legislation giving to parents and dependent relatives of American citizen ex-service men precedence under the quota law governing the admission of aliens into this country.

5. Whereas certain State constitutions require that no naturalized citizen shall be entitled to vote unless able to read and write English; and

Whereas upon naturalization such naturalized citizens are not required to pass this literacy test; and

Whereas this highly commendable and heartily indorsed literacy test after naturalization often has resulted in citizens being deprived of the voting privilege: Be it

Resolved by the American Legion in national convention assembled, That it urges legislation by Congress that will make the literacy test compulsory for admission to citizenship.

6. Be it resolved, That the American Legion, in national convention assembled, in view of the efforts of the Territory of Hawaii for Americanization and its need for aid in its tremendous problems, urges Congress to aid the Territory of Hawaii in educational Americanism and other measures applying to the States.

7. Whereas, the national oriental committee of the American Legion, Thomas N. Swale, chairman, has rendered a valuable service in the collection of data on the danger from the influx of the oriental into the United States, compiled in a formal report,

Resolved by the American Legion, in national convention assembled, That said report be transmitted to the national legislative committee of the American Legion for use before the Congress of the United States in urging laws consistent with the facts set forth and the recommendations contained in said report; be it further

Resolved, That this convention urge the enactment without delay of laws, and the negotiation of treaties if required, for the permanent exclusion as immigrants or permanent residents of the United States of all persons ineligible under the laws thereof to citizenship.

CIVIL SERVICE.

A resolution urging the issuance of an Executive order requiring heads of all departments and bureaus of the Government to notify honorably discharged ex-service men whose ratings fall below the rating of "good" at the time such rating will be made, and further providing no ex-service man shall be discharged or reduced in rank or salary on the basis of an efficiency rating covering a period of less than three months.

DISABLED MEN.

The amendment of existing law so as to permit all claimants suffering with compensable disabilities of service origin to be allowed compensation pay on a hospital basis when so hospitalized.

The amendment of section 310, war risk insurance act, so as to allow all disabled veterans compensation from date of discharge, providing they submit evidence showing a disability of compensable degree.

The amendment of existing laws so as to inaugurate a system of permanent ratings by a board, with laymen representation, who will consider the man's previous education, earning ability, and general status in life, as well as his physical condition, with the end in view of establishing a permanent disability rating code.

The amending of subdivisions, section 302, of the Sweet Act so as to eliminate the word "pulmonary" before tuberculosis and the insertion of the words "chronic empyema," "psychosis," "neurosis," and "psychoneurosis," and to make time when service origin is presumed to be five years, except neurosis and psychoneurosis, to be two years.

Federal aid for agricultural trainees to establish them as self-sustaining farmers.

The time limit for securing certificates of disability to be extended to August 9, 1926.

The full assistance of the Legion to procure the enactment of efficiency bills to make possible the completion of all projects of the first and second Langley bills, and a further appropriation to build mental hospitals and for the improvement of existing hospitals.

The amendment of section 2 of the rehabilitation act in such manner as to recognize any service connection established under provisions of section 300 of the war risk insurance act, amended, as sufficient for all purposes under the provisions of the rehabilitation act.

A resolution urging continued support of House bill 11195, known as the Sweet bill.

A resolution urging support of the legislation providing for the payment of $20 per month to the widow and $3 per month to every orphan child of the Spanish War veterans.

A resolution providing an amendment to the war risk insurance act continuing in force term insurance beyond the date now fixed by law—March, 1926.

The amendment of article 408, war risk insurance act, to permit the insured to reinstate term insurance in such manner if not able, due to the exigencies of their conditions, to pay the back premiums and interest due upon back premiums and said arrears may be charged against the principal sums of the policy. And to provide further that if inability to pay arrears continues the said arrears may be carried as a charge against the principal of the policy until March 3, 1926, which is the date fixed when all policies must be converted into permanent ones.

A resolution providing an amendment to section 13 of the war risk insurance act to permit the payment of moneys on a judgment awarded claimants from regular appropriations of the United States Veterans' Bureau.

A resolution advocating legislation to increase the traveling allowance of officials and employees of the United States Veterans' Bureau sufficient to meet their actual expenses.

"Whereas the Veterans' Bureau did, without medical examination or previous notice as required by law, reduce the rating of totally deaf ex-service men from 100 per cent permanent total disability carrying $100 compensation per month and $5.75 per $1,000 of insurance carried, to 65 per cent partial permanent carrying $52 per month and no insurance; and

"Whereas this reduction is considered a discrimination against deaf men and an injustice in the light of other ratings, and

"Whereas the Veterans' Bureau program of rehabilitation of totally deaf men has proven a failure in the average case and $52 to $65 a month is inadequate for the support of a single man, let alone one with family: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the National Convention of the Legion in convention assembled, That the rating of 100 per cent permanent total disability for totally deaf ex-service men be reestablished, and as a means of securing this end that the national legislative committee of the Legion be instructed to secure the passage of the two bills, one now in the Senate Finance Committee (S. 1497) and the other in the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee (H. R. 6422) covering this point, with the added provision that payment of compensation and insurance be made retroactive to date when reduction went into effect."

That all legislation affecting veterans of the World War be referred to a standing committee in each branch of Congress, so that the responsibility of such legislation shall be upon a single agency.

A resolution urging the establishment by Congress of a new and separate committee to consider all matters of legislation dealing with compensation, hospitalization, and rehabilitation.

Resolved, That the national and departmental legislative committees take steps toward the enactment of civil-service legislation that will automatically give positions to disabled persons, when qualified, instead of merely proffering them on civil-service registers: Be it

Resolved, That proper steps be taken to secure the following amendment to article 3, section 301, paragraph (g), of the war risk act, so that it will read as follows:

"If the death occurs before or after discharge or resignation from the service as a result of injury or disease incurred in or aggravated by military or naval service and compensable under the laws and regulations governing the United States Veterans' Bureau, the United States shall pay for burial expenses a sum not to exceed $200, as may be fixed by regulations. The United States shall also pay for the return of the body to his home, if still in the service or in a hospital receiving treatment as a United States Veterans' Bureau patient, but the total allowance for burial expenses and return of the body to his home shall not exceed $200, except when the expense of transportation of the body exceeds this amount, and in that event the actual cost of transportation shall be paid."

GENERAL ARCHIVES BUILDING.

Whereas at the national convention of the American Legion at Kansas City, 1921, the following resolution was unanimously adopted, viz: That "The American Legion urges the proper legislation for the erection of a suitable repository for all national archives where they may be safe from any future possibility of fire, vermin, or other causes for their destruction"; and

Whereas since the adoption of the above resolution no steps have been taken by Congress looking toward the erection of an archives building, and the danger to the national archives from damp, fires, vermin, theft, is an ever-increasing one; Therefore be it

Resolved by the American Legion in convention assembled at New Orleans, La., That we do protest the failure of Congress to provide a suitable building for the storing of our national records upon which depends future knowledge of the history of our country and the part taken by its citizens, both in a civic and military way, and we insist upon our representatives in Congress using all proper means to obtain legislation which will provide adequate protection to our national archives without further delay.

ARMISTICE DAY.

A resolution of third national convention making armistice day a national holiday.

FLAG USAGE.

A resolution urging legislation making it an offense to misuse the flag of any country on friendly terms with the Government and people of the United States, and urging similar reciprocity for the protection of the American flag within the boundaries and possessions of such friendly countries.

MEMORIAL AT ARLINGTON.

A resolution requesting legislation for the erection of a memorial in Arlington Cemetery in honor of the dead of the World War.

SLACKERS.

A resolution requesting immediate dismissal from Government service of slackers.

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD EMPLOYMENT.

Whereas it appears that foreigners are in command of American ships in preference to Americans, particularly those operated under the United States Shipping Board: Therefore be it

Resolved by the American Legion in national convention assembled, That we urge that the national legislative committee take necessary steps to petition Congress and the Shipping Board to give preference to American citizens in securing officers and men for all ships operated by the United States Shipping Board.

RECLAMATION OF LAND.

The convention recommended that the incoming national commander appoint a special committee of five members to carefully study the plan proposed and make a report to the national legislative committee.

Be it resolved, That the American Legion indorses and approves the plans submitted to Congress for the lending of Federal aid to the reclamation of arid lands and the drainage of swamps, such as the Columbia Basin project, the Colorado River, the Shoshone and Platte River projects, the recovery of waste swamp lands in Florida and Louisiana, and other similar projects, and urges that Congress speedily enact legislation whereby the vast amount of land included therein may soon be made productive.

Whereas there are now in the United States millions of acres of swamp, waste, and arid land that can be reclaimed and made available for settlement: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the American Legion in convention assembled go on record as favoring the immediate and speedy enactment of legislation by the Congress of the United States having for its object and purpose the reclaiming of such swamp, waste, and arid lands; be it further

Resolved, That such legislation provide, as has been the policy in the past, that the ex-service men and women of this country be given preferential rights in the settlement of such lands when they have been reclaimed.

MILITARY AFFAIRS—POLICY.

1. Be it resolved by the American Legion in national convention assembled, That we indorse H. R. 12106, introduced in the Congress of the United States by Comrade FISH, which provides for the retirement of enlisted men after 25 years' service in the United States Army with retired pay of not less than $100 per month and allowances.

2. Be it resolved, That the national convention of the American Legion indorses the national defense act of June 4, 1920, as a sound foundation for the military policy of the American Government, and urges adequate appropriations to maintain the Regular Army, National Guard, Organized Reserves, Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and Citizens' Military Training Corps under its provisions in a state of organized efficiency that will guarantee the peace, security, and integrity of the country.

Resolved, That this convention regards as a national peril of the gravest character the reduction of the Regular Army below the total enlisted strength provided in the national defense act of June 4, 1920. This convention further recommends the immediate repeal of the Army elimination clause of the Army appropriation bill of June 30, 1922, so that the minimum commissioned personnel shall not be less than 13,000 officers.

3. The committee reaffirms previous action of our conventions on military policy. It reaffirms its indorsement of the national defense act of June 4, 1920, as amended, and opposes vigorously any material departure from its principles and obligations.

We urge the Legion's continued support to the Federal and State Governments in the formation, recruiting, and maintenance of the National Guard and Organized Reserves.

We urge that the citizen soldier components of the Army of the United States, the National Guard, and the Organized Reserves, which are the chief reliance of our country in time of national emergency, be officered in peace and in war, as far as practicable, by qualified men from their own ranks and that all provisions for qualification be established in time of peace.

We urge the immediate enactment of the Bursum bill as heretofore indorsed by the American Legion, National Guard Association, and Reserve Officers' Association.

We urge the immediate enactment of Senate bill 674, which provides for the distribution of the captured war trophies of the World War to the respective States, Territories, and District of Columbia, and, further, the immediate passage of the joint resolution in Congress to provide for one of each type of these trophies to be allotted to the national museum of the American Legion at Indianapolis.

We believe that our battle fields in Europe should be properly marked and we urge that the military affairs committee of the Legion be hereby instructed to take suitable action to accomplish this result.

We urge the enactment of a graded retirement law which will provide for the enlisted men of the Army after 16, 20, or 25 years of service similar in benefits as is now provided for enlisted men of the Navy.

We urge the continuance of the military affairs committee of the American Legion as a permanent committee, constituted and appointed as heretofore.

4. UNIVERSAL SERVICE LAW RECOMMENDED.

The third national convention of the American Legion adopted a resolution, submitted by the national military affairs committee at that convention, which directed the national commander to appoint a committee to study the question of a universal draft of all persons capable of industrial as well as military service, and in addition the universal draft of land, material, plants, and capital necessary to the prosecution of war.

That national commander in January of this year delegated this duty to the National Military Affairs Committee. This committee met in Washington, D. C., in February, and again in June, and upon both occasions this subject was carefully and fully considered. The committee in its deliberation has had the advice of some of the best economic and military experts of our Nation. It has further studied the experiences of France, England, and Germany on this subject during the World War. It has further reviewed all of the war-time legislation enacted by Congress between April 6, 1917, and March 4, 1919, that was in force in our country at the end of the war, the national defense act as amended, and the many specially prepared articles on industrial mobilization.

The only important legislation on the statute books at the present time which provides for mobilization of any part of our country's resources is the national defense act as amended June 14, 1920. This makes provision for:

First. Drafting the National Guard in order to overcome the limitations placed by the Constitution upon the use of the militia as such.

Second. A commandeering section which authorizes the President to place order for munitions and other supplies in any factory he may select, and provides not only punishment for a refusal to accept such orders but authorizes him, if necessary, to commandeer such factories.

There is no legislation to give the President power in case of any emergency declared by Congress to mobilize all of the material resources, industrial organizations, and services for the purpose of carrying on war, including power to stabilize prices not only for those commodities required by the Government but for the whole civilian population. The additional legislation necessary should provide for:

(a) The selection for service of any necessary part of the unorganized militia.

(b) Control of material resources and industrial organizations other than the commandeering section in the national defense act.

(c) Control over prices of commodities for the Government and the civil population, together with control over service.

(d) Creation of the various auxiliary agencies which were found to be necessary in the last war, such as the War Industries Board, Fuel Administration, War Trade Board, Food Administration, etc.

It must be made clear that the draft features of the Federal statute submitted for the approval of the fourth annual convention of the American Legion would not be operative until Congress had declared war or other emergency authorizing the use of the armed forces. The provisions of this statute other than the draft would become operative when war is imminent, the purpose being to authorize the President to establish the necessary machinery to stabilize conditions before war conditions have thrown the economic machinery of the country out of gear.

The business men are generally willing to take Government contracts if assured of prices of raw material, labor, power, and transportation remaining stable, and labor in general will be content with existing wages if assured that the cost of food, shelter, and clothing will remain stable.

It is the opinion of this committee that if all necessary stabilizing machinery can be made operative immediately upon the imminence of an emergency that a long and important step forward will have been made in an orderly, equitable, and economical manner.

This committee believes that this important piece of legislation should be approved by this convention, and that its enactment into law should represent one of the primary activities of the coming year. The committee believes that a statute of this character will, if properly administered, take the "profit out of war" and will preclude in any future crisis many, if not all, of the economic ills, dissatisfaction, and unrest that have been the aftermath of the World War.

This committee further believes that if such a law had existed in 1917 our real activity at the front would have been advanced many months, our Nation could have saved billions of dollars, and adjusted compensation would not now be necessary.

Our Nation has to-day for the first time in its history a sound military policy, which provides for a small Regular Army and a citizen army capable of rapid expansion in time of a national emergency. This Army of the United States (Regular Establishment, National Guard, and Organized Reserves), if properly administered and not handicapped in its functioning by lack of adequate appropriation from Congress, should form the nucleus of a harmonious and efficient national defense and be prepared to take a national position in readiness.

This military policy, however, is incomplete without legislation that will prepare our country to draft immediately, without favor, all the man power and resources of our Nation by a comprehensive and carefully considered plan of action.

The American Legion is for peace; but it believes, as did the Father of our Country, that the best assurance of peace is to be found in a reasonable state of preparedness.

"Equal rights for all and special privileges for none" was said long ago as a protest of our people against the same influences in our public life that during the World War profited on every side and developed a war-strength division of millionaires. We are not here to criticise our country for its failure to protect itself against this attack of selfishness and greed, but the American Legion is looking our Nation in the face to-day and saying that in any future emergency our national motto must be "Equal service for all and special profit for none."

The following is the proposed law:

An act to provide further for the national security and defense.

Be it enacted, etc. (1) That in the event of a national emergency declared by Congress to exist which in the judgment of the President demands the immediate increase of the Military Establishment, the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to draft into the service of the United States such members of the unorganized militia as he may deem necessary: Provided, That all persons drafted into service between the ages of 21 to 30, or such other limits as the President may fix, shall be drafted without exemption on account of industrial occupation.

(2) That in case of war, or when the President shall judge the same to be imminent, he is authorized, and it shall be his duty, when, in his opinion such emergency requires it—

(a) To determine and proclaim the material resources, industrial organizations, and services over which Government control is necessary to the successful termination of such emergency, and such control shall be exercised by him through agencies then existing or which he may create for such purposes.

(b) To take such steps as may be necessary to stabilize prices of services and of all commodities declared to be essential, whether such services and commodities are required by the Government or by the civilian population.

5. DISCHARGE CERTIFICATE TO NEXT OF KIN.

Resolution.

Whereas The Adjutant General of the United States Army holds that certificate in lieu of a lost or destroyed discharge certificate can only be furnished to a soldier or his widow; and

Whereas no provision is made for the furnishing of such a certificate to the next of kin of a deceased soldier: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That national headquarters of the American Legion take necessary steps to secure the correction of the present situation.

MUSCLE SHOALS.

Resolution on reclamation and national defense.

Whereas at the beginning of the World War the United States Government was brought to a realization of the fact that it was wholly dependent upon the Chilean nitrate beds and German war-built nitrogen plants for its supply of nitrogen, which is absolutely necessary for the manufacture of high explosives; and

Whereas the said United States Government did thereupon appropriate large sums of money for the erection and operation of plants Nos. 1 and 2 at Muscle Shoals for the manufacture of nitrogen in large quantities by extracting same from the air, which said plants were completed and successfully operated prior to the armistice, or just after, and are the only air-nitrogen plants in the United States of America; and

Whereas the above-mentioned plants have not only been left inoperative since the war but have fallen into a state of deterioration at an expense of many thousands of dollars annually to the taxpayers of this country while similar air-nitrogen plants in Germany were speedily converted so as to manufacture cheaply nitrogen fertilizers for the enrichment and reclamation of the arid farm lands of Germany, which has proven to be an untold blessing to the people of that country; and

Whereas we believe that the continuance of our dependence upon foreign countries for the necessary supply of nitrogen for fertilizers in time of peace and for explosives in time of war is not only an unspeakable humiliation but is positively perilous from the point of view of the national defense: Now therefore be it

Resolved, (1) That we, the American Legion in national convention assembled, do hereby call upon the Congress of the United States, upon the assembling of same, immediately to take up and act upon the measures pending in Congress or that may be introduced immediately upon the reconvening of same on the subject and to determine upon a definite fixed policy as to the disposition of same; and

(2) In determining upon the disposition to be made of said properties they may be governed by the following principles which we believe to be fundamental, namely:

(a) No policy or plan should be accepted which does not provide for the operation of said plants in time of peace and the manufacture of fertilizer, and the test for acceptance of any offer should be the amount of fertilizer proposed to be manufactured.

(b) No plan or policy should be adopted which is calculated to introduce Federal operation of the project.

(c) The fertilizer production at Muscle Shoals shall have preferred supply of power in time of peace.

(d) No plan or policy should be adopted which does not assure the Government that a research or experimental department will be maintained and conducted in connection with the plants for the purpose of keeping up with the most approved methods of nitrogen production, and that in the event of military emergency the said plants will be made available to the Government at the call of the Secretary of War for the manufacture of nitrogen for explosives.

(3) That the national legislative committee of the American Legion be directed to use all possible legitimate efforts to the end that the Congress of the United States immediately enact such legislation as aforesaid.

NAVAL AFFAIRS POLICY.

During the last year our country has adopted a naval policy which places the United States, jointly with Great Britain, the leading naval power of the world.

It is our duty to maintain this position and to keep the Navy up to the letter and spirit of the Washington conference.

We therefore respectfully reindorse the report of a year ago, believing that the American Legion stands behind those definite policies which have been adopted by the American Government.

The Government of the United States having established that a 5–5–3 ratio will provide an adequate navy in capital ships, it is held that this ratio must be maintained in personnel, aircraft, submarines, light cruisers, and auxiliaries. Congress must appropriate sufficient funds to keep up our ratio in both personnel and material. Because of the different terms of enlistment and differences in our seafaring population, we believe our regular Navy should have a personnel of 105,000, and under no conditions should the personnel be allowed to drop below 96,000. If the Appropriations Committee of Congress does not allow for an adequate personnel to fully man our allotted ships, we automatically drop from a first-class naval power to a ratio below that established as our national policy.

We condemn ourselves for our passive attitude relative to preparedness of our country's first line of defense—the Navy. No Congressman or Senator who has not come forward for a strong Navy should receive the support of a single legionnaire.

The need of a real naval base on the west coast of the United States is even greater to-day than it was a year ago. At the Washington conference this country agreed not to fortify our possessions in the Pacific. In case of war in the Pacific our fleet would have to base on the west coast, and for this country not to have a properly equipped base in this area is criminal negligence. So far Congress has declined to appropriate for a naval base which the Navy Department has urged to be built at Alameda, Calif. It is our belief that work on this base should be started at once.

We believe that all combatant first-line vessels should be concentrated in one fleet for purposes of better training and more economical administration; further, that this fleet should be based where it can be maintained and administered at the least cost to our Government.

Although the average citizen believes that Congress has provided for an adequate Naval Reserve Force to supplement our reduced Navy, since September 29, 1921, we have had no Naval Reserve worthy of the name. The reserve bill which has been proposed and is now before the Senate does not entirely meet requirements, as it tends to create a retired list under another name. As an example of this, the last naval appropriation bill carried $8,000,000 for the reserves, but of this amount $5,000,000 is used as a retirement fund for 10 and 20 year men, leaving only $3,000,000 actually available for the reserves. From this remaining $3,000,000 must be deducted expenses for cruisers, upkeep of ships, rent of armories, target practice, etc. This appropriation is by no means adequate. It is urged that sufficient appropriation and arrangements be made to maintain a sufficient and efficient reserve along the lines adopted by our third annual convention.

Expert authorities agree that destroyers will deteriorate more when laid up than when used, even though used by an inexperienced personnel. We believe that this class of ships should be supplied to the Naval Reserve units for training purposes.

We are of the opinion that the Marine Corps should be maintained at its historical efficiency and always held as an area of the Naval Establishment.

We recommend that the number of midshipmen at the Naval Academy be not reduced, even though the reduced strength of the Navy will not permit the assurance of permanent commission to all graduates. The saving in cost of training a few instead of many is not commensurate with the advantage of having the excess midshipmen graduates and become a part of the reserve force.

To maintain our ratio 5–5–3 it is necessary to have an efficient merchant marine. The Department of the Navy and Merchant Marine should be closely connected so that both could be operated in harmony with one another at a moment's notice. In order that our merchant marine may be aided, to economize on our naval expenses, and to train our regular naval personnel on combatant ships, naval auxiliary vessels should, as far as possible, be chartered from well-established merchant lines.

We are heartily in favor of the ship subsidy bill as a means to establish our trade routes. If carried out the ship subsidy bill will automatically increase the available personnel of the Navy, add materially to the efficiency and strength of the Navy, and at the same time be a great aid to all business throughout the United States.

Since the earliest days of history, the control of the trade routes has been the secret of the growth and greatness of all world power, and this country, because of the paltry sum necessary to carry out the requirements of the ship subsidy bill, must not take the place of a decadent Nation.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I am printing herewith a speech delivered by the Secretary of War, Hon. John W. Weeks, at the annual dinner of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, November 14, 1922. I have asked the leave of the House to permit the publication of this address because it seems to me by far the clearest exposition I have ever seen of the problems, accomplishments, and usefulness of the War Department of the United States as a peace-time agency.

The speech is as follows:

"I DIDN'T KNOW THAT."

(By John W. Weeks, Secretary of War.)

In a recent issue of a well-known magazine I read with deep interest an engaging article on the Netherlands, written by one of her eminent sons, who is also our fellow citizen, Mr. Edward Bok. With characteristic energy Mr. Bok pictured the ignorance of the average American concerning that enterprising little country, which he proved to be, however, not tiny at all, but indeed a great empire. I confess that I was very much instructed by his picture. One must admire the strategy employed to emphasize his very earnest and praiseworthy purpose. I hope that I might, therefore, be forgiven for attempting to employ Mr. Bok's method while avoiding any pretense of borrowing his inimitable style to emphasize an equally earnest and, I trust, admirable purpose of my own.

Strange as it may seem, it is a fact that the average American knows very little about his own Government. He is too busy with his everyday affairs to give much attention to its activities. He knows that it is divided into three branches, the executive, the judicial, and the legislative. He knows the name of the President, the Vice President, probably two or more of the Cabinet, the names of the Senators from his State, and the Congressman representing his district. Every two years he goes to the polls—that is, if nothing more important interferes—and votes. Beyond this point he takes little interest in his Government until perchance he discovers through the medium of his daily newspaper something in the Government to criticize.

During my labors and studies of the past year and a half it has often impressed me that the average American knows scarcely more of the problems and accomplishments of his own War Department than he does of the geography and history of the Netherlands. He knows that there is a Regular Army, that its officers are trained at West Point, that there is a militia, that in event of an emergency he and his fellow citizens will become a part of the military force of the Nation if their services are needed, and that in time of war an American Army will acquit itself with honor and credit. In times of peace, however, so little publicity is given to the activities of the Regular Army that it is very seldom, if ever, brought to the attention of Mr. Average Citizen, and if he gives any thought to it at all he is apt to think of the Army as an organization housed in very comfortable barracks, which drills a little, parades on national holidays, stands guard at forts along our coast for which we may never have any use, has a number of vague and probably unimportant duties to perform, and costs a great deal of money which could well be devoted to other purposes. I have accordingly felt it to be one of my duties to bring to the attention of our citizens the varied and important activities of the Army. My efforts in that direction quite frequently draw the response, "Well, I didn't know that." This always encourages me in my efforts, since we appreciate that true self-government can come only through knowledge. It is my present purpose to endeavor to interest you, as I have been interested, in this instructional problem, with the hope that you might yourselves gain a deeper understanding of our difficulties and be better able to continue and possibly increase the loyal support which the members of the Boston Chamber of Commerce have always given to constructive programs of the Government.

You may not be aware that by the act of June, 1920, a definite military policy was adopted, based on the lessons of the World War, and that this program is the first permanent military policy the United States has ever had. The War Department is devoting itself very enthusiastically to the execution of the terms of this project, and the Secretary of War is charged with the responsibility for its proper administration. Under the requirements of law he has, however, an additional duty to urge upon our people a continued attention to their need for defensive preparation. In attempting to defend the activities of the department in this respect, I explain that what we advocate is really a most conservative policy of insurance against war and internal disturbance. When called upon, as I frequently am, to defend myself against the charge of militarism, I reply that I have no greater fondness for war than I have for fire, theft, murder, disease, and bankruptcy; yet I continue to urge the degree of insurance against the one that is recognized by most business men as sane policy of insurance against the others. It then is pointed out that the insurance offered is of the participating type. The investment in national defense has always brought full returns to the country in the physical and sanitary training of young citizens and in the constructive accomplishments of the War Department and its personnel. The question is sometimes asked, "Why do Americans need this physical and sanitary training?" I reply, of course, that our experiences with the drafted men during the late war disclosed the alarming truth that approximately 50 per cent of our young men have physical defects, many of which would eventually prove disabling and most of which could easily be corrected by physical training and instruction, which is usually followed by the comment, "Well, I didn't know that."

This, I believe, is one of the most interesting aspects of military training. We are living in an age when most serious-minded men are studying the problems of race betterment. All about us are springing up organizations such as the "better babies" movement, the "Life Extension Institute," and other activities whose purpose is the enrichment of our national life through physical improvement. What will be the influence upon our future of our physical evolution? Every American should ask this question, and there is no better source of pertinent information than in the writings of the Surgeon General of the Army on "Military anthropology." It is proven therein that the majority of our World War recruits were awkward, narrow chested, under weight, and generally in poor physical condition. After a few months of training they were developed into broad-chested, two-fisted specimens of American manhood. These citizens received dividends from our defense investment in the form of definite and material gains in weight and in chest measurements. They were enrolled in the greatest "Life Extension Institute" in the world. The War Department was given an opportunity of surveying the health of the nation. Many basic diseases and disabilities, such as weak arches, weak backs, malaria, social diseases, incipient tuberculosis, and countless other infections were discovered in time and eradicated. Camps were made models of neatness, and personal hygiene and sanitation were taught as primary studies. Inoculations against typhoid and similar plagues resulted in the establishment of new minimum records for prevalence. It can not be questioned that the occurrence of these diseases throughout our country has been considerably lessened as a result of the training and medical administration of young men during the war. "Is not this, Mr. Average American, a satisfactory dividend from military training?" "Oh, certainly," you reply, "but I didn't realise that all this was true."

Mothers and fathers frequently protest against exposing their boys to the "dangerous" influences of military camps. They fear that the boys might become dissipated. We reply to these parents that the records of the Surgeon General show that there is a prevalence of social diseases among the young men of our country, straight from their own homes, that constitutes a shocking menace to our national existence. The influence of the military camp is a continual education against the dangers of intemperate life. While the soldier is in camp he is protected in every possible way from these demoralizing diseases—by education, by disciplinary measures, and by prompt treatment of those who can not resist nor escape. The American Army in France was accordingly able to establish such a low record of disease that our allies were astonished. We have continued to progress in handling this grave problem and I believe that one of the greatest benefits which can be conferred upon national life through military training will be the effectual control of this menacing evil. The first step is to instruct those who "didn't know that."

The statements that I have just made are sometimes questioned by individuals who remember the disease rates which prevailed in our armies in former wars. The reply is that we have been progressing. During the Civil War smallpox claimed over 7,000 soldier victims; during the Spanish-American War and the Philippine insurrection there were 258 deaths from this disease; in the World War we lost 14 soldiers with smallpox, although there were 4,000,000 of them in service. In the Civil War over 15,000 men died from malaria, while during the World War we lost but 25. In the Spanish-American War 20,000 soldiers, or 12 per cent of the total, suffered from typhoid fever; during the World War there were 2,000 cases, or about one-twentieth of 1 per cent. Had the death rates for typhoid in the World War been the same as in 1898, we would have lost 60,000 soldiers from this alone—more than we actually lost from all diseases.

It is difficult for the average American to appreciate that the Surgeon General of the Army is not merely the head of a small body of "military" medical men. He truly represents the entire medical profession in the military field, just as the Chief of Engineers represents the engineering profession and as the Army itself represents the country. At the same time, the medical profession itself gives generous recognition to the wonderful pioneering work of Army surgeons. Our Medical Department has established certain basic principles that influence the prevention of disease throughout the world. Many of their achievements have resulted in the saving of innumerable lives and have actually made possible the free commercial intercourse between the countries on this continent. The countries to the south of us were once ravaged by yellow fever and malignant malaria. The French enterprise on the Isthmus of Panama was completely blocked by the fact that 75 per cent of the employees from France lost their lives from disease within a few months after landing on the Isthmus. In 1901 a group of medical officers, headed by Maj. Walter Reed, determined definitely that yellow fever was transmitted by the mosquito. Within a very few months after this discovery Habana was cleared of the disease that had ravaged it for 150 years. Our greatest achievement in Panama was the conversion of this pestiferous district into a healthy region. Since 1906 one can live in Panama with equal assurance of protection against disease as if living, for example, in Boston. This was the work of the Army. When we took over the administration of Porto Rico the entire population was affected by "tropical anemia." The Army doctors demonstrated that this disease was a hookworm infection, and the measures taken accordingly have redeemed these people from a plague that would forever have hindered their development. There are many equally striking illustrations of the work of the American Army in improving the health of this country, our dependencies, and, indeed, of the entire world.

"That is all extremely interesting," reply my questioners, "but how about the other 'constructive' accomplishments of the War Department? We thought that the purpose of the War Department was to wage war." This is an almost ineradicable tendency—to believe that the War Department is hoping for war and uninterested in the pursuits of peace.

"Do you realise," I respond, "that until the middle of the past century the Army was the only public organisation fully able to encourage and assist our citizens in their development of this great country?"

"Do you know that the great Lewis and Clarke expedition that opened up the Northwest was conducted by the Army?"

The Army conducted nearly all preliminary explorations in the early days of the country. It constructed the early roads. It built bridges and canals. It alone was able to conduct the early surveys and make the maps which are so essential in the opening up of a new region. Army engineers initiated most of the accurate methods which are now employed in the geodetic, topographic, and hydrographic surveys of our possessions. The Army was virtually the pioneer of the pioneers. As our citizens moved west over the prairies and through the forests they traveled routes which were surveyed by Army engineers, constructed by the Army, and protected by military posts. They settled on locations which had been surveyed by the Army, and their titles were established and valid only because of such surveys. In developing the land, the settlers were protected against Indians by troops of the Army. Finally, when the time came to link these outposts to our eastern civilization, it was the Army that located and constructed the railroads. Only after the railroads had developed engineers of their own and the country had become safer for travel, did the Army relinquish its tasks and turn elsewhere for its missions. The troops of the line remained on the frontiers. The engineers of the Army began then to develop the great waterways, improving our rivers and harbors, to supervise public parks, and to construct and administer our public buildings.

Up to 1855 there was scarcely a railroad in this country that was not projected, built, and operated in large part by the Army. Army engineers located, constructed, and managed such well-known roads as the Baltimore & Ohio; the Northern Central; the Erie; the Boston & Providence; the New York, New Haven & Hartford; and the Boston & Albany. Practically all of the transcontinental railroads were projected by the Army. An Army officer built the best locomotive of his time, after his own design. So widespread was his fame that when the Czar of Russia desired to build a railroad from St. Petersburg to Moscow he chose the American officer for the task. The officer, Lieut. G. W. Whistler, died before completing the work, but he passed it to another Army officer to finish. Americans are proud of their railroads. They owe their early development to the Army.

If the listener is interested, he usually asks, "What else do we owe to the Army in early development?"

So I continue. The Army built the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal and the Erie Canal. The most effective influence in opening up the Middle West was the old Cumberland Pike, running from Cumberland, Md., to St. Louis, Mo. This was built by the Army. Practically every boundary of the United States, and most of the State boundaries, were surveyed and marked by the Army. The famous Lake Survey was made by the Army. Because of engineering difficulties involved in its construction, the old lighthouse erected on Minots Ledge in Boston Bay was one of the most prominent sea-rock lighthouses in the world. This, like most of our lighthouses, was erected by the Army. The old channel of Boston Harbor had a depth of only 18 feet. The Army engineers have increased the depth of this important waterway to 35 feet and widened it from 100 feet to 1,200 feet, and similar work has been carried on by them in all harbors and navigable streams of the United States.

When the American citizen visits our National Capital the first sight to greet his eye is the stately Washington Monument, completed under great difficulties by the Army. He next turns to the Capitol, of which the wings and dome were built by Army engineers. The Army likewise built the old Post Office Building, the new Municipal Building, the Government Printing Office, the War College, the Agriculture Building, and the beautiful Library of Congress. Army engineers supervised construction of the new Lincoln Memorial and practically all of the park system in the District of Columbia. They built the Washington Aqueduct, and are even developing the playgrounds in our Capital City.

I now will discuss the present work of the Army engineers, developing and maintaining our great waterways, including the Panama Canal, which the Army largely built. You gentlemen are familiar with this work and I will not bother you with its details. In addition to the present work itself, there is the planning and projection of future activities. The Board of Rivers and Harbors has recently instituted extensive studies of the port development in our country, concerning their present commercial facilities, the hinterlands which they can serve, their proper development, and factors which advance or retard their progress. Two of these studies for the ports of Boston, Mass., and Portland, Me., have already been published and are attracting enthusiastic attention among the railroads, shippers, and commercial interests generally. It is felt that this work is meeting a long-felt want.

Then there is another direction of interest. One of the most critical points in our transportation system is at the terminals of transfer between land and water carriers. Because of the antiquated facilities the transfer costs are often greater than the cost of transport over hundreds of miles by rail or by ship. The Board of Rivers and Harbors is conducting a thorough investigation of terminal conditions and is giving very valuable advice to the local communities which can profit by improvement in this important respect.

A striking example of this is the project for the development of the port of New York, which presents a most difficult problem. While the Army engineers are not actually physically developing the project, it is being done under their supervision and with their cooperation. The Army engineers are rendering most valuable assistance in developing the ports of Houston, Tex., and Los Angeles, Calif., which are becoming great terminals. The Army is actually constructing the ship channels entering these ports, and is cooperating and advising with the local authorities regarding the construction of terminals, docks, etc. In short, the Army engineers are working with a zeal that is excelled by no other public organization to adapt their various projects to a coordinated scheme for the entire country—one that will fit properly into the industrial and transportation fabric of our national life.

It was not long after the railroads had bound our country into a unity that was further cemented by reconciliation after the Civil War, when we were faced with the problem of colonization of acquired territories—the problem that is perhaps the severest test of the ideals of any nation. Alaska, Hawaii, Cuba, Porto Rico, the Philippines, Guam, and the Canal Zone—one by one these burdens were thrust upon us. We have done this successfully and the major part of the task has been the work of the Army. When our citizens began their mad rush into the Klondike, it was the Army that opened the harbors and built the roads and trails leading to gold. When the gold was discovered or lost, men remained in this new land, and they were protected from mob rule and lawlessness by the Army. The Army surveyed their lands and policed their frontiers. Their only link with civilization was the cable constructed and operated by the Signal Corps, which also operates 000 miles of telegraph overland. Army engineers projected the railroads which are beginning to open the country to intensive culture. Even to-day a large part in the administration of this great territory is played by Army officers. Business to the extent of over $100,000,000 annually is transacted over the 57 cable and telegraph offices and 17 inland radio stations, all operated by the Signal Corps. Alaska knows the Army as a friend in need. And as it was in Alaska, so also in the other colonies or territories which we have acquired.

The Philippines, Hawaii, Cuba, Porto Rico, and Panama all have histories of achievement, histories in which the progressive forces of civilization have struggled against reaction and decadence. That civilized forces are triumphant is due primarily to the intelligent administration and constructive talents of the American Army. Building up public utilities, eradicating terrible diseases, educating the children, attending even to the spiritual needs, creating the institutions of self-government and protecting these institutions from aggression—in all these has the Army left its seal upon our possessions and protectorates and proven itself once more the pioneer of the American pioneers.

Then this question is asked: "You say that the Army is responsible for our colonization—just what is their success?"

In the Philippines, where strife between tribes was almost continuous, we have built roads, and railroads, and schools, as well as churches, and have done more in 20 years to make the Filipinos a united people than was done before in centuries. Do you realize that we have taught practically all of the children to speak one language—the English language?

In Panama, our predecessors were unable to remain. Our work there is a conspicuous example of what can be accomplished, under the worst tropical conditions, in sanitation, municipal engineering, and construction. The American occupation has exerted and will continue to exert a powerful influence upon all of the near-by countries in Central and South America. These are stimulated to undertake much-needed improvements for which the means are derived from the increased prosperity which the canal has brought. For the last four months the tolls collected by our own Government have exceeded a million dollars per month. Seventy-five lines of vessels serving the great trade areas of the world ply through the waterway. The equipment of the Panama Canal as a base for fueling, supply, and repair is complete. It is, incidentally, a military asset of the greatest importance. Its use increases our ability in defense at least 50 per cent, although its total cost is no more than the cost of 10 modern battleships, which would be doomed to obsolescence in 20 years.

Americans do not believe in conquest of territory. The average citizen feels, perhaps, that our pioneering days are over. We can not admit, however, that we have reached the end of our constructive abilities. There are other methods in which a civilization makes itself an influence for good. We have barely emerged from a war in which we fought for our convictions. It was our purpose to fight not only bravely and with determination, but also fairly and with mercy toward the weak and helpless. "American relief" has acquired as much significance as a slogan of American progress as once attached to the cry of "westward ho." The average citizen knows and loves Mr. Hoover for his part in American relief in Europe. Does the average citizen know that, except for the titular head of the organization and a few clerical assistants, the American relief in Europe was the Army and its individuals? Five colonels of the Regular Army acted as Mr. Hoover's principal assistants either in Paris or at the head of more important missions, such as those which were sent into Poland and Armenia. There was a military personnel of 320 officers and 464 enlisted men who constituted the missions and agencies which distributed American relief. In addition, there was a vast amount of work, such as providing convoys and courier service and unloading supplies, performed directly by the American Expeditionary Force itself. In other words, the American relief was merely one of the activities of the American Expeditionary Force. The Russian relief is similarly an organization of Army officers and enlisted men carrying on the work of American civilization as pioneers.

We are obviously on the eve of perhaps the greatest period of construction and progress that we have yet known. The War Department is already playing its accustomed role of constructive pioneering. I have mentioned the work of the military engineers. There is a very significant influence in standardization of manufacture exerted by the department in its planning for the mobilization of industries for war. Military experiments in design of tanks and artillery tractors were influential in stimulating the development of the new tractor industry. The pioneering activities of our Air Service are preparing the way for an aviation industry in stimulating manufacture and in projecting or advising on projects for airways and communication facilities for air traffic. In the near future aerial activity will play a great part in our national existence. The aerial development of the Army is not only for the purpose of war preparation but an extension of the service to commercial life. The department encourages the construction and development of new and better airplanes and is furnishing every aid practicable within appropriations to develop air lines which will be beneficial commercially. If this were not done, I venture to say that there would be years of delay in obtaining any commercial results worth mentioning. I have no doubt that within the next 10 years we will see many air routes established and doing a prosperous business; in fact, it would not be an extreme statement to make that the development will be comparable to that of the automobile.

The Army has likewise had a pioneering part in the development of the radio. Although the primary task of the Signal Corps is the modification of commercial apparatus to suit military purposes, its research and development experts are continually presenting to the scientific world solutions of vexing problems. Among these may be mentioned the loop, which superseded the cumbersome outside antennae, and which led the way to the radio compass, and General Squier's remarkable invention, which applies radio principles to commercial telephone systems and makes possible the utilization of existing telephone, telegraph, and even power lines for the sending of private messages and for broadcasting and reception. The Army has to-day 72 radio stations comprising its radio nets installed to cover the United States. Last month these handled official messages employing more than 230,000 words and accordingly saved the Government a considerable sum of money that would otherwise have been spent on these communications. Does the average citizen realize that the Signal Corps to-day operates approximately 400 telephone systems, half of which are owned by the Government, and that the Army is accordingly a telephone organization second only to the Bell telephone system, which is, of course, the largest telephone organization on the Western Continent? "Just what," he asks "is the value to the country of these systems?"

To answer this I look back first to the construction of the transcontinental railroads and point out that the continual progress of the Army in development work was always followed by elaboration through civilian activities and that it was the elaboration of what the Army began that gave us what we call our civilization to-day. One of the greatest impetus to the expansion of our telegraph system was given by the Signal Corps of the Army just after the Civil War. As late as 1877 there were more than 3,000 miles of telegraph service throughout the South operated by the Signal Corps as an outcome of their service in the war. These wires provided the framework for building up the telegraph service in the South that exists to-day, just as the activities of the Army in early pioneer days resulted in settlements which later became great cities, such as Pittsburgh on the site of Fort Pitt and Chicago on the site of Fort Dearborn. So we can now look upon the activities of our Signal Corps with realization that they provide us with an enormous addition to our other available means of communication and with full expectation that in our coming development these means will prove of inestimable value.

The invention of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army in applying radio principles to commercial telephone and telegraph systems has greatly multiplied the capacity of existing telephone and telegraph lines and increased manyfold our facilities for electrical communication. By utilizing the principle embodied in this invention, it is now possible to send simultaneously over the same line a number of telegraphic messages and at the same time carry on several telephone conversations. The system is now in actual practical use by the large commercial companies, and it is the present practice to send eight two-way telegraph messages and three two-way telephone channels, these being in addition to the messages transmitted by the usual practices. It might be remembered that this new system is just coming into use and its full possibilities have not as yet been worked out, but it is fairly certain that this method offers tremendous possibilities for increasing our facilities for communication. This method is particularly adapted for long-distance telephone transmission, and in all long-distance telephone communication this system is now used to a very large extent. The old-fashioned battery telephone method is quickly becoming obsolete, and the newer methods employing radio principles are rapidly taking its place.

It was also found that by the utilization of the same principles it is possible to transmit telephone and telegraph messages over power transmission lines, and these are being now utilized for broadcasting. As a result of experiments carried on in the Signal Corps a new method of broadcasting, which consists of transmitting speech or music over the lighting circuits, is now being introduced, and it is hoped that before very long it will be possible to receive broadcasted material, whatever its character, by connecting a small suitable receiving set to the light sockets in your homes.

It is interesting to appreciate that our Army has actually been a veritable "vanguard of American civilization," just as the Roman armies left behind many of the most imperishable monuments to that earlier Republic.

I proceed to other little-known activities, such as those of the Chemical Warfare Service. Does the average citizen know that the deadly mustard gas, as well as several other war gases, is being employed experimentally with great hopes of its proving a valuable retardant in the treatment of tuberculosis?

"Why," the citizen exclaims, "I thought that war gases caused respiratory diseases."

I inform him that, on the contrary, it has been established that they tend to prevent such diseases. Among the employees of large war-gas factories influenza and similar diseases were practically unknown during the period of the plagues that swept our country at the close of the World War. Extensive arrangements are being made in the laboratories of the Chemical Warfare Service to conduct research into the fields of medical employment of war gases and by-products.

One of the greatest problems of modern sanitation is that of effective and safe fumigation. It is necessary to wage continuous war against the rats and other vermin which carry plagues. Only recently, in the fumigation of a ship in San Francisco, several men were killed and many injured by the fumes of hydrocyanic acid. The Chemical Warfare Service offered their cooperation and have already given promise of solving this problem. Tear gas was finally selected by them as the best possibility for use in fumigation. Near the end of October a test was made with a concentration of one-eighth the strength which would injure human life. Several officers spent the night in a room adjoining the kitchen which was selected for the test. The gas was projected into the kitchen in the evening, and the officers in the next room reported that they were not inconvenienced thereby. In the morning it was discovered that every mouse, fly, cockroach, and other insect was dead. The gas was then projected into a large warehouse, killing hundreds of pounds of rats, mice, bats, and other vermin. The experiment was repeated in fumigating a ship, and the results were beyond expectations. The Public Health Service are enthusiastic about this work and the possibilities seem limitless.

Tear gases have also been demonstrated as very effective in employment against barricaded criminals and in attempted jail deliveries and other riotous actions. The gas mask is becoming very valuable for use in mining activities. The Chemical Warfare Service has produced the only substance suitable for protection of miners against the deadly carbon-monoxide gas. In their development of gas masks and suitable materials therefor the scientists of the Chemical Warfare Service have made another valuable contribution to the industries in the form of a very active charcoal which is useful in manufacturing gasoline from natural gas and coal-tar products.

It is becoming recognized that any effective control of the boll weevil and similar pests must come from the adaptation of these poisonous compounds. The Air Service is cooperating in experiments by spraying the fields and orchards with the vapors. Experiments are being conducted by the Chemical Warfare Service in cooperation with the Navy Department in hopes of producing a nonfouling paint and thereby avoiding the results of barnacles which gather on ship bottoms. Gases are being used in experiments with the hope of destroying the teredo and limnoria, which bore into submerged timbers in our southern waters. Finally, in addition to all of these constructive activities, one must recognize that the work of the Chemical Warfare Service has led the way to the foundation of an American dye industry that should one day be one of our most valued assets.

Do you know that the Army started our steel industry, guided it through its early development, and, in cooperation with the Navy Department, stimulated it throughout its expansion to the present gigantic proportions? Our Interior Department was an outgrowth of the activities of the War Department; in fact, the latter once consisted of three parts which are now the War Department proper, the Navy Department, and the Interior Department. The Bureau of Public Roads grew out of the work of the Corps of Engineers. The Signal Corps can be said to have played a major part in development of the telegraph industries. The development of our Life-Saving Service was possible largely through the cooperation of hundreds of miles of governmental telegraph lines operated by the Signal Corps. The Lighthouse Service, that plays such an important part in coastwise and terminal ocean traffic, was built up by the Army and turned over to civil agencies only after its success was assured. In all of these ways the Army has proved that it can lead the way as a pioneer, not only through forests and over prairies but also through the fields of science and industry.

The dominating influences in building up "steel" have been the provision of markets, the increasing adaptation in employment, and the specifications for design. The Army was the original market for steel products—offered an ever greater field for the use of steel—and led the entire industry in specifications for design. High-grade steel, as we know it to-day, dates from the Civil War, when the Army called for superior quality in gun metal. In 1880 the requirements for high-carbon steel in making guns were fully 50 per cent more severe than were the general industrial specifications. The Ordnance Department introduced alloy steels in the manufacture of Army material, and prescribed the use of nickel steel at a time when there were very few commercial uses for nickel steel in the entire country and when only two or three commercial concerns were capable of its manufacture. In 1875 the board of investigation at the Watertown Arsenal established a program of investigation and built an emery-testing machine that was the largest in the world; this machine is still in daily use, and was only recently superseded in its rank as the largest in the world. The work of Watertown Arsenal was truly pioneer work in this country, and it has a tremendous influence in stimulating similar investigators on the part of technical schools and colleges. Until the creation of the Bureau of Standards the arsenal was recognized leader in metallurgical study, and it is even to-day doing very original work which must have a noteworthy effect in the future.

When the American citizen takes his family out for a day in the country he frequently meets with a mishap, perhaps breaking a part of his automobile. Does he seek a country blacksmith or a machine shop to repair his Ford? Not he. Proceeding to the nearest garage he finds a stock of spare parts which meet his wants and enable him to go "flivving" off in short order. He might, if he is scientifically inclined, utter a brief prayer to the inventor of "interchangeable manufacture" which produces spare parts. If he were historically inclined as well he could look back over a century and discover that he owes this happy development to the filling of a contract for 10,000 muskets in 1798. That was the beginning of interchangeable manufacture. When the War of 1812 was forced on us the art was so well established that interchangeability had become a normal contract specification of the War Department. One of our contracts in that year contained a clause which reads as follows: "The component parts of pistols are to correspond so exactly that any limb or part of one pistol may be fitted to any other pistol of the 20,000."

It is natural that out of this early development in Army arsenals should have come some consideration for the problem which we now call "scientific management." We feel that America leads the world in the art of the efficiency expert. Does my inquiring friend know that in this field as in so many others the Army appeared as a pioneer?

I refer him to Doctor Taylor, who is well known as a noted protagonist of scientific management and who makes frequent mention of the work of the Army in this respect. In one of his books he observes that the card system of shop returns was invented and introduced as a complete system for the first time in the Government shops of the Frankford Arsenal, and that this was a distinct advance in the art of efficiency management. My prospect is thus brought once more to appreciate that the by-products of our national defense can not sensibly be ignored.

It is common knowledge that one of the greatest developments ahead of us must be that of effectively utilizing our great resources in water power. It is necessary to harness this cheap energy, and yet to do it in such a manner as not to interfere with our navigable waterways, with the growth of our national forests, and with the public enjoyment of our national parks. In the second year of the power commission it has had to study projects for proposed developments of water power in excess of 20,000,000 horsepower, or more than twice the existing power development of this country and more than the combined potential resources of Norway, Sweden, Finland, and the Arctic and Baltic drainages of Russia—the principal water power region of Europe. In two years its engineers have had to study projects for development greater than double the resources of France and Italy and six times the aggregate of projects for development of resources under Federal control in the preceding 20 years. The greater part of this work of examination and study has fallen to the War Department, and the Chief Engineer and his assistants and the chief counsel of the power commission are officers of the Regular Army.

Does the citizen know that the Army organized the Weather Bureau and that during Army control this bureau gave out information that was of tremendous interest throughout the scientific world? Does he know that the Army has played a prominent part in diverting our explosives production into fields that offer great hopes of building up a great American nitrate industry which would be of inestimable benefit to the farmer? Does he know what the Army has done in helping to conserve our resources? The Army Engineers have led us in flood prevention and have assisted greatly in forest protection. At the present time the Air Service is cooperating, as much as funds will permit, in the work of the Department of Agriculture concerning forest-fire prevention. In the past year over 100,000 square miles of forest lands were covered by fliers. Of 1,248 fires occurring in the national preserves of California in three months, the aerial patrols reported 664 and were first to report 370.

"Why must such products come from the Army?" I am asked. "Why can not some other agency do all of this work?"

I reply that neither the Government nor any individuals could afford to maintain a great pioneer organization with no other functions. Such benefits can come only from the work of an organized and trained public force which can produce them virtually as by-products and still perform its primary tasks. About the middle of last April the Mississippi River rose to the point of threatening disaster to thousands of families along its banks. Members of Congress from that region visited the War Department for advice, and varying degrees of concern were manifested by officials of the States affected. It was apparent that there was no organization other than the Army that could drop its routine tasks and handle such an emergency. The War Department had experienced this situation in the past and had prepared detailed regulations to govern the forces which might have to operate under these conditions. It was necessary only to put the existing machinery into motion. The governors of four States were notified that certain military authorities would be assigned districts in their States. Military authorities were informed of depots which would furnish supplies needed. Commanding generals of corps areas were advised of the situation, and they made arrangements for utilizing troops that might be necessary. Our fears were not realized. The danger passed. There was an excellent illustration, however, of the potential value of an organization like ours.

This potential power has unfortunately been called upon many times in our past. After the San Francisco earthquake and fire in 1906, it was the Army that took charge of disorder and administered the forces of order. In the Galveston disaster of 1915 the Army made a record for heroic achievement. Similarly the constructive value of the War Department was felt in the Mount Pelee disaster and during the Ohio and Mississippi floods of 1912. There is a huge file of grateful letters received by the department for its work in these instances and others similar, of which the following is an example:

"Whereas the relief extended to our people during the recent flood * * * has minimized the great loss and damage * * *

"Be it resolved by the Harrisonburg flood relief committee * * * That we hereby extend an expression of our thanks and appreciation for the prompt and efficient manner in which the said relief has been given by the War Department * * *." (1912 floods, Mississippi.)

Last year, in the coal fields of West Virginia, a situation arose that promised untold difficulties for the industry and for the community. The subsidence was so sudden that few citizens were able to appreciate the firm yet friendly manner in which the Army took control and insisted that the rights of the public must be maintained against the actions of any particular class or classes. In a very short time they assured peace without making a single aggressive move and without antagonizing any party to the pending disputes. It is scarcely too much to state that these incidents alone justify the investments which we have made in a national force organized and trained for the national defense against outlawry. It is amazing to discover how little our citizens understand of this dramatic history of purely civic accomplishment. It is equally amazing to most of them when they do learn the facts.

There is a tendency to think of military men as hard-boiled masters of red tape and inefficiency. My own interest in the matter has led me to investigate the individual civil records of officers, to determine the effects of their military training. Their records are brilliant. In spite of the fact that their training has been for war, the influence of the high ideals of the Army and its spirit of teamwork has been enough to counteract the handicaps and enable officers to compete on fair terms. During the first century of its existence, West Point sent 2,371 of its graduates into civil life, most of them after some years of military service in the Army. Even a very small college would graduate as many as 2,371 in a few years. Yet where is there a small or great college or university that can excel the record of these 2,371 graduates in civil life? Here is their record:

"Where do officers gain the administrative knowledge that is necessary to make such records as these?"

After all that I have told of the achievements of the Army at home and abroad my questioners still fail to appreciate that the War Department and the Army is one of the greatest administrative concerns in the country. That it is criticized for adherence to "red tape" is true, but the critics often fail to appreciate that this is because such a huge organization, open as it is to criticism from any citizen of this country, must be conservative and "safe," both of which qualities demand recognized forms of procedure. In the files of The Adjutant General are records of more than 80,000,000 individuals, nearly 10,000,000 of whom have had military service. I could make some picturesque comparisons, such as that the cover sheets of draft records alone would, if placed side by side, reach from the Atlantic to the Pacific, etc. The records of The Adjutant General are accommodated in 83,000 filing cabinets and occupy 450,000 square feet of floor surface.

The very citizen who criticizes us for "red tape" might have sent us one of the countless queries which we receive daily, such as, "Did George Washington throw a silver dollar across the Potomac River?" and "Who originated the term 'Buddy?'" If the citizen makes these inquiries in good faith we are required to answer him, for it is his business even more than ours.

During May, 1919, the average number of pieces of mail received daily in this one office of The Adjutant General was over a half million. In 1919 over 80,000,000 pieces of mail were received. I give these figures to the curious one in order to convince him that there is plenty of opportunity for the Army officer to learn administration. The Adjutant General's is but one of a great number of offices maintained by officers of the Army. There is every known phase of human life involved in their administrative calendars. Does the citizen realize that the Army must train thousands of young men not only for war but also in vocational and educational features? We have a continuous school problem and a normal provision for training men in the following occupations:

Horseshoeing, tractor drivers, dynamo tenders, steam-engine tenders, firemen, oilers, carpenters of all kinds, concrete workers, photographers, lithographers, painters, stonemasons, brick masons, blacksmiths, plumbers, pipe fitters, welders, printers, linemen, radio operators, telegraph operators, switchboard operators, auto mechanics, chauffeurs, battery repairmen, tire repairers, ignition and carburetion experts, sheet-metal workers, canvas workers, tailors, butchers, clerks, stenographers, typists, bookkeepers, instrument repairers, machinists, foundry men, pattern makers, farriers, pharmacists' assistants, X-ray operators, buglers, bandsmen, surveyors, topographers, highway construction men, bridge builders, draftsmen, interior wiremen, riggers, radio electricians, telephone electricians, telegraph electricians, motion-picture operators, bakers, cooks, cargadors, teamsters, wagon masters, wheelwrights, shoemakers, saddlers, laundrymen, and storekeepers.

Officers must pay the Army, keep accounts for the Army, feed the Army, give spiritual guidance for the Army, and in a word administer the Army according to the most civilized concept of human administration. Every officer must understand the military law.

Incidentally, in the face of all criticism which has been leveled at our system of military jurisprudence, it has been pronounced excellent by some of our best civil lawyers. The citizen sometimes asks me about the hard-boiled methods of prison administration prevalent in the Army. I invite his attention to various comments which indicate that our military prisons have donated many valuable contributions to the science and art of prison management. Everything possible is done to humanize our prisons and to develop the unfortunate occupants so that they can practice trades upon release and, even more important, so that their criminal tendencies might be lessened or completely eradicated. In each of our prisons there is a board of psychiatry and sociology which has for its purpose to modernize our treatment of this problem. Does the citizen realize all this?

"No, indeed," he replies, "and I am intensely interested by your exposition." "I begin to see what you meant when you claimed that your policy of national defense was of the participating type." "Nevertheless," he frequently adds, "it costs too much, doesn't it, Mr. Secretary?"

It is indeed a serious objection, at this trying time, that national defense should be so costly, or rather that it is made to appear so costly. As a matter of truth, it is not costly. In 1921, in the city of Boston, Mass., from each dollar paid by the citizen for taxes 3½ cents went for military preparation and 3.7 cents for naval preparation. In other words, his policy of national defense (which he admits to be a participating policy) cost only 7.2 per cent of his total taxation. This is astonishingly small. The citizen is so often misled into charging up against his policy of insurance the cost of a war which his insurance failed to guarantee against. He should rest assured that in a defenseless State he would be continually attacked by predatory forces, and his insurance is only against these potential attacks. The World War is costing us a great amount, it is true. A comparatively small investment in preparation before the war would, however, have greatly decreased the present cost of our unpreparedness.

This accusation that the War Department wastes its money extravagantly is, of course, rather easy to refute. I do not know where this idea started—that the Army wastes its money so lavishly—unless it is from the knowledge that when we rush into war unprepared there is great general inefficiency of spending at a time when we must "spend or take the consequences." I do not desire to inject a political atmosphere into this discussion, and accordingly I hesitate to discuss in detail our efforts to save money. I believe that the operations of the Budget Bureau have, however, been approved by all parties. It seems safe to mention that during the past fiscal year the War Department withheld from expenditure about $85,000,000 which it might have spent. Of this amount, $35,000,000 represents projects that were postponed, while $50,000,000 was actually turned back into the unappropriated balance in the Treasury.

"Why, that is unheard of!"

Unheard of, perhaps, but true. It is difficult to appreciate the determination with which the entire Army has entered into our campaign of saving. Does the citizen know that the chief coordinator has been assisted by nine regular officers and that there would doubtless be more of them in the Bureau of the Budget if their numbers were not now so limited? Or that the present coordinator is himself a retired officer of the Army?

I had occasion to remark a recent editorial in which surprise was manifested at the activity of the officials of the War Department in appealing for a minimum strength for our Regular Army (150,000–130,000). The editor remarked that we should follow the sensible policy of other American countries in spending our money for peace organizations instead of for warlike preparation. I wondered if he knew what policy he was advocating? The United States maintains a smaller per capita strength of Army than that of any other American country except Canada, which is protected by its participation in the British Empire. If we followed the average policy of the Americas we should maintain a Regular Army of 200,000. If Canada is excluded as a part of an Empire whose per capita strength is much greater than ours, we should raise this figure to 250,000. If we determine our policy upon a basis of national wealth the figure would be still higher. If we followed the average policy of the world we should have approximately a million men constantly under arms. The editor, no doubt, didn't know all this. It is to the advantage of all of us that we know these facts about the country in which we live, or else that we do not distort facts for purposes of argument.

I mentioned that Canada is maintaining a smaller army than we are. She is, however, manifesting an interest in military preparation in another direction that can be gauged by one brief comparison. During the past summer we trained about 22,000 men in our citizens' training camps. Canada trained about 100,000 men in hers. With less than one-tenth our population she is training five times as many citizens for national defense. Her "sensible policy" of pacification (to quote the editor) involves fifty times the intensity of effort that we exert in preparation for defense. What a striking contrast this is. Canada evidently believes in the principle expressed by Thomas Jefferson: "None but an armed nation can dispense with a standing army."

"But how does Canada afford this training?" inquires my curious prospect.

I might reply that it is by cutting down on her use of chewing gum. We are a nation of gum chewers. In a year we spend three times as much for "chewing gum and candy" as we spend for military preparation. For soda and confections we spend more than three times; for tobacco, more than four times; for perfumery, jewelry, and other items of adornment, nearly five times; and for theaters, cabarets, and similar amusements, more than three times. In other words, this military preparation that appears to cost so much really costs us about one-eighteenth of what we spend for mild vices and "harmless amusements."

During and after the Conference for Limitation of Armament last fall, I frequently heard the remark, "Why doesn't this country set an example in practice, as she does in words, for the reduction of military forces?"

I reply that although we are one of the greatest of powers, our Army stands sixteenth on the list of the armies of the world. If we had taken the average of military strengths of the powers in that conference, we should raise our strength to about 450,000 men. If we based our strength upon population we should have, roughly, 1,000,000 men. Yet we reduced recently to a strength of 125,000 men.

"Oh," is the reply, "but we could quickly throw 4,000,000 men into the field."

Really, the Army can not take the field without materials and supplies. The proceedings of the conference would have shown that whereas Great Britain was prepared to throw a force of 6,000,000 men into immediate service, France more than 5,000,000, Italy more than 3,000,000, and Japan more than 1,000,000, we could with difficulty outfit an army of a bare million, even if these were available, officered and freshly trained for service. "No, my friend," I reply, "there need be no fear that we might fail to lead the way to reduction. By every conceivable method of comparison you can find that we have set the example in limitation by a very pronounced inferiority to the strength of any civilized power of great importance in the world." The greatest fear is that we might lead too far and tempt other nations before they are prepared for the trust which reduction implies.

The response sometimes comes, "Would not our trust cause other nations to disarm rather than to take the aggressive?"

I reply that I would like to believe it. There are few exceptions to the general rule that all peoples desire peace and decry war. No country has made more determined efforts to remove possible causes of conflict and to lighten burdens of preparedness. For further developments we must, however, wait until the world follows the example already set. We damage other peoples by placing too much trust in them—a trust that we can not even place in our own population.

"What do you mean, Mr. Secretary, by saying that we can not trust our own people?"

I reply that we can not bare our own institutions to the citizens of the country—that we must provide a guard that protects not only the institutions, but also unfortunate individuals against their own worst tendencies, which might lead them to crimes destructive alike to the public weal and to their own happiness. The 1920 census discloses that there were in this country at least 32,314 marshals, sheriffs, and detectives; 82,214 policemen; and 115,653 watchmen, guards, and doorkeepers—a total of 229,981 employed for protection against dangerous impulses. Added to this there were 50,171 firemen, making a total of 280,152 engaged in protection of our institutions against the elements which force us to insure our private affairs. Yet we maintain less than half the number as our share of the police of the world—against peoples at most no more law-abiding than are we. In one year the insurance companies of the United States paid out to policyholders as insurance against death, fire, marine losses, and industrial loss over $1,125,000,000. It is presumable that policyholders paid at least as much for insurance. Added to this amount is the amount paid to the police and watchmen for protection. We invest in a military preparedness policy, accordingly, less than one-fifth of the amount paid for internal insurance and protection.

"These figures are very remarkable," he says. "I am impressed with the logic of your position—but something still makes me dislike to spend money for military preparations."

If I can not defend myself against the imputations of militarism I turn back to my predecessors for support. John C. Calhoun remarked many years ago when he ran afoul of similar objections, "If our liberty should ever be endangered by the military power gaining the ascendancy, it will be from the necessity of making those mighty and irregular efforts to retrieve our affairs, after a series of disasters, caused by a want of military knowledge, just as in our physical system a state of the most dangerous excitement and paroxysm follows that of the greatest debility and prostration. To avoid these dangerous consequences and to prepare the country to meet a state of war, particularly at its commencement, with honor and safety, much must depend upon the organization of our military peace establishment." My immediate predecessor also observed that "I know of no war in which America has been engaged, offensive or defensive, which was brought about by Army pressure, or, indeed, stimulated by military desire." This deep belief has been manifested by practically every public official in close contact with this department, and it has been, perhaps, the most common thought of our Chief Executives that we must look well to defensive plans if we would accomplish best our peaceful program. One has but to look over the face of the earth to-day to realize that even those nations who have adopted the most fantastic theories of idealistic organization continue impressed with their need for national defense.

"Perhaps this is all true," replies the citizen, "but why is it, then, that the officials of the War Department and of the Army are always talking and thinking about national defense and about war, when the rest of us are thinking about peace?"

The citizen so often forgets that we pay these officials to think about war and about defense. The policemen are supposed to be on the lookout for thefts and the firemen for fires. The householder thinks only of the robberies in his own block. I ask the citizen a question, "How many wars have we Americans been through in our history?"

"Oh, about five or six," is the reply.

I then point out to him that while he counts war on the fingers of one hand the War Department numbers its actual calls to active service at more than 100.

"Why, I didn't know that! What were these calls?"

I observe that there has actually been an average of one call every year and a half, as follows:

1775. The Revolution.
1762. Wyoming Valley insurrection.
1786. Shay's rebellion.
1790. Northwest Indian war.
1791. Whisky insurrection.
1798. War with France.
1799. Fries's rebellion.
1801. Tripolitan war.
1806. Burr conspiracy.
1806. Sabine expedition.
1807. Chesapeake Bay affair.

The Army remembers these incidents by the loss of friends or predecessors and, generally, by the augmentation of the difficulties in each case due to lack of previous preparation. The country should remember them as events in the evolution of our very active nationality.

during which our principles and our possessions were defended or our possessions actually increased. We can accordingly find in this history what is a very great dividend in return for the comparatively small investment made by our country for its defensive preparation, and yet a very great cost for our lack of such preparations. When I have reached this conclusion my prospective supporter for national defense generally becomes very silent and thoughtful and leaves me—no doubt to pore over his histories in hopes of finding something wrong with my story. Since he never returns with refutation, I assume that he has accepted my statements and been somewhat instructed.

I trust, gentlemen, that I have not wearied you with this quite expansive treatment of what is to me an intensely interesting subject. I hope that you will forgive my method of attacking the problem, and that if you are wearied you will appreciate that it is because I lack the graphic powers of an Edward Bok, and not because my purpose is less important than arousing an interest in the Empire of the Netherlands. I feel convinced that this chamber understands the merits of the policy which I have endeavored to present in its true light to the citizens of our country. I did not come before it to sell insurance to you gentlemen, for you have always been coworkers for reasonable defense. I do hope, however, that you might, individually or collectively, from time to time remember my little discussion and pass it along. Knowledge of our country and of its institutions we must have. We are united in our ideals; we must be united in our methods of defending those ideals. Regardless of our political affiliations or beliefs, we can always join in wholehearted response to the appeal of Theodore Roosevelt when he cried, "Our voice is now potent for peace, and is so potent for peace because we are not afraid of war. But our protestations upon behalf of peace would neither receive nor deserve the slightest attention if we were impotent to make them good."

ORDER OF BUSINESS—THE CHRISTMAS HOLIDAY.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Wyoming yield to me for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The suggestion offered yesterday by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] tentatively touching the matter of the Christmas recess did not strike a very responsive chord. There is no objection on this side of the House, so far as I know, to holding night meetings and proceeding with these appropriation bills. I, personally, do not see any reason why we should not go ahead with the appropriation bill that is now ready this afternoon and possibly conclude general debate upon it, and we are willing to sit nights. There is a desire, however, for some change in the program as outlined by the gentleman from Wyoming touching the matter of the holiday recess.

Mr. MONDELL. What does seem to be the desire? To have a recess of a week?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Something like that, I should say; seven or eight days.

Mr. MONDELL. I would say to the gentleman that no request of that sort has come to me. One or two gentlemen have suggested that they would like to go away. I understand that some gentlemen want to go to Panama and others would like to go elsewhere and have a vacation, but in the main the membership will, I understand, be here, and I think we owe more to the gentlemen who are going to remain, who must remain, than to the few who feel they must leave. Of course, the House must decide this matter eventually, but as matters now stand it seems to me that the majority opinion on both sides is in favor of a very short recess.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if history repeats itself, as I assume it will, there will not be a quorum here during about seven or eight days of the holiday season, whether Members go to Panama or to their homes.

The gentleman from Wyoming knows from long experience here, I am sure, that at no holiday season have we ever had a quorum, and that when a quorum was insisted upon all business stopped. I think it would be very desirable to have an arrangement for some seven or eight days' holiday, and, so far as this side of the House is concerned, we are willing to stay at night to bring about the passage of these appropriation bills and do everything we can to expedite business. This side of the House does not want any extra session of Congress, I will say to the gentleman. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. If I may say so, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that committee will sit nights if it is necessary, or any time.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think it has been generally understood for some time that we would proceed continuously with the appropriation program until it is completed by the House. That may discommode some gentlemen; it may not be satisfactory to all, but I believe the majority of the Members want to remain here and have only a very short recess at Christmas. Personally I feel that it is the duty of the House to remain and to proceed with its legislation. Of course, if the House is not disposed to do that, the House must be the judge of the matter.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In so far as I know the sentiment of this side of the House—and I do not mean that I have canvassed it thoroughly—we are willing to stay late enough at night to make up the time that will be required to have a seven or eight day holiday recess. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think it would be humanly possible, and I doubt if the gentleman from Tennessee thinks it would be, to have evening sessions or night sessions sufficiently to dispose of the business that might be disposed of during the holiday week.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. My observation has been that upon appropriation bills business is done more rapidly and more satisfactorily at evening sessions than at any other time.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word. I am nearly as old as anyone around here, and I would come here every night and stay as long as anybody to complete business, but I would like to go home for a week at Christmas. If it is necessary I shall stay here, but I will not be absent a single night or day during the session. I think that we can do business nights. I always work at home in the night to 10 or 11 o'clock, and have done so for the last 60 years. It does not make a man any older if he works, but if he loafs he is good for nothing, and if he spends any time drinking whisky he is worse off yet. I work all the time. I have not been home earlier than 10 o'clock any night in Washington since I have been a Member of this House.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, next Wednesday will be the day for the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. There are only two bills on the calendar, and one of them is hotly contested. People are interested in that bill and will probably come here if it is coming up for consideration. I would like to ask the gentleman whether it is likely we shall consider Calendar Wednesday business on next Wednesday?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, it is my present purpose to ask the House to dispense with Calendar Wednesday and all other special days, except, perhaps, unanimous-consent days, until the appropriation-bills program is disposed of, [applause], or at least very well along. And, referring again to the matter of the Christmas recess, I am still of the opinion that the recess should only be for two days. However, if that is not the view of the House, I would like to have gentlemen inform me as soon as may be in the near future what their views are. There are many Members who can not leave here, who can not get away even though the vacation is for a week, and I think that, notwithstanding some gentlemen may want to make trips home or elsewhere, we could have a quorum during the holiday recess and do quite a bit of business. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, next Monday is District of Columbia day. In case the members of that committee should insist on District of Columbia business on that day, would it not require a special rule to do away with District day?

The SPEAKER. It would not.

Mr. BLANTON. It would be by a mere vote of the House?

The SPEAKER. That depends upon whom the Chair recognizes and what the action of the House was upon his motion.

Mr. BLANTON. But in case the committee did demand that day it would require a vote of the House to set that day aside?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the day is not worth anything.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] that the House do now adjourn.

ADJOURNMENT.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 49 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, December 11, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

ORGANIZATIONS INDORSING AMERICAN VALUATION—CORRECTION.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to present and have printed in the RECORD two letters in regard to the appearance of certain names in a list of organizations indorsing American valuation, which were printed in the RECORD September 18. These letters are from the representatives of the Arkwright Club and the consolidated tariff committee of American Manufacturers stating that the names of those two organizations were printed without any authority from either organization and should not have appeared in the list. I ask that the two letters be printed in order to make the record correct.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WILLIAM F. GARCELON, AGENT,
THE ARKWRIGHT CLUB, 1880,
Boston, December 6, 1922.

Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Monday, September 18, 1922, on page 12836, there appears a so-called list of "organizations indorsing American valuation." This was presented by Senator ODDIE. In that list there appears the name of the Arkwright Club.

The Arkwright Club, as an organization, has taken no position in this matter and has authorized no one to place its name in such a list.

It would be appreciated if you will place this statement in the RECORD.

Some of the members of the club have been strongly opposed to the American valuation plan; therefore, the club itself took no position.

Very truly yours,

WM. F. GARCELON, Agent.

(Consolidated tariff commission representing National Council of American Cotton Manufacturers, American Association of Cotton Manufacturers, National Association of Cotton Manufacturers, Association of Cotton Textile Merchants, Arkwright Club.)

BOSTON, MASS., December 6, 1922.

Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Monday, September 18, 1922, on page 12837, there appears a so-called list of "organizations indorsing American valuation." This was presented by Senator ODDIE. In that list appears the name of the consolidated tariff committee of American Manufacturers.

This committee authorized no one to place its name in such a list and did not, as a committee, indorse the American valuation plan, individual members at times expressing their opinion for and against it.

Will you kindly have this statement placed in the records of the Senate, so that the misstatement as above may not stand?

Very truly yours,

WM. F. GARCELON, Secretary.

LECTURES BY LIEUT. CAPT. HELLMUTH VON MULCKE.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present and have printed in the RECORD a resolution passed by the Captain Newell Rodney Fiske Post of Cranford, N. J., opposing the lecturing by Lieut. Capt. Hellmuth von Mulcke on his experiences on the German cruiser Emden.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES, NATIONAL LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE,
Washington, D. C., December 2, 1922.

Hon. JOSEPH S. FRELINGHUYSEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am taking the liberty of transmitting to you the following resolution, which was passed by the Captain Newell Rodney Fiske Post, No. 335, of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, in Cranford, N. J., and which has been concurred in by our national officers. The resolution is short, and I am sure that the situation should be brought to the attention of the country through the medium of its publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. May we count on your good offices?

"Resolved, That the Captain Newell Rodney Fiske Post, No. 335, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, of Cranford, N. J., goes on record as being emphatically opposed to allowing Lieut. Capt. Hellmuth Von Mulcke to come into the United States of America and lecture, either privately or publicly, relating his experiences on the German cruiser Emden in sinking ships and destroying human lives.

Yours very truly,

EDWIN S. BETTELHEIM, Jr., Chairman.

Mr. BALL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 247) providing funds for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property during the convention of the Imperial Council of the Mystic Shrine in the District of Columbia June 5, 6, and 7, 1923, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 938) thereon.

Mr. McLEAN, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 4096) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the enunciation of the Monroe doctrine, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 250) to donate to the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States certain war trophies captured by or surrendered to the armed forces of the United States in the World War, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 939) thereon.

AMENDMENT OF TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT.

Mr. NELSON. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4100) to amend section 9 of the trading with the enemy act as amended, and I submit a report (No. 936) thereon.

I wish to make a brief statement, if the Senate will permit me.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Minnesota is asking unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; it simply grants an extension of time, and I shall make a brief statement about it.

Under the trading with the enemy act six months' time was given for claimants whose property had been taken by the Alien Property Custodian to make requests for the return of the property and to prefer claims for it. By the act of 1921 that time was extended 18 months and by the bill which I have just reported it is intended to extend it for another year. The letter of the Alien Property Custodian states that—

> The same situation arises this year as existed last year, and unless the time for filing suit is further extended much hardship will ensue, and in all probability there will be hundreds of suits filed against the Alien Property Custodian by those who will not await further congressional action dealing with the disposition of the alien property. The bringing of those suits will not only work a hardship to a lot of enemy owners but will necessitate an expenditure on the part of the Government of additional sums in the employment of assistant counsel and otherwise for the handling of these suits.

The bill is recommended not only by the Alien Property Custodian but by the Department of Justice. The present time within which claims may be filed will expire on the 2d of January next. The object of the bill is simply to extend that time for one year. That is the whole purpose of the bill. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I understand that section 9 of the trading with the enemy act authorized these claimants to property to go to the courts and sue for the return of their property, and that there is no statute of limitation which rests upon that right to go to the courts. I inquire of the Senator from Minnesota if there is any statutory limitation that prevents these people from going to the courts?

Mr. NELSON. I think that is the statute we refer to. The claimants were originally given six months' time under the trading with the enemy act, and in 1921 the time was extended by the act of that year for 18 months, and it is the purpose of the bill to give additional time in which to prefer claims and bring suit.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My understanding was that the limitation related to their making settlement with the Alien Property Custodian and the Attorney General, and not with regard to the question of their going into the Court of Claims and suing for the property.

Mr. NELSON. The bill proposes to amend section 9 of the trading with the enemy act.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The limitation probably relates to both.

Mr. NELSON. Yes. The bill has been approved by the Alien Property Custodian.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Under section 9 of the trading with the enemy act it was proposed that property unlawfully and unjustly taken might be recovered either through the Alien Property Custodian or the courts. By that was meant cases where the property of an American citizen or a national of one of our allies was involved or was taken only as a war measure, because the American citizen or the national of one of our allies was in the enemy's country or where the property was taken by mistake.

I would have no objection if the bill limited the matter to one year further in order to give people who may have a righteous cause an opportunity to go to the courts and be heard. But, Mr. President, I think the time has come to take affirmative action with reference to the payment of American claims. I am not objecting to the Senator's proposition. I am not going to object now. I am perfectly willing that the bill shall be considered.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me to interject one remark? The bill does not change the law in any respect except that it extends the time one year.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is what I understand, and I have no objection to that; but I think the time has come when some affirmative action should be taken looking to the payment of American claims. Property was taken over by the German Government from its nationals and under the treaty of Berlin given to us to pay our claimants; that is to say, it really belonged to the enemy at the time it was taken; but there has been no action taken by this Government to protect the rights of its own citizens up to this time. In 1914 some of the American claims arose, and here we are about to enter 1923.

Nine years ago some of these claims arose and most of them have existed for five or six years, and yet no action has been taken. It is true the President has appointed a commission to hear the claims, but the commission has not met. Congress has taken no action. There are a great many of the American claims which are meritorious. The property of innocent American citizens was sacrificed and their lives were sacrificed. I think the time has come when the American Congress and the American Government should give some attention to looking after the claims of American citizens as well as the claims to property of aliens.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That section 9 of the trading with the enemy act as amended is amended by striking out the words "18 months" in such section and inserting in lieu thereof "30 months."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND PATENT TO JOHN W. STANTON.

Mr. MYERS. From the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 2934) to provide for the issuance to John W. Stanton by the Secretary of the Interior of patent to certain land, upon payment therefor at the rate of $1.25 per acre, and I submit a report (No. 937) thereon.

I ask the indulgence of the Senate while I make a very brief statement relative to the purpose of the bill. I should like to have the bill read at the desk for the information of the Senate, and then I shall ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

It is a bill that is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, and he urges immediate action in order that it may stand some chance of getting through the House at this session. I have a letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Interior urging the passage of the bill in order that the party interested may not lose all his rights in the matter.

The land in question was entered under the homestead law, and the entryman complied with the law in all respects and cultivated and improved the land to the extent required. He borrowed from a party, with whom I am well acquainted, $500 with which to improve the land, and all that money was put into improving the land, but just before the entryman made the final proof, or just before patent was issued, he died. He left no relatives or heirs whatever. The party who loaned the $500 which went into improvements on the land, and for which he holds a mortgage on the land, asks leave to have the Secretary of the Interior issue a patent to him instead of to the original entryman upon the payment by him of $1.25 an acre, the exact amount the entryman would have had to pay.

I send the bill to the desk and ask that it may be read for the information of the Senate, and then I shall ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The reading clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to issue patent to John W. Stanton, of Great Falls, Mont., for the west half of the southwest quarter of section 2, the north half of the northwest quarter of section 11, and the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 3, all in township 28 north of range 4 east, principal meridian of Montana, upon payment by said John W. Stanton therefor at the rate of $1.25 per acre.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to ask the Senator from Montana if the bill which has just been read has been before the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys and has been unanimously reported from that committee?

Mr. MYERS. The bill has received the unanimous report of the committee. There was a good attendance of the committee, constituting a quorum, and all members of the committee who were present thought the bill should be enacted into law at once.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

ARMAMENT CONFERENCE TREATIES.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read. It is very brief, and I think there will be no objection to it.

The resolution (S. Res. 381) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish the Senate information showing to what extent and by what nations the six treaties known as the armament conference treaties, described in Senate Document No. 124, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session, have been ratified, and to give the date of ratification in each case by each country.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar provided for by the rule may be suspended for the day. We had a call of the calendar the other day.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I think we did have a call of the calendar the other day, and I do not know that there is any business very pressing on the calendar, although there is a bill on the calendar which I should like to have taken up, but I do not seem to be able to have an opportunity to have that done. However, I desire to ask the Senator from Washington what is his purpose. Does he intend to push to a final vote the bill which he seeks to have taken up to-day? I have no desire to delay the consideration of the bill, I will say candidly to the Senator, but a bill of such magnitude, of course, requires some consideration.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know the Senator from Alabama has no intention of unduly delaying the passage of the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, several days must elapse before the Senate will be in a condition to consider a measure of such importance. If the Senator intends, when the shipping bill shall have been taken up to-day and the debate for the day seems to have been concluded, to ask that the Senate adjourn, I have no objection to suspending the call of the calendar this morning.

I wish to say, and I wish to have it understood, that I do not intend to interpose any unusual delay against the consideration of the bill, but I know that there are Senators on this side of the Chamber who desire to speak on the bill in its initial stages who are not prepared to do so to-day. I should not, therefore, desire to consent that the call of the calendar be dispensed with, if the intention on the part of those pressing the ship subsidy bill is, while Senators who are opposed to that measure are not prepared to speak, to resort to extreme measures. If that is not the purpose of the Senator from Washington, I shall have no objection to his request.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, of course, I did not expect that the bill would be disposed of to-day. I did intend to make some brief remarks myself upon the measure. Then, of course, if Senators are not prepared to consider it further to-day, I would not press for a vote, because I know it is quite a controverted measure and that it will take some considerable time to dispose of it even without any unnecessary opposition. When we conclude our business to-day I should like to have the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning, but I would not be disposed to press that suggestion, of course, after what the Senator from Alabama has said.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think we ought so soon to start taking recesses until 11 o'clock the following day. Later on we may do so. I have no objection to taking a recess until to-morrow, but I think, with the committees meeting, 12 o'clock would be time enough to have the Senate convene following the recess.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Probably, so far as to-morrow is concerned, that suggestion may be all right.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to say just a word to the Senator brought out by his suggestion of a recess until 11 o'clock either to-morrow or for the next several days. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry have arranged some hearings on legislation which I think is of very great importance, and, in accordance with those arrangements, men have come from different parts of the United States. There is quite a delegation here now. I talked with the man who has charge of the arrangements for a number of bankers and farmers from the Northwest, and he stated it would take them three or four days to be heard. The Senator knows that if the Senate meets at 11 o'clock that means that committee work will have to suffer. I realize that it may be said the committee could go on while the Senate is in session, but everyone knows that is very unsatisfactory, for it frequently results in having only one or two members of the committee present. The legislation which we are considering pertains to and is intended to affect directly the agriculturists of the country. I would very much dislike to see any action taken within the next several days at least that would prevent us from going on without hearings in the regular way.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say that I will not ask the Senate to take a recess to an earlier hour than 12 o'clock to-morrow in any event.

Mr. NORRIS. A recess to an earlier hour for the following day and for several days thereafter would be just as bad. I do not want silence on my part to be intrepreted as in any way giving my consent to that kind of an arrangement.

Mr. FLETCHER and Mr. POMERENE addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield first to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I realize the force of what the Senator from Nebraska has said. Furthermore, I know that the Banking and Currency Committee will meet to-morrow at 10.30 o'clock to consider the rural credits bill pending before that committee, and it will be quite impossible for that committee to consider that and other matters and give hearings if we are going to recess and meet here at 11 o'clock. I understand the Senator now to suggest that he will not press such a request for the present, at any rate, and he certainly ought not to insist upon it, because it would deprive us entirely of the opportunity of considering very important measures, especially those on the subject of rural credits.

I do not know that there is any measure of particular importance now on the calendar, but there have been some bills reported since the last call of the calendar, and I am inclined to think that we ought to go on regularly and stand by our rules. This being Calendar Monday, let us dispose of such measures as ought to be disposed of, and then, after that, I presume it is the purpose of the Senator to move to consider the ship subsidy bill. In the meantime, however, I think we ought to proceed regularly and deal with the calendar.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a further suggestion?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand this matter is really not debatable, but I have no objection to the Senator making a suggestion.

Mr. POMERENE. I wanted to make a suggestion along the line of those made by the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Nebraska. We are going to have a number of hearings before the Banking and Currency Committee on the subject of rural credits. The chairman of that committee has just advised me that those hearings will probably take a week or two weeks. They are of the utmost importance. I recognize the fact that the Commerce Committee has been studying this question of a merchant marine for many weeks. Some of the rest of us have tried to give it some attention. Personally, I have not come to any conclusion about it; but I want the opportunity to attend religiously upon these debates as they occur, and I can not perform my duties in the Banking and Currency Committee and be here at the same time.

While this is the short session of the Congress, this is a matter of the utmost importance; and whatever may be the ultimate result of this legislation, it does seem to me that we can afford to study it very carefully before coming to a final conclusion.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I appreciate just what the Senator from Ohio says. I appreciate that it is difficult to hold these committee hearings with the Senate in session. Some Members would like to be at the committee meetings. They would also like to be on the floor of the Senate. I can not give any assurance, however, with reference to the action of the Senate in that respect, except to say that I shall not ask the Senate to-day to recess to a time earlier than 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Everybody recognizes the controversial character of the bill that we hope to bring up; and while I assume that whatever opposition there is to the bill will be based upon its merits, and that there will be no disposition to take advantage of the situation by reason of this being a short session to defeat the bill or unduly delay it, yet the bill is on the calendar; it has been pending for quite a long while; and it seems to me that we shall have to take every reasonable means at our disposal to expedite its passage, even though we may have to interfere with the hearings that may be necessary in other very important matters. I think everybody recognizes the situation that confronts us, and everybody will appreciate, I think, any efforts that are made to expedite the passage of the bill, even though they may interfere with hearings upon various important measures.

As I say, however, I shall not ask the Senate to-day to recess to an hour earlier than 12 o'clock to-morrow. I had hoped that we might dispense with the call of the calendar this morning. I know that under the rules this is Calendar Monday, and if any Senator objects I shall not complain, of course. He has a perfect right to do it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, the bill which the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] proposes to bring forward is an important measure. It was made an issue in the political campaign which terminated in the election on the 7th of November last. It would not be accurate to say that this measure was the sole issue which determined the very far-reaching results of that election. It is true, however, that when the President proposed to bring the bill forward prior to the election and have it passed upon by the Congress then, it was announced in the public press that the leaders of the majority of the body at the other end of the Capitol were opposed to that action, because they anticipated that if the ship subsidy bill was passed by the House of Representatives prior to the election it would inevitably result in the defeat of many Republican Members for reelection, and Members particularly from the sections represented by the leader of the majority in the House of Representatives recognized the measure as unpopular with the American people, particularly with their constituencies.

They had no hesitancy then in saying that the consideration of the ship subsidy bill should be deferred until after the election; and the reason this action was suggested was that to pass it prior to the election would prevent their reelection or return to Congress.

The President, as the press announced, reluctantly responded to that attitude of the leader of the majority in the House of Representatives and others associated with him in the political affairs of this Nation. No effort was made to bring the bill forward and pass it prior to the election. It is true that other measures were pending which consumed the time of the Congress. The President's purpose, expressed early in the session, was to make this the supreme legislative issue. He yielded that attitude out of respect to the leaders of the majority party in this body and in the body at the other end of the Capitol.

When the election was held, this bill was one of the primary issues that determined the results in 50 or more congressional districts throughout the country; and everywhere this bill was made an important issue the result was an overwhelming defeat for the champions of the measure. You can not name a western district where the ship subsidy bill was an issue at the last election where the advocate of this legislation, the open and avowed champion of the measure, won the support of his constituents.

This issue, with others associated with it, came near resulting in a reversal of the political control of both Houses of Congress. It encompassed the defeat of many Representatives and of some Senators. Now it is proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], representing the administration, to take advantage of the very short period which must transpire under the Constitution of the United States before those who received the approval of the public in the last election, those who won on this and other issues associated with it, shall have the opportunity of registering their votes in the Senate and in the House of Representatives and pass the bill in virtual defiance of public sentiment in the United States. That is the proposition implied from the suggestion of the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Washington, when he announces his purpose, on this the very first day the ship subsidy bill is before the Senate, to begin a process of pressure, before its provisions have even been explained to the Senate, to drive the measure through the Senate under whip and spur so that it may go back to the House and pass the conference before the 4th of March, because he knows and the administration knows that if the bill does not pass before that time its doom is sealed for all time.

No, you do not concede that openly. Let me ask you, if you were not afraid of the issue, why did you postpone it until after the election, and why are you so hasty in bringing it forward since the election, so as to have it disposed of before the newly elected representatives of the people in the House and in the Senate have the opportunity of reflecting in their votes respecting this bill the voices and the pleasures of their respective constituencies? The proper thing to do, since you did not have the courage to bring it forward and expressly make it an issue in the last election, and since you must know that the measure is unpopular, as evidenced by the result of the election, is to give those who have the new and recent approval of the constituencies represented in the House of Representatives and in the Senate of the United States the opportunity of disposing of the issue. That is representative government.

Something has been said heretofore about changing the Constitution so as to reflect more promptly in this Chamber and in the House of Representatives the desires of the constituencies represented in these bodies. While the framers of the Constitution undoubtedly recognized the dangers of hasty action in legislation, they never dreamed that after a measure had been passed on by the American people, and disapproved by them, those who had been rejected in the election would dare to insist upon passing measures which the election showed to be unpopular.

You have the power to take this action. I presume you have the votes. If you can get the votes you can pass this bill, which you know the people of this country refused to approve, and which you know they will not approve, and thus permit the men who have been defeated upon this very issue to determine it against the will and the desires of their constituents.

This measure ought to go over until the long session of Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington to dispense with the call of the calendar?

Mr. FLETCHER. I object, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection. The calendar will be proceeded with under Rule VIII.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 214) to amend section 24 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was announced as the first business on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 491) to provide, without expenditure of Federal funds, the opportunities of the people to acquire rural homes, and for other purposes, was read.

Mr. ROBINSON. This appears to be a bill of considerable importance. The author of the bill, or some one who is familiar with its provisions, should, I think, give the Senate an explanation of its terms and purposes. I do not desire to object to its consideration, but I do want to understand what the object of the bill is.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection, and the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1016) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States," was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LOANS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 7) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate the business of loaning money on security of any kind by persons, firms, and corporations other than national banks, licensed bankers, trust companies, savings banks, building and loan associations, and real estate brokers in the District of Columbia," approved February 4, 1913, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let that go over.

The bill (S. 2391) to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign trade zones in ports of entry of the United States, to expedite and encourage foreign commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. That was virtually taken care of in the tariff bill, or we undertook to take care of it, though not so fully as this bill would do. I ask that the bill may go to the calendar under Rule IX.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) authorizing transportation for dependents of Army field clerks and field clerks Quartermaster Corps was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

DRY DOCK AT NEW ORLEANS, LA.

The bill (S. 2718) to provide for leasing of the floating dry dock at the naval station, New Orleans, La., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That authority be, and is hereby, given to the Secretary of the Navy, when in his discretion it will be for the public good, to lease, for periods not exceeding five years and revocable at any time, the floating dry dock at the naval station, New Orleans, La.; and such lease shall be reported annually to Congress: Provided, That all moneys received from such lease shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PAGE subsequently said: Mr. President, referring to the bill (S. 2718) to provide for the leasing of the floating dry dock at the naval station, New Orleans, La., the facts about the bill are these: Some questions have arisen which seem to render it necessary to have the bill go back to the Committee on Naval Affairs and for that committee to have further consideration of the matter. I had intended to ask that it might go over when it was reached at this time. I was not in the Chamber when the bill was called, however, and I now ask unanimous consent that the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed may be reconsidered, so that the bill may remain upon the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. FLETCHER. I know nothing about it, but I suggest, if the Senator thinks it ought to be recommitted, that he then have it recommitted instead of being kept on the calendar.

Mr. PAGE. I prefer that it be not recommitted until after to-morrow, when the Committee on Naval Affairs expect to consider it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection to the reconsideration of the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed, it will then go to the calendar. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2589) to amend section 11 of the act entitled "An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia," approved January 15, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 67) for the relief of the heirs of Adam and Noah Brown was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

MARINE HOSPITAL RESERVATION, CLEVELAND, OHIO.

The bill (H. R. 11040) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the sale of the marine-hospital reservation in Cleveland, Ohio," approved July 26, 1916, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second paragraph of the act entitled "An act authorizing the sale of the marine-hospital reservation in Cleveland, Ohio," approved July 26, 1916, be amended by striking out after the word "therefor" the words "within a limit of cost of $400,000, and the balance of the proceeds of the sale shall be paid into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts" and insert in lieu thereof the following words, "and the Secretary of the Treasury shall with the proceeds procure, by purchase, a site in or convenient to said city of Cleveland, Ohio, and erect thereon a suitable building for use as a United States Marine Hospital and other Government hospital purposes, the same to be in accordance with the designs to be prepared by the Supervising Architect to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That the cost of the site and construction of the new building shall not exceed the sum realized from the sale of the present building and site: Provided further, That after the sale of the present property it shall remain in the custody and control of the United States until after the completion of the proposed new hospital plant."

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] give a short explanation of the bill? There is no report filed with it.

Mr. POMERENE. I have been somewhat familiar with this matter for a period of several years. The hospital was built probably 70 years ago or thereabouts, in what is now the central part of the city. One of the officers of the Health Department told me to-day that the building is now perhaps worth about $50,000 to $75,000, on a site which is worth a million dollars or more, and the place is not at all fitted for a hospital. The ground has advanced tremendously in value. It is anticipated that out of the sale of the land more than a million dollars can be obtained, and that would build a new hospital in an appropriate location in the city.

Mr. SMOOT. Is there a real necessity in Cleveland, Ohio, for a marine hospital?

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, yes; I think so.

Mr. SMOOT. That was the only thought in my mind in asking the Senator the question.

Mr. POMERENE. At this hospital they have taken care of the sailors in the Lake service and at the present time, I understand, they are taking care of some of the veterans. I saw the hospital not to exceed three weeks ago and I am sure that no Senator would say that it is in a proper place. It is not at all modern, and it would be very unwise to attempt to refit or reconstruct it on the present site. I have no doubt about that at all.

Mr. SMOOT. The only doubt I had in my mind was whether it was necessary to build a new hospital there.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, I think so.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood the land is very valuable and that the present site is no place for a hospital. The only question in my mind was whether we would want to take the million dollars or more which we may get for the land and build a new hospital at this time.

Mr. POMERENE. I am sorry that I can not give the Senator the full details in that behalf, but I am perfectly clear in my own mind that the property ought to be sold.

Mr. LODGE. I take it that the hospital renders service for the Lakes similar to that rendered by our marine hospitals on the coast?

Mr. POMERENE. I think so.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me it is a most meritorious and proper measure.

Mr. POMERENE. There is no doubt about it at all. I think it would be a waste of good money to have that large investment in land in a place which is wholly unfitted for hospital purposes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty Senators have answered to their names and a quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12817.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate closes its business to-day it take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. ROBINSON. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Then I make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington moves that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow. The question is on that motion.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the motion now submitted by the Senator from Washington contemplates a very extraordinary proceeding. The bill which he presents for the consideration of the Senate has not been explained to this body; it has not even been read; and yet he is now asking to exclude the consideration of all morning business and to confine the deliberations of the Senate wholly to this measure. Frankly speaking, this is a bill that ought to be considered and discussed at length by the Senate. There is no justification before the bill has been read to hasten action concerning it. Such proceedings are calculated to provoke obstructive processes. There will be no disposition of this bill until the Senate has had an opportunity to give it full consideration and to discuss it fairly. While that is being done there is no reason or justification for precluding the consideration of morning business or the transaction of other business which it may be found necessary to bring before the Senate.

Many of our proceedings here are by unanimous consent; there are a large number of appropriation bills which must be considered and disposed of during the present short session; and I apprehend that the Senator from Washington himself within a very short time will be asking that the pending measure may be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senate may, by its process of unanimous consent, proceed to the consideration of some appropriation bill.

For my part, I have no disposition to cause the business of the Senate to be conducted in any extraordinary manner; but the Senator from Washington, it seems to me, should at least explain the bill and seek to justify it before he attempts to commit the Senate to a hastening-up process for its passage.

The bill is voluminous. As reported by the Commerce Committee of the Senate the bill contains some very far-reaching amendments. The bill passed the House of Representatives by a majority of only 24. Sixty-nine Members of the House who voted for the bill and constituted more than that majority have been defeated, and their places in the body at the other end of the Capitol, after the 4th of March, will be occupied by other Representatives. This bill in the form that it passed the House, if submitted to that body to-day, could not be passed if the Members who voted for it, although they had been defeated, sought in a direct way to reflect the will of their constituents.

I repeat, 69 Representatives in the House who voted for the bill have been defeated. Of course, it can not be said that their attitude in favor of this measure constituted the sole cause of their defeat, but there is not a Senator here who represents a constituency in the West or Middle West, there is not a Representative from the Middle West in the House who does not realize that the pending measure is unpopular with his constitutents. In that view of the matter the conduct of the Senator from Washington asking, before the bill has been read, that the Senate adopt an extraordinary course in reference to its consideration is explained. He wants to make certain that this bill, which has been repudiated by the American people in an election, shall be passed before those who have been elected to the new Congress shall have the privilege or opportunity of participating in its consideration. Every Senator and every Representative has the right, of course—indeed, it is his duty—to reflect in his vote his conscientious judgment respecting measures that come before the Congress; but in a representative government, where issues and candidacies are submitted to the American people and voted for and determined by them, it is bad faith—it is inexcusable—to insist upon the precipitate determination of a measure which has been impliedly rejected by an expression of popular will.

If any Senator doubts that this measure is unpopular, why did the leader of the House of Representatives insist that the President subordinate his views concerning the subject to political expediency and consent to postpone the ship subsidy bill until after the election? Only one answer can be made—not to postpone it at that time meant the defeat of many Representatives allied with the majority side.

The bill was made an issue in the election; it was discussed in all the congressional districts during the campaign. It was in part, at least, responsible for the almost unparalleled change in representation in this body and in the body at the other end of the Capitol. The largest majority which the Republican Party ever had in the House of Representatives came near being converted into a minority in the election on the 7th of last November. No construction can be placed upon that election except that the measures and policies advanced and promoted by the party in power were unpopular and disapproved among the respective constituencies.

Now, the Senator from Washington, before he has said one word in explanation of his bill, seeks to commit the Senate to an extraordinary course in reference to its consideration. Why can we not go forward, consider, and discuss the bill in the ordinary way, at least for a reasonable time, until the Senate and the country have had an opportunity of understanding not only the proposals as originally presented but the new proposals reported by the Committee on Commerce in an effort to popularize the bill and bring to its support in this body the Senators on the majority side who had announced their purpose to oppose it in the form in which the committee first sought to bring it out.

The Senator from Washington no doubt proceeds upon the theory—

> If it were done when 't is done, then 't were well
> It were done quickly.

But the time has passed in American politics when measures which tax and burden the people of this Nation can be imposed upon them in conflict with their expressed will; the time has come when in this representative government men who hold their positions by the approval of the public must seek to reflect in a fair degree the intelligent, well-informed, and deliberate conclusions of their constituents.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I want to make a point of order against the motion made by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. The Senator's motion, as I understand, was that when the Senate recess this afternoon it recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Not exactly that; that when the Senate shall conclude its business to-day it recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Mr. HARRISON. That is in substance what I stated. I submit that Rule XXII lays down the order of business, and that the first motion that is in order is a motion to adjourn. This afternoon, when the Senate has concluded the consideration of this proposition, or whatever may be pending before it, a motion may be made to recess. If a motion is then made to adjourn, the motion to adjourn will take precedence over the motion to recess. Suppose, Mr. President, when the Senate concludes the consideration of business this afternoon, a suggestion of no quorum is made, and on the call of Members, a quorum is not obtained, in that event, it will be conceded, the Senate can only adjourn; a recess can not be taken. The only exception would be by a unanimous-consent order. That is not requested by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. His request is in the form of a motion. I submit that it is premature at this time, it is extraordinary, it is almost unprecedented, that a motion shall now be made that when the Senate has concluded its session this afternoon it recess until to-morrow; so I make the point of order that the motion is not in order at this time.

Mr. President, I do not want it to be understood that as one Member of the minority I am trying to delay the consideration of the ship subsidy bill. Personally, I shall not from now to the 4th of March, and I do not believe that any Senator on this side of the Chamber will, attempt unnecessarily and without good cause to delay the consideration of the ship subsidy bill. The country knows, however, that an extraordinary session of Congress was called by the President for one purpose, and that purpose was to consider the ship subidy bill. We met here day after day for two weeks, and during the whole time there was not a suggestion made, so far as the Senate is concerned, of the ship subsidy proposition. It was not presented. It was not hinted. The only suggestion that did come up during all of that time was the President's message to the Congress and the consideration of the subject by the House; but during those two weeks that the American taxpayer was burdened by enormous expenses through the calling of Congress into extraordinary session, what did we do? Only four things were done, and if a Senator on the other side of the aisle can suggest anything else that was done I shall pause to make amend.

One was a very extraordinary proposition, and one which the American people welcomed, namely, the swearing in of a woman, for the first time in the history of the American Congress, as a Senator from the State of Georgia.

Another was equally welcomed by the American people, and was more welcomed by some Senators on the other side of the aisle, and that was the resignation of Mr. Newberry as Senator from the State of Michigan.

The other two propositions that came before the Congress were matters that were not offered in good faith, that were attempted to be passed here in a sham battle in order to obtain colored votes throughout the country—the Dyer antilynching bill, which all Senators on the other side knew was dead the moment it was born, and the Liberian loan proposition, that had been debated in the Senate for weeks and weeks and weeks before we adjourned prior to the election in November. As to the latter measure, we saw Senators on the other side, like the King of France with 40,000 men, march up the hill and then march down again; and by votes furnished by the Republican majority the Liberian loan bill, carrying an appropriation of $5,000,000 as a loan to the colored population of Liberia, was sent back to the "sleep that knows no waking" in the committee where it had originated.

That is the fruit of the extraordinary session of Congress called by President Harding to meet and to pass the ship subsidy bill.

Mr. President, we know that we have but about two months and a half in which to pass the great supply bills that must run this Government for the next 12 months. It will be a very difficult task to give consideration to all these important measures and to adjourn by the 4th of March. I want to see the country next year be free from interference by virtue of an extraordinary session, provided we can pass the legislation for which we are called into session and which the American people desire. I want to see us get a rest for the first time in almost a decade; but you will not get a rest if you insist on laying aside the great supply bills to run this Government and put ahead of them and insist upon the passage of this infamous piece of legislation that will impose on the American people an additional burden of $875,000,000. So we see, as the distinguished Senator from Arkansas has pointed out, the chairman of the great committee having this bill in charge asking for the adoption of an extraordinary motion—that we shall have no morning hour; that when we recess we shall start on the consideration of this bill the first thing to-morrow; that supply bills may wait; that the distress among the farmers in the great Middle West may continue; that all the legislation may be ignored which the American people have been promised, and which the President of the United States only last week appealed to Congress to pass.

Oh, it was an extraordinary political message that he delivered. He was answering, in part, the voice of the American people as expressed last November. He was trying to still the tide that is continuing to surge over this country. He knew of—and I am glad that he had read—the report of the Joint Commission on Agricultural Inquiry, which for months and months and months labored, calling in from every part of the country the representatives of the farming interests, obtaining from every avenue statistics to show the condition and needs of the farmers in every part of the country; and this commission, nonpartisan as it was, was trying to do something for the farmers, seeing that the things which they needed and which were necessary to carry on their occupations were costing so much and increasing in price, while the price the farmers received for their products was going down, made certain recommendations. Among them was the creation in the Federal land bank system of an agricultural credit system, in order that the farmers might borrow for three years, if necessary, money with which to operate. For almost a year that matter has been before the Congress. We have not heard a whisper from any part of this Government urging us to pass it; but when the farm bloc and the American farmer became aroused then it was that the President incorporated in his message the suggestion that this was a splendid piece of legislation, and that it should be enacted into law.

The ideas as expressed in that bill will be enacted into law. It will be enacted into law during this session of Congress. I do not care with what enthusiasm you start out on the ship subsidy bill; I do not care how unanimous you may be for it on the other side of the aisle, a motion will be made, even if I have to make it myself, under the rules of the Senate, and you will be put on record to say by your votes whether you would rather continue the consideration of the ship subsidy proposition giving to the Shipping Trust this special privilege of $875,000,000, at the expense of the American taxpayer, or take up an agricultural credits system that will help the farmers of the great Middle West and Southland of this country. So make up your minds now what you are going to say by your votes and how you are going to respond to your constituents, who need help more than the Shipping Trust needs it.

When this motion is made, to which you will have to answer, another motion will be made, even if I have to make it myself, and then we can see in this body who are the friends of the great western country and who are the friends of the Shipping Trust who are seeking to gouge the American taxpayer by increased taxes through subsidizing the Shipping Trust; and that is the bill that was reported out of the committee months and months ago, and which has silently slept, and no hand has lifted it up, no voice has been raised to create enthusiasm in the American Congress to pass it—the McNary irrigation proposition.

You men from the West bear in mind, now, that a motion will be made to proceed to the consideration of that bill, which means so much for the reclamation and the irrigation of the great western country. You will be called on to vote, and you can take your stand on whether or not you are going to vote for the shipping interests of the country, that for years have gouged the American shippers in high, conscienceless, and extortionate rates, enriching themselves at the expense of the American shippers, that you now seek by this bill further to perpetuate in their riches by subsidies that will increase the burdens on the American people. The West must answer; their representatives in this body will be called on to respond; so I am unwilling to start out in this proposition by seeing this exceptional motion made that when we have concluded the deliberations of to-day we shall recess until to-morrow.

I submit, Mr. President, that the motion is not now in order. It will be in order when we get ready to recess or adjourn this afternoon. When the motion to recess is made, a motion perhaps will be made to adjourn, so that the orderly business that is on the calendar can be passed if there is no objection made, and so that this Congress can at least give some relief to the American people, rather than to constitute itself a citadel for the protection of these gouging shipowners whom we saw increase the rates from 1914 on through the years until in some instances they had reached 2,000 per cent.

I make the point of order against the motion made by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Washington will not press his motion. If a point of order is raised, it would involve a motion to adjourn, and that would have precedence over a motion to take a recess. But the Senator will not gain any time of any consequence if we take a recess. If we adjourn until to-morrow at 12 o'clock there will be morning business, which probably can be disposed of in 15 or 20 minutes, and probably there would not be a delay of more than 20 minutes involved between a recess and an adjournment.

If a recess is taken it will have all the appearance of forcing and crowding unnecessarily and unduly the consideration of the pending bill. A number of Senators on this side have stated to me that they not only desire to hear all the discussion and the debate regarding the measure, considering it to be of great importance, but that they themselves wish to discuss the measure and for the first time this morning they have been advised of the character of the bill. They have not yet had an opportunity to read the reports on the bill or to read the bill and the amendments which have been reported to it and it seems to me to be seeking to unduly crowd things to ask that the bill shall be kept constantly before the Senate every minute until it is voted upon. It is due Senators who wish to be thoroughly advised regarding the merits of the different proposals involved in the bill that they shall have an opportunity to consider it.

It is true the measure was introduced last April in both Houses of Congress but the proposition now before the Senate is entirely different from the bill as originally introduced in this body and as originally introduced in the other body. The bill as it was finally acted upon in the other body is entirely different from the bill then referred to the Commerce Committee as having passed the other body and the bill reported by the committee is entirely different from the measure which went to that committee.

Those are all matters Senators are entitled to know about and to have a few hours at least to consider before they are pressed into either discussing or voting upon the bill. I submit that it would be unnecessarily crowding the measure now, and depriving Senators of the proper time to consider and reflect upon and study what is involved in it, to call upon them either to debate or to vote upon the various propositions involved.

I say again that this morning for the first time the bill was laid upon the desks of Senators, with the amendments proposed by the Commerce Committee. For the first time this morning the majority report and the minority views are upon the desks of Senators. They have not had time to read either. Yet it is proposed now that the Senator from Washington shall explain the bill from his standpoint, and then that we shall recess so that we will be obliged to take it up the first thing in the morning.

I submit that the Senator ought to be willing that we adjourn to-day and meet at 12 o'clock to-morrow, and that there is not enough involved in the mere saving of time by recessing to justify this attempt to unduly press and crowd the Senate into the disposition of the measure. If the Senator insists upon his motion, I shall have to move an adjournment, which would take precedence over his motion to take a recess.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Washington will withdraw his motion. This is a very important measure, and it is going to be considered by the Senate. We might as well make up our minds to that. It is going to be debated, it is going to be debated fully, and it is going to be debated freely. We all might as well understand that.

I think upon reflection the Senator will feel that we should not be asked to go into a continued consideration of a bill we have not had time to go over, without any explanation having been made or offered about the bill, before the bill has been read.

Those of us who are not on the committee and have been very busy on other things have not had time to go over it as fully as we should, and we want to go over it. I am engaged in that matter now, speaking for myself, and I am sure the Senator will not gain any time for his measure by forcing his motion. I hope he will withdraw the motion. I can assure him he will not gain time. I can give him the assurance that he will lose time if he insists upon the motion.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator that that has no effect, as far as I am concerned. But I do want to say that it is not the intention, of course, by taking the recess proposed, to cut off consideration of the bill. I did not expect to do that; I knew I could not do it; and I have no hesitation in saying now that if no one were ready to speak to-morrow and Senators should ask that the bill go over until the next day to give them time to make preparation, there would not be any objection to that. The only idea is to follow the course we usually adopt in reference to a measure of such importance. We know how often time is taken up in the morning hour, I do not like to say unnecessarily; yet Senators know it is. That is the only reason why I made the motion.

We have disposed of the morning business to-day. Possibly there would not be very much time taken up to-morrow in routine business, and possibly in 15 or 20 minutes we could get the bill before the Senate. The Senator knows that matters of that kind are always permitted to come up by unanimous consent. If a Senator wanted to introduce a bill or present a petition or submit a report, no objection would be made. The only purpose of this motion is to enable us to start out to-morrow with this bill before the Senate. Of course, we all know that that would not prevent Senators from talking about any matter they desired to talk about. Possibly it would not gain any time; it certainly would not deprive anybody of any opportunity to discuss this measure or any other measure he desired to discuss.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair is ready to decide the question of order raised unless Senators desire to be heard further upon it.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, the motion that this bill, palpably promoting the shipping interests of the country in behalf of a few men disposed to get rich operating ships, should take precedence over great supply bills, admittedly in the interest of all the people, is most instructive, not only on account of its vital relation to the people in so far as this bill is concerned, but because it marks a great change in our attitude toward legislation.

How far, oh how far, have we drifted in a few short years! When I look back over the dim vista of the past, and see through the lapse of a century the twinkling of a faint light that once illumined the paths of all patriots and all parties, I am filled with regret and almost with despair.

I have read somewhere, or heard it read—I do not want to be too sure in quoting these forgotten and musty documents, long since thrown into the limbo of things that were; but somewhere, at some time, it strikes me there was once a patriotic soul who wrote what at the time was a rather conspicuous and illustrious document, about which I have read, or heard somebody read—I will not be too sure—strange as it may seem to us, inexplicable as it may seem to us, he said certain things which at that time were considered aphorisms. For instance, he talked about "equal rights to all and special privileges to none."

Mr. BORAH. Who was that?

Mr. STANLEY. Oh, do not ask me. Poor deluded soul, he is dead. Now, we know how asinine was such saying, how silly for the Government to talk about equal rights to all and special privileges to none. Now we know that a wise Government provides special privileges for all and equal rights to none.

The purpose of this Government is to give any organization, any clique, any combination that is strong enough, a good, wholesome graft on the Federal Treasury, and it is the privilege of these poor, disorganized creatures who do not belong to any organization, who do not affiliate with any clique, who are simply citizens, to be plundered, to be plucked, to be forgotten, to be despised.

That same strange man, who is dead, sleeps now out on a mountain side in Virginia. They carved upon his tomb, at his own request, not what the people did for him, although they made him governor more than once, a leader of the legislature, a minister to France at a most crucial hour, a Secretary of State, a Vice President, twice a President, and, like those "sceptered sovereigns who still rule our spirits from their urns," this mighty man dominated the destinies of America for a quarter of a century. But now, alas, notwithstanding these somewhat remarkable performances, he is dead and forgotten.

On one occasion he wrote an instrument which at the time was actually read by the people generally and adopted by this country. We hold a sort of a holiday in commemoration of the adoption of that strange document, in which—think of it, my fellow Senators—he actually said that men were endowed by their Creator with certain "inalienable rights" to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and that all governments were instituted among men, not to confer, not to restrict, not to deprive, but to preserve those rights; and he held it actually to be self-evident, he did not need to prove it, that the only province of any government on earth was simply to see that individuals, men—because they were created a little lower than the angels—yea, higher than the angels, for they who come up through great trials and tribulations are above cherubim and seraphim, men clothed with no other majesty than their naked manhood, dependent upon no political combination, identified with no clique or combination, supported by no organization—just men and citizens—that they had rights given them by God, not by government, and that it was not the province of any government on earth to invade them. He went further in his strange document and said that whenever any government on earth imperiled those inalienable and God-given rights it was the province and duty of that people to destroy or to change that government.

That was the idea which subsisted 100 years ago, before we learned that the province of government was to supply special privileges to all and equal rights to none, before we learned from Prussia, before we learned from the dead and buried autocracies of the past, that individuals had no rights which a coterie of self-constituted censors and uplifters might not imperil and destroy. And now to cap it all, to prove it all, to establish it all, to bury Jefferson and the Declaration of Independence and all that they stood for who believed in the rights of men and the duty of government to attend to all men's business before it attended to a few men's profits, the chairman of the committee proposes here that our duty to all the people, bills that affect all the people, shall be laid aside, unless we agree by unanimous consent to consider the public generally, in this effort to foster the fortunes of a handful of avaricious, profiteering millionaires. Do it if you will, and then let some Senator for consistency's sake ask unanimous consent that in the future we cease to celebrate the Declaration of Independence, and on the Fourth of July let the banners flaunt, let the guns boom, let the trumpets resound, let the multitude rejoice, let glad orators proclaim a new era when special privilege has the right of way in the Congress of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY). The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] has moved that when the business of to-day is concluded the Senate shall take a recess until to-morrow. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has raised the point of order against the motion that it is not now in order. The present occupant of the chair, under Rule XXII, takes the same position as the Senator from Mississippi, and declares that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

Mr. FLETCHER. I object. I think the bill should be read in full.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let us have the bill read, and the report read, too.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. First the bill will be read.

The reading clerk read the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I do not desire to delay the consideration of the bill, but the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] coupled with his request the reading of the report. He is not present, and I do not want to take any advantage of his absence.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Florida stated to me before going to the restaurant for a few minutes that he desires to have the report read.

Mr. JONES of Washington. He announced that as a part of his request. So I suppose the report will have to be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report.

The reading clerk read the report, as follows:

AMEND AND SUPPLEMENT THE MERCHANT MARINE ACT, 1920.

[Senate Report No. 935, Sixty-seventh Congress, fourth session.]

Mr. JONES of Washington, from the Committee on Commerce, submitted the following report, to accompany H. R. 12817:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass with the following amendments:

On page 3, line 15, after the word "sell," strike out the word "such"; and after the word "vessels," in the same line, add the following: "operating on routes established by the board prior to the enactment of this act."

Page 3, line 16, after the word "who," insert "in the judgment of the board."

Line 24, after the word "sales," insert the words "and its assignment."

That all mails of the United States shipped or carried on vessels shall, if practicable, be shipped or carried on vessels documented under the laws of the United States which are not ineligible under subdivision (c) of section 406 of the merchant marine act, 1922, to receive compensation under Title IV of such act (hereinafter in this section referred to as 'qualified vessel'). No contract hereafter made with the Postmaster General for carrying mails on qualified vessels shall be assigned or sublet, and no mails covered by such contract shall be carried on any vessel not so qualified. No money shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States on or in relation to any such contract for carrying mails on qualified vessels when such contract has been assigned or sublet or when mails covered by such contract are in violation of the terms thereof carried on any vessel not so qualified."

Page 9, strike out lines 5 to 25, inclusive.

Strike out all of pages 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, and down to and including line 21 on page 17.

On page 19, change sections 204 and 205 to 202 and 203, respectively.

On page 22, strike out lines 20 to 23, inclusive.

Line 24, same page, after the word "months," insert a colon and add the following:

"Provided, That no contract made hereunder shall extend beyond a period of 15 years from the date of the enactment of this act."

After the preceding amendment, insert a new subdivision to read as follows:

"(c) The board shall not enter into any contract for the payment of compensation, or increase the rate of compensation fixed in any contract, unless it is satisfied that the amount payable under such contract in any fiscal year, plus the total amount payable in such year under other contracts for compensation, will not exceed the sum of $30,000,000."

On page 24, line 1, strike out "(c)" and insert "(d)."

In line 7, same page, strike out the words "authorized to be" and insert the word "permanently."

On page 27, in line 9, strike out the figures "500" and insert "1,000."

Page 34, in line 15, after the word "least," strike out the figures "75" and insert "50."

On page 37, at the end of line 15, after the word "paid," insert a semicolon and the following:

"Provided, That no expenditures shall be made from the merchant marine fund because of any increased compensation granted under the terms of paragraph (c) of section 410 except out of the appropriations made annually therefrom by Congress."

On page 45, after line 25, add the following:

FINAL DETERMINATION OF AMOUNT OF COMPENSATION.

"SEC. 418. The determination of the board as to the amount of compensation to which any person is entitled under the provisions of this title shall be subject to review by the General Accounting Office."

We have made a few substantial changes in the bill as it passed the House.

The exemption provisions contained in sections 201 and 202 have been stricken out because, under present circumstances, no substantial results will be attained under them.

The amount of compensation that may be paid in any one year is limited to $30,000,000. The Shipping Board estimates that when this amount is reached we will have 7,500,000 tons of shipping privately owned and operated under the American flag, carrying over 50 per cent of our commerce.

The provision in the House requiring specific appropriations from the merchant marine fund to be made annually by Congress has been stricken from the bill. This is vital to its success. One main object of the bill is to bring about the purchase by private parties of the ships owned by the Government. This will require capital which must be secured from banks and those who are willing to invest in shipping securities. This can not be borrowed by proposed purchasers and operators of the ships if there is the least uncertainty of the payment of the compensation provided in the bill. By reason of the changing of the political complexion of Congress, and because of the bitter opposition to aid of this kind to shipping, no man would loan his money upon security of this kind, and thus one of the great purposes of the bill would be defeated. The committee does recommend an amendment preventing any money from being paid out of the merchant marine fund to increase the compensation provided in any contract except under a specific appropriation by Congress for such purpose. This, we believe, is as far as we should go in this direction.

We provide that no contracts for compensation shall extend beyond 15 years from the enactment of the law. It will take from 3 to 5 years to get all the good ships of the Government into private hands, and so under this limitation a large part of the compensation contracts are not likely to run more than 10 years. We will have a permanent merchant marine in that time or we will know what is needed further to secure one or that we can not have one.

The other changes in the bill are of a very minor kind.

The substantial objections to the bill are summarized in the minority report of the House committee on this bill. They are urged against it now and concise and specific answers in the same may not be amiss in this report.

1. Without pointing out that the $8,000,000,000 cost of the Emergency Fleet Corporation's activities included transportation projects, housing projects, plant equipment, shipyards and dry docks as well as ships; that even the expense for ships included the cost of wooden, concrete, and composite flascoes, and that such a cost, representing as it does the necessarily extravagant outlay inevitable in the creation during war's emergency of something which should have been provided gradually and without haste in peace time, the point still may be made that there is no real relation between the war-time outlay of the Emergency Fleet Corporation and the present measure.

This measure would be necessary and probably would be only slightly modified if we had no fleet at all to-day. Our problem is primarily to provide for the future; the element of salvaging as much as possible from the existing Government fleet is only secondary.

Had we had an intelligent merchant-marine policy prior to the war, we should not have been called upon to build overnight a fleet, for we would have had the necessary ships at a tithe of the expense we incurred during the war for their construction.

Further, from the standpoint of salvage alone, it may be stated that whatever amount is realized from the sale of vessels under a program of Government aid will be greater than we can expect otherwise, as few ships can be sold under present conditions.

The statement made by the opposition that we will give the ships away and then pay $500,000,000 in subsidies is of course erroneous. We are not giving any ships away, but are selling them, as we must, at the same price at which an owner can buy similar ships anywhere. We will not pay in direct aid, assuming that we sell all the Shipping Board vessels presently active, more than eight or nine million dollars to those ships, plus five or six millions to existing privately owned ships. By the outlay of this eight or nine million dollars we will not only realize from the sale of the active ships but we will end the expensive governmental operation which is now costing us $50,000,000 annually. In other words, we will save $40,000,000 a year and will cover into the Treasury the proceeds from the sales of these active ships. Whatever else we pay will be conditioned on the creation in American yards of new and desirable vessels.

2. Construction loan fund: The provisions in the present bill are only a modification of the construction loan fund in the act of 1920. The present bill makes this available as it accrues instead of limited to $25,000,000 a year. As modified in the House, a minimum rate of 4½ per cent has been fixed. This fund will be necessarily limited in its application and will apply particularly to aid the construction of especially costly and desirable types of vessels or the reequipment of existing vessels with pioneer types of machinery. Its provisions therefore are in no way analogous to the farm loan act.

3. Tax exemption: This is only a half truth. For a limited time, eight years, shipowners are exempted from the payment of taxes upon profits made by ships in foreign trade provided the amount of tax so waived is invested, together with an equal amount of the owner's private capital, in new construction, or is set aside in trust for such purpose. In other words, to secure this exemption the shipowner must double the amount exempted and invest it in American-built ships.

Similarly, for eight years, profits from sales of pre-war ships (built before January 1, 1914), are exempt from tax provided the entire proceeds from the sale are invested in new tonnage built in American yards and of a type approved by the Shipping Board.

4. Freight rates: Contrary to the above statement being true, the entire basis of the proposed bill was that of cheaper ocean freight rates for American products. The great keynote was the guaranty of adequate transportation. In almost every argument on the subject the chairman of the Shipping Board and others pointed out the greater cost of an uncertain transportation system. In depending on foreign bottoms our farmers and manufacturers may enjoy reasonable rates during normal times, but the moment abnormality enters their adequacy of transportation is interrupted and rates go sky-high. If carriage can not be obtained at any price or only at prohibitive rates, it is obviously the most expensive transportation conceivable. With adequate American tonnage in normal times American ships would have to meet foreign competition and thus rates would be held at a reasonable level; and in abnormal times, by governmental control or otherwise, the permanent services should be insured against disruption.

It is impracticable to control freight rates in the foreign trade charged by the American ships where similar control can not be exercised over their competitors. The bill does provide for most careful control of freight rates by the Shipping Board on vessels engaged in interstate commerce ships restricted to American flags.

5. Term of the contract: The 10-year period of the contract in no way prevents a repeal of the act by subsequent Congresses. It does give a guaranty for contracts that may have already been entered into, because without such guaranty it would be unsafe for any company to enter into contracts requiring heavy commitments whose duration was based upon the political complexion of the Government. In adopting the 10-year basis the Shipping Board is only given powers which have heretofore been granted to the Post Office Department, as, for example, in the ocean mail act of 1891, which authorized the Postmaster General to contract for a period up to 10 years for the carriage of mails.

6. Permanent appropriation: The objected-to requirement has been changed in the bill as it finally passed the House, and the Shipping Board will have to appear before Congress and obtain appropriations. While it is questionable whether this will not in a large measure defeat the purpose of the bill, this change nullifies the minority's objections.

7. Powers conferred on the Shipping Board: The merchant-marine problem is a large problem. Some organization must exercise large powers with respect to it. Congress created the Shipping Board to further the interests of the merchant marine. The minority might advocate the location of the vested powers elsewhere than in the Shipping Board, but it can not do away with the number and extent of responsibilities that some organization in the Government must exercise. Under the existing law that organization should be the Shipping Board.

8. Report by Shipping Board: In the organic act creating the Shipping Board, the shipping act of 1916, section 12 requires that the board make an annual report to Congress on the 1st day of December each year, which shall include a summary of its transactions. The drafters of the bill felt that this would apply to all subsequent duties imposed upon the board and did not believe it necessary in each piece of legislation to include a provision that the board should specifically report upon it. It may be pointed out that the merchant marine act of 1920 contains no provision as to a special report; indeed, its provisions have always been duly noted in the annual report of the board. In addition to this, all Members of Congress are well aware that a Government organization is always subject to the wishes of Congress, and even individual Congressmen, as to the furnishing of information. Volumes have been printed of testimony at hearings before various congressional committees concerning the work and transactions of the Shipping Board.

However, to remove even an erroneous supposition there has been inserted a clause requiring specifically the report referred to.

9. Salaries of executives: While it is true that salaries of the executives in the shipping industry, as in all other industries, are higher than the governmental standard, it is not true that these are high in proportion to the size of the enterprise and the amount invested therein.

There are literally thousands of employees in industry all over the country earning annual salaries ranging from $25,000 to $100,000 per year, and in some instances more than the latter amount; and yet the Government hesitates to pay $25,000 per annum to the best available and most experienced practical shipping men who are conducting for the Government the operation of the largest fleet and one of the greatest enterprises in the history of the world.

As to the statement that no large salaries are paid in Great Britain, with few exceptions, the statement is incorrect in general, and where, in the case of certain tramp lines, it is true, it is because of the peculiar organization of such companies where the stockholders are really bondholders, and the executive staff hold all the common stock and receive, instead of large salaries, the greater part of their remuneration by retaining all profits after the modest interest of 4 to 6 per cent has been paid upon the debentures.

10. Compensation to industrial carriers: As passed in the House, the bill does not grant direct aid to any industrial carrier where such carrier is engaged in transportation of its own products. This change nullifies the minority's objection. The change, however, is not sound from the standpoint of the best interest of our merchant marine. If the purpose of the bill were in any way to insure a profit to shipowners the point might be taken that the great industries, as the oil companies, the steel companies, and the fruit companies, who chiefly own their own carriers, were in no need of aid, although it should be carefully noted that profits earned by these companies are earned on their shore properties and probably in no way flow from their maritime holdings.

However, the bill is not to guarantee nor to insure profits. The bill is to encourage companies to invest in ships built in American shipyards, registered under the American flag, and manned by American crews. Under existing laws there is nothing which prevents these companies from securing their vessels in the cheapest markets, operating them with the cheapest crews, and flying over them such flags as they see fit. It is natural that since we wish to encourage American capital to invest in American ships we should be particularly anxious that the industrial companies so invest, since they are by far the greatest individual shipowners.

Before the war practically all the above-mentioned groups had their ships under foreign flag. One of the first acts passed by our Congress after the outbreak of the World War was that passed August 18, 1914, permitting the transfer of these American-owned foreign-flag vessels to American registry. By so moving we secured to the American flag 160 vessels, most of which were under the British flag. Had Great Britain issued a requisition order immediately on the outbreak of the war, as she did subsequently, the transfer of these vessels would have been impossible. As it was, those which were under the German flag were interned for the period of the war.

Denial of aid to the industrial companies whose ships cost just as much more to build in this country, whose wage differential is just as great, and who are just as free to employ foreign-flag ships as any other American owner, will result in these companies seeking transfer of their existing ships and securing their future additions abroad and operating them under foreign flag. This is shown in the policy followed since the war by the United Fruit Co., which has added since the war 11 new steamers to its fleet, all valuable passenger and refrigerator types, but each one built in England and flying the British flag.

The following are the majority reports in the House, one on H. R. 12021, the bill as originally reported, and the other the supplemental report on H. R. 12817, this bill:

[House Report No. 1112. Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.]

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, submitted the following report to accompany H. R. 12021.

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12021) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report thereon with the recommendation that it do pass with the following amendments:

"(5) Carries a crew (exclusive of licensed officers required by law) at least two-thirds of which are citizens of the United States, and the remainder of which are individuals eligible to United States citizenship. During the first year after the enactment of this act the required number of citizens of the United States shall be one-half instead of two-thirds; and, during the second year, six-tenths instead of two-thirds. In the case of passenger vessels the provisions of this paragraph shall apply only to the deck and engine departments. If the vessel is deprived of the services of any member of the crew by desertion, casualty, or other cause beyond the control of the master, in any port outside of the United States or on the high seas, the right of the vessel's owner to compensation, during the period prior to the next arrival of the vessel at a port in the United States shall not be impaired by failure to comply with the provisions of this paragraph, provided the owner and master of the vessel exercise reasonable diligence to procure the necessary individuals to comply with such provisions. If the vessel is outside the United States at the time of the enactment of this act, or on the first day of the second or third year after the enactment of this act, the owner shall not be required to comply with the provisions of this paragraph applicable to such year until her first arrival at a port in the United States, if he complies with the provisions of this paragraph applicable to the previous year."

Page 53, line 22, insert at the end of the line the following: "unjust discrimination between ports of the United States or commerce accustomed to move through such ports, or in."

The following statement is divided into three parts, as follows:

Part I.—General consideration.
Part II.—Synopsis of the bill.
Part III.—Discussion of important features of the bill.

Part I.—General considerations.

HISTORY OF THE BILL.

On February 28, 1922, the President delivered to a joint session of the Senate and House of Representatives his memorable message on the American merchant marine.

On the same day Senate bill 3217 was introduced by Senator JONES of Washington, chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce, and H. R. 10644 was introduced by Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, chairman of the House Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. These were identical bills.

An arrangement for joint hearings was entered into between the Senate Committee on Commerce and the House Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. Sessions were held beginning on Tuesday, April 4, and continued practically without interruption daily until Friday, May 19. During this period of 45 days the whole program of proposed legislation was gone into most exhaustively, 35 witnesses being heard and cross-examined. It is noteworthy that of this number 28 appeared generally in favor of the proposed legislation, while only 7 witnesses appeared in opposition.

The record contains references to a total of nearly 200 resolutions passed by commercial, civic, and labor organizations indorsing the principles of the proposed bill and only 8 in opposition thereto. Of the latter, a number indicated only qualified disapproval, based on certain features of the bill H. R. 10644. These features have been, as far as practical, modified in H. R. 12021 in the endeavor to meet the objections thus expressed. The indorsements show that the interior States, which in past years have shown little interest in development of the American merchant marine, are more interested in the present measure than even the States on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts.

An elaborate opening statement was made by Chairman Lasker, of the Shipping Board, which appears in the record beginning at page 2. This statement your committee recommends to the serious consideration of those Members of Congress who would like to review an authoritative and comprehensive statement and analysis of the problems affecting the United States Shipping Board and the American merchant marine.

The bill upon which this is a report (H. R. 12021) is based upon the general principles contained in H. R. 10644, taking into consideration the voluminous record of the joint hearings and the facts brought out therein, and of such other facts and data as have been adduced at previous hearings and in studies relating to the vital problem of the successful and permanent establishment of an adequate American merchant marine.

NEED OF A MERCHANT MARINE.

Little time should be spent in arguing for the imperative necessity in war as well as in peace of an established and well-balanced national merchant marine. The enlightened statesmanship of every progressive nation having access to the sea strives for this as a desideratum for national security and national welfare. Those impractical theorists who are willing to see the bulk of our foreign commerce carried under the flags of other nations must also be willing to rely upon combatant ships and naval auxiliaries of other nations for the protection of our shores and our foreign trade in time of war or national emergency.

The President in his message well stated the necessity of the merchant marine from the standpoint of international trade and international safety when he said, "We can not hope to compete unless we carry, and our concord and our influence are sure to be measured by that unfailing standard which is found in a nation's merchant marine."

It is a well-recognized fact that the countries having large merchant marines have an advantage in international trade. This is due chiefly to the fact that ships are not only a necessary facility of foreign trade, but that they are one of several interrelated agencies that cooperate in making foreign trade successful and profitable. International commerce on a large scale under the present conditions of competition requires a world organization of industry, trade, and shipping. This organization begins with manufacturing and includes merchandising, international banking, marine insurance, ship brokerage, freight forwarding, and the construction, ownership, and operation of vessels. When this interrelating organization has been completely developed, as it has been by the people of Great Britain, foreign commerce can be carried on under the best of conditions. If shipping under the national flag is absent from the organization, or negligible in amount, the organization is ineffective. Shipping under the national flag and an adequate tonnage of vessels of different types are an absolutely essential part of the trade facilities and organizations for world-wide commerce.

The United States has long since ceased to be a self-sufficient nation. Without the sale abroad of our surplus annual production, estimated at 25 per cent of the total, many of our farms would have to be abandoned, factories closed down, hundreds of thousands thrown out of employment, all resulting in national retrogression and inevitable decay.

We can not depend upon the vessels of foreign nations to carry our surplus products to market because when we most need them they fail us. Foreign-flag ships are, of course, most anxious to carry our goods to market in ordinary times, and to collect and retain and carry abroad the fabulous amount involved in international carrying trade; but the purpose of fostering a national merchant marine is to have it available for national purposes in national emergencies; and the moment such a national emergency occurs the ships of foreign nations are immediately subjected to war-time orders by their own Governments, the sea lanes and carrying trade of the entire world are completely disarranged, and the nation with goods to export that must needs rely upon foreign-flag ships to carry its surplus finds itself in a sorry plight.

History affords abundant illustrations of such national predicament. We need only refer to the most recent example of international trade confusion caused by the Great War, in which our powerful Nation found itself in the humiliating position of being obliged to rely almost entirely upon foreign-flag ships for the carriage of our commodities. We were dictated to as to what goods would be carried, how, and when, and we saw countless millions of dollars of our surplus production stacked up along the railroads and on the wharves and docks, deteriorating and rotting. Such goods as were carried for us were carried at fabulous and excessive rates of freight.

The opportunity, born of conditions the result of the Great War, is here. Should we for any reason fail to take advantage of it, we shall deserve, and will surely have, the condemnation and censure of coming generations.

OUR PRESENT SITUATION.

The situation to-day is different from that obtaining on any previous occasion on which the question of aid to shipping has arisen. In other days, if the people decided that they did not wish a merchant marine, such decision settled the matter for the time. To-day it is not a question of whether we wish a merchant marine or not, for we have a merchant marine. It is not a question of subsidy or no subsidy, because to meet the Government's loss of $50,000,000 a year in the operation of our merchant marine the people are being taxed far beyond what would be needed were the ships brought into efficient commercial operation.

The question is, What shall we do with the fleet that we have, so that, with the least cost to the taxpayers, that fleet may be made of the greatest use to the country as a whole, both in peace and war? The alternatives are plain. Either make it possible for private enterprise to take this nucleus which we now have and add to it until it becomes a great and efficient entity, an American merchant marine, or refuse the relatively slight amount of aid necessary therefor and continue at a great expense the inefficient method of Government operation until the ships are worn out.

The purpose of Government operation, as clearly outlined in the merchant marine act of 1920, was that the Government might build up its trade routes until purchasers could be found ready to take over the ships upon established routes and with that necessary element, the good will of the shippers. Unfortunately, this policy has to a great extent worked to defeat its own purpose, for in the upbuilding of those routes the Government has operated ships, and in the operation of the ships has driven its potential customers off the seas. When a private American shipowner is competing with a private British shipowner, with all the handicaps under which the American owner suffers, his competitor is at least bound by the limitations of a finite capital. His resources are not endless, and he can not forever compete in a losing trade. When an American shipowner has to compete with his own Government, however, he has not only the foreign competitor but at the same time has in the field a competitor whose resources are, comparatively speaking, limitless. The result can not be in doubt. Continuation of a marine part Government owned and part privately owned simply means that the private owners will be driven out of business.

DISADVANTAGES OF GOVERNMENT OPERATION.

In some quarters there might be found those who would advocate this policy with a view to complete Government ownership and eventual direct operation of the ships. Such a policy would be more ruinous than the present system of governmental operation through agents, even though the Government in its bookkeeping can neglect many factors of cost for which the private owner must provide.

Successful Government operation, directly or indirectly, is an impossibility. Restrictions imposed by Congress upon salaries, methods, and policies, the pressing demands from varying sections of the country, prompted more by local interest than by a realization of the needs of the country as a whole, the limitations upon responsibility, and the fettering of initiative make governmental operation unthinkable where it is to be brought in competition with the operation of other ships not similarly handicapped.

In the Post Office, in the Army, or in the Navy Government ownership can prevail, because a monopoly is created. Even in the railroads, if the Government adopted a policy of State ownership, it could at least create a monopoly. With shipping it is entirely different. Our governmental merchant marine must ever be in free competition with the privately owned shipping of other nations of the world. No monopoly can be created either to bring efficiency to life or to remove any comparative standard of its inefficiency. In the competition between Government ownership on the part of our Nation and the initiative and sense of responsibility concomitant with private ownership in other nations the fettered State-owned ships are foredoomed to failure.

These are demonstrable facts and present records bear them out. It is our object to carry the greater part of our commerce in vessels flying our flag, and by law the operation of Government ships is with a view that ultimately they shall be sold to private owners. At present, in spite of the most efficient operation that is possible under the limitations imposed upon the Shipping Board, we are not attaining the carriage of the greater part of the various forms of our commerce, and what we are carrying is chiefly due to the efforts of the Shipping Board and only achieved at tremendous loss. Were the board ships removed from the seas, we would lapse almost immediately to our pre-war standard as a maritime nation.

PROPORTION OF OUR TRADE CARRIED.

Our exports to overseas continents, excluding trade with the near-by West Indies and Central America, are now slightly more than three times our imports. Of these exports, foreign ships carried during the year 1921 an average of 71 per cent, while the American ship carried but 29 per cent, and only reached this figure by virtue of the large amount of coal exported in American ships during the British coal strike.

For a recent normal month foreign ships carrie. 76 per cent of our overseas exports, leaving 24 per cent to be carried in American ships. This 24 per cent measured our success in competing against foreign nations for the carriage of our products to the markets of the world. Of the 24 per cent, 19 per cent was carried in Shipping Board vessels and 5 per cent by private owners.

To carry this 19 per cent of our commerce costs the taxpayers of the United States $50,000,000 annually in direct operating loss. This does not take into account deterioration of the fleet, it does not include hull insurance, and it does not allow interest on actual or assumed investment. Worst of all, it is not providing for the future, for the Government will not again embark upon a campaign of shipbuilding, and the private owner can not build new ships of the types we need as long as he must meet not only his heavy operating costs but at the same time the competition of his Government.

Thus we come to the conclusions from which there can be no escape, that since Government operation itself is impossible and builds nothing for the future, since its continuance means the elimination of private operators, a method must be devised whereby the Government shall end its operation and the accompanying heavy losses by the sale of its fleet to private owners, as directed by the merchant marine act of 1920.

NEED OF AID TO SELL SHIPS.

At the present time there is, by and large, no market for our vast tonnage. Compared to the total tonnage built by the Government, practically no tonnage has been disposed of. After thorough consideration in January last the Shipping Board decided to sell its tonnage at world-market prices; and on its steel freighters, after careful investigation, it found this to be a minimum of $30 per ton for the best tonnage. So difficult is the situation for an owner of American tonnage to-day that even at these prices it has been able to dispose of but 100,000 dead-weight or 65,000 gross tons. Nor can we see any great hope of disposal of an appreciable part of the total tonnage we have unless, through Government aid, the difference between the cost of our operation and that of the foreigner is provided for, and thereby automatically the competition of wasteful Government operation removed.

By the extending of a moderate amount of national aid the maintenance of adequate American service under private ownership can be insured and the Government's heavy loss can be ended. Only by making private operation profitable can the Government find a market for its own tonnage. With such aid we can promptly dispose of our salable ships for private operation, get rid of our worthless tonnage and an annual operating loss of $50,000,000, give our people a better and more assured service on the seas than America has ever enjoyed heretofore, and successfully turn a war-time and war-built enterprise into a great instrument of peace-time profit and peace insurance.

HIGHER COST OF SHIPS BUILT IN THE UNITED STATES.

In normal times American ships cost to build approximately 25 per cent more than do vessels of the same type and size constructed in British shipyards. The reason for this lies almost entirely in the higher cost of labor in American shipyards.

Many years ago most of the materials entering into ship construction—the plates, angles, bars, and frames—were also lower in Great Britain than in the United States. To-day, however, on materials such as these, which are susceptible of quantity production, the advantage lies on this side of the water. For this reason previous measures admitting shipbuilding materials free of duty have not been of serious advantage in lowering the cost of an American ship. Items of equipment, in whose construction there is a great deal of labor still, are more expensive in the United States. Considering this, and also the fact that labor, whose cost constitutes one-half of the cost of the completed ship, receives twice as much in this country as abroad, the reason for the first-cost differential is obvious.

The amount of the first cost of the ship determines the annual carrying charge which the owner must meet. The interest on the money invested, the writing off for depreciation, and the insuring against current risk all are based upon the book value of the ship, which is originally fixed by the first cost. The three together involve an annual charge of from 15 to 20 per cent upon the book value of the vessel or, in the case of a new ship, her cost. If that cost be 25 per cent in excess of a British-built vessel, the owner of the American-built craft must annually set aside, out of the same amount of revenue as that accruing to the British ship, an excess amount ranging from 3 to 4 per cent of the cost of the ship. In the case of a passenger vessel costing in the neighborhood of $10,000,000 this would amount to a handicap to the owner of an American vessel of $240,000 to $320,000 per year. There is no practical way in which this differential can be lowered. It is simply a tax which the shipowner must pay for the privilege of having his ship constructed in the United States.

SHIPS AND SHIPYARDS VITAL TO NATIONAL DEFENSE.

Under present conditions there is no provision preventing Americans from having vessels constructed abroad for transfer to American registry, except that such vessels may not engage in coastwise trade. Such foreign-built vessels will be free, it is true, from the heavy handicap that American-built craft would be under, but no policy for the general interest of the United States could be more shortsighted than that of letting foreign nations build our ships.

Our shipyards, employing in normal times thousands of artificers, are already threatened with stagnation by the great curtailment of that naval construction which has always been their primary support. If we withdraw from them the chance to build our merchantmen, we will find in some time of bitter need that the art of shipbuilding has been lost to the country, and with it one of our most valuable elements of defense. The ability rapidly to repair damaged war vessels is too vital a national resource to jeopardize; the power of adding quickly in time of war to our fighting fleet is made more than ever important by the peace-time limitation imposed upon that fleet in the interest of national economy and by international agreement.

Indeed, it is a question whether the recent Conference for the Limitation of Armament has not made the possession of a merchant fleet, built in American yards, and manned as far as possible by American citizens, even more important to the United States from the standpoint of national defense than it is from the very vital ground of trade necessity. The commercial ships, as Secretary Hughes said, become important to a country in inverse proportion to the number of her fighting ships. At the hearings before the joint committees Secretary Denby made the statement:

"If we sank every ship of war in the world at this moment Great Britain would rule the world, beyond a question of doubt. Therefore, from the military standpoint, it seems to me that the creation of an American merchant marine is a vital necessity to our country."

The fleet which the American people built as a war-time measure, imposing though it is in number of ships and in total tonnage, is nevertheless of limited value to the country in time of war because of its lack of balance. Only 16 ships of more than 15 knots speed were built by the United States, yet speed in modern warfare is of vital necessity to the auxiliary vessel. The German ships seized in our harbors gave us a number of passenger vessels, but all of them are old and many of them are obsolete. Our fleet, therefore, is sadly lacking in fast passenger ships, one of the most desirable types that a merchant marine can furnish to the military forces in time of war. Great Britain has 202 vessels of this type with speeds in excess of 15 knots.

Even in ordinary cargo ships we have none, or almost none, that are capable of keeping with the battle fleet at sea. Nearly all the Shipping Board cargo ships have speeds of 10 knots or thereabout. Such ships carrying munitions for the fleet would either reduce the speed of the fleet itself to a very low point or would have to be separately convoyed by a large protecting force.

Our fleet is lacking in refrigerator ships necessary to carry fresh meat to feed our sailors or soldiers; is lacking in vessels suitable for transports; is lacking in ships which could be converted to airplane carriers; in fact, is lacking, broadly speaking, in everything except two types—slow-speed cargo vessel and bulk-oil carriers.

There can be no thought of a 5–5–3 naval ratio of fighting ships unless those fighting vessels are adequately supplemented by a commensurate fleet of merchant vessels suitable for conversion to the manifold types of auxiliaries which modern warfare demands. Without such a merchant fleet, whatever the paper strength of our fighing fleet is, its actual potency is measured by the character and extent of its left arm—the merchant marine.

DIFFERENTIAL IN WAGES AND SUBSISTENCE.

The committee had much testimony as to the extent of the wage differential between the crews of American vessels and those of foreign vessels. Apparently conditions at one time obtaining which required American vessels to carry much larger crews than did those of Britain have altered so that for practical purposes to-day the size of the crews is nearly the same. In the wages paid to individuals, and especially those paid the licensed officers, the superior American standard of living again exerts an unfavorable influence upon American owners. Whatever equaling effect the seaman's act may have in normal times toward establishing an international seaman's wage, it can not affect the pay of the licensed officers, who in almost all maritime nations must by law be citizens. It is in the wage of the officers that the greatest differential exists.

To-day, when there is a great surplus of shipping labor in this country obliged to take almost any wage offered, the differential between the cost of wages of the crew of an American cargo ship and that of a British ship of the same type is approximately 30 per cent of the total cost of wages, or for a medium-sized tramp about $10,000 a year. At present there is no requirement that any of the crew other than the licensed officers be American citizens, and less than 50 per cent are citizens. The higher wages are set by the higher wage standard of the country, it being axiomatic that wages are set by the standards at the port in which the men are obtained.

The cost of subsistence on board ships under the American flag also reflects the higher national standard of living. Under our statutes an American ship is required to provide food of such quality and quantity that in the cheapest possible markets the cost of the daily ration for an American crew is more than one-third greater than the cost of the British ration. It is for the country a proud boast that its seamen are better paid and better fed than are those of any other nation, but obviously the shipowner can not afford to bear the cost of such pay and of such food while he is competing for cargoes in the world's market against vessels manned by cheaper labor. This higher cost of American labor is felt by the vessel in all the services rendered her in the United States. The cost of repairs is higher here than abroad, yet to maintain our shipyards it must be arranged that all possible repairs are made in home yards. The clerical and supervisory staffs of a steamship company are paid American wages for performing the work which a foreign owner secures for a vessel at the lower rate prevalent in his own country.

All of these higher costs—each of which will be found upon analysis to flow directly from the higher cost of American labor—form an aggregate which has prevented in the past, and will prevent in the future, the unaided operation of vessels built in the United States and flying the American flag. From the days when the metal steamer became practicable until the war the merchant marine of the United States has been declining. This downhill course was reversed at enormous cost to meet our war needs, acute because of our previous neglect. If, however, the underlying causes of that decline are not removed or compensated for, the existing fleet will but prove another starting point for a decline as relentless and continued as that which marked our disappearance from the sea after the Civil War.

THE MERCHANT MARINE ACT, 1920.

The need for intelligent legislation looking to the disposal of the Government fleet and the upbuilding of a private American merchant marine has already been felt; and, it was thought at the time, met by the passage of the merchant marine act of 1920. The lack of results from this act shows clearly that the mere possession of a fleet of ships will not give a country a merchant marine unless it is made possible for private capital to take over and operate efficiently such fleet.

The merchant marine act of 1920, known as the Jones Act, provided generally for a series of indirect aids, the keystone of the structure being preferential tariffs to inure to goods imported in American bottoms.

The greatest disadvantage, outside of added capital charge and added wage and subsistence cost, which American owners must meet in building up our mercantile fleet, is the fact that in overseas carriage, other nations which are securely established in control of trade routes have the volume of business, and American ships must undergo the great initial expense of invading the field and building up that volume.

Fundamentally, the existence of a merchant marine is dependent upon actual carrying of cargo. All privileges, economies, and aids, notwithstanding the ultimate success or failure of a merchant ship, lies in its employment at sea carrying cargo. Then, and then only, does the vessel become a producer. Economy of operation without revenue means nothing. This basic requirement was provided for in the Jones Act and was embodied mainly in section 34.

The hoped-for aid from preferential tariffs was not realised because of the refusal of President Wilson to abrogate those portions of certain commercial treaties with foreign nations which forbade preferential treatment of our ships as against the ships of other nations. After long deliberation and careful investigation, President Harding concurred with President Wilson, and thus both a Democratic and Republican President are in accord that, for the time at least, the provisions of section 34 can not be carried out.

Even if the provisions of section 34 had been made effective the benefits to be derived therefrom would have been only from inbound cargo and on dutiable articles. When it is considered that our imports are approximately only one-third of our exports, and of this portion about 30 per cent dutiable goods only would be affected, it may readily be conceded that these provisions might not have produced the results expected of them.

Other sections of the act of 1920 from which it was hoped our merchant marine would derive aid have proved to be ineffective because of changed conditions or because of unforeseen difficulties. The act alone will not give us our commercial marine, nor aid us in disposing of our State-owned vessels. It is therefore necessary to supplement it, and for this purpose H. R. 12021 has been introduced.

Part II.—Synopsis of bill.

TITLE I.—AMENDMENTS TO MERCHANT MARINE ACT, 1920.

This title consists of amendments to the merchant marine act, 1920, relating to the power of the Shipping Board to sell vessels and to make loans for construction.

SALES.

Section 1 of the bill amends section 5 of the merchant marine act, 1920, relating to the power of the Shipping Board to sell vessels, in such manner as to remove the enumeration of the matters which the board is to take into consideration in fixing the sale price, leaving as the only direction to the board that the sale must be consistent with good business methods and the objects and purposes to be attained by the merchant marine act, 1920.

The amendment also provides that vessels may be sold without advertisement or competitive sale if such action is approved by not less than five of the seven members of the board and if such vote and a full statement of the reasons are spread upon the minutes of the board.

The amendment also provides that interest on the unpaid purchase price must be paid at least annually at a rate of not less than 4 per cent per annum; and, further, that payments of principal shall be so arranged that at any moment of time the amount paid shall be sufficient to cover depreciation up to such time, but the board may waive this latter requirement upon the giving of adequate security. It is further provided that the board in making sales may include conditions as to the use and disposition to be made of the vessels sold.

Section 2 of the bill amends section 7 of the merchant marine act, 1920, relating to the duty of the board to make use of the vessels in such manner as to secure the establishment of necessary routes and providing that preference in the sale or assignment of vessels for operation on such routes shall be given to persons having the support of the domestic communities primarily interested. The amendment consists in the addition of a proviso defining the term "domestic communities primarily interested" as meaning the geographical regions known as the North Atlantic, South Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific coasts and the regions naturally tributary thereto.

The amendment also provides that for two years after the enactment of the act the board shall not sell vessels so assigned to any person who does not have the financial and other support of the domestic communities primarily interested in the lines. The amendment also adds a declaration that it is the policy of Congress to discourage monopoly, and to that end the board is directed to endeavor in every way to bring about the permanent establishment of such routes and services and their retention, as far as possible, in the hands of persons having the support of domestic communities primarily interested.

CONSTRUCTION LOAN FUND.

Section 3 of the bill amends section 11 of the merchant marine act, 1920, which created a loan fund in which the board could annually set aside $25,000,000 out of revenue from sales and operation for five years from June 5, 1920. The fund was to be used to aid citizens of the United States in the construction in private shipyards in the United States of the most efficient type of vessels. The amendment establishes a revolving fund of $125,000,000, to be created out of receipts of the board except appropriations and profits of the board from operation of the vessels; and the fund may be used not only to aid in the construction of new vessels but also to aid the equipping of vessels already built with the most efficient and economical machinery and commercial appliances. The amendment adds a provision that all loans must be repaid within 15 years and that the interest, payable at least annually, shall be at a rate not less than 2 per cent per annum. Loans for construction purposes are limited to two-thirds of the cost of the vessel to be constructed, and loans for equipment purposes are limited to two-thirds of the cost of the equipment or two-thirds of the value of the vessel when reequipped, whichever is the lesser. The provision of existing law which limited loans to cases where the new vessel was to be operated in a particular service, deemed necessary by the board, has been omitted.

TITLE II.—TAXATION.

EXEMPTION OF EARNINGS IN FOREIGN TRADE.

Section 201 of the bill adds sections to the income tax title of the revenue act of 1921, granting to the owner of a vessel of 1,500 gross tons or more, registered or enrolled and licensed under the laws of the United States, a deduction in computing net income equal to the income derived from the operations of the vessel in foreign trade; but the granting of this deduction is conditioned upon his investment of double the amount of the resulting saving in tax in the building, in private shipyards in the United States, of new vessels of a type and kind approved by the Shipping Board, and to be put under the American flag. This exemption is to last for nine years, beginning with 1921.

A similar provision was found in the merchant marine act, 1920, but was limited to exemption from taxes (now repealed) imposed by the revenue act of 1918. The bill carries out the policy declared in 1920 but contains detailed provisions for the determination of the amount of the exemption and for easier administration.

In case the owner does not build a new vessel before filing his tax returns for the taxable year for which the deduction is claimed, provision is made for the setting aside by the taxpayer in a trust fund, before the making of the return, of an amount equal to the tax saving. The amount in the trust fund, together with an equal amount out of the ordinary funds of the taxpayer, must be invested by him in the building of new vessels in American shipyards within a reasonable time determined by the Shipping Board, and to be put under the American flag. If such investment is not so made the entire amount of tax becomes due, together with interest from the time it should have been paid.

If the taxpayer invests a less amount than as above provided, the amount of his tax saving is proportionately reduced.

EXEMPTION FROM TAX ON SALE OF VESSEL.

Section 201 of the bill also restates, in a form easier of administration, another policy declared in the merchant marine act, 1920. If an American vessel launched prior to January 1, 1914, is sold, the owner may be exempt from tax upon the gain derived from the sale if he invests the entire proceeds of the sale in the building in private shipyards in the United States of new vessels of a type and kind approved by the board, to be put under the American flag. If a part only of the proceeds of the sale has been so invested the amount of tax exemption is proportionately reduced. The same provisions as to the creating of a trust fund are provided as in the case of the exemption of the earnings of the vessels in foreign trade, and it is provided that the new vessel shall be carried on the books of the taxpayer at the cost of the old vessel for the purpose of determining his profit in the case of a sale, and for the purpose of computing his deductions for depreciation.

Section 202 of the bill contains clerical changes in the revenue act of 1921 made necessary by the amendments provided in section 201 of the bill.

DEPRECIATION OF VESSEL.

Section 203 of the bill amends the income tax title of the revenue act of 1921. It provides that, in the case of vessels documented under the laws of the United States, the deduction for depreciation allowed under the income tax law shall be determined under the rules and regulations prescribed by the Shipping Board, instead of by the Treasury Department.

The section also provides that in the case of an American vessel of 1,000 gross tons or more, acquired after the outbreak of the European War and prior to January 1, 1921, there shall be allowed for five years, beginning with 1922, a reasonable deduction for exceptional decrease in value since the time of acquisition, but not again including any amount otherwise allowed by law as a deduction. This deduction is to be determined, and spread over the five years for which allowed, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Shipping Board. At any time before March 15, 1927, the Treasury Department may, and, at the request of the taxpayer, shall reexamine the return, and if it is found that the value on which the deduction was based was wrong or has changed, the taxes for the years affected shall be redetermined and the amount of tax due or overpaid adjusted accordingly.

CREDIT ON INCOME TAX FOR OCEAN FREIGHT MONEY.

Section 204 of the bill adds to the income tax title of the revenue act of 1921 a new section providing that any person making expenditures for the transportation of property in an American vessel in foreign trade shall be allowed 5 per cent of the amount of such expenditure as a credit against the amount of his income tax. The section is so drawn as not to permit this credit in the case of persons transporting property in their own vessels or in vessels of corporations with which they are affiliated to the extent of ownership of more than 50 per cent of stock, nor is it allowed in the case of transactions between two corporations if more than half of the stock of each is owned directly or indirectly by the same interests.

DIRECT AID AS INCOME TO VESSEL OWNER.

Section 205 amends the income tax title of the revenue act of 1921 in such manner as to exclude from gross income the amounts received by a vessel owner as direct aid under Title IV of the bill.

TONNAGE DUTIES.

Section 206 provides for the doubling of all tonnage taxes except those payable into the treasury of the Philippine Islands, but excepts sailing vessels, without auxiliary power, of less than 1,000 gross tons, and all other vessels of less than 1,500 gross tons.

TITLE III.—TRANSPORTATION OF IMMIGRANTS BY WATER.

This title provides that as nearly as practicable one-half of the total number of immigrants admitted to the United States in any fiscal year shall be transported in American vessels under regulations provided by the Commissioner General of Immigration with the approval of the Secretary of Labor. Provision is made that the title shall not take effect so as to limit transportation of immigrants in vessels of any foreign country until the President proclaims that the provisions of the title or regulations made thereunder are not in conflict with any treaty with such country. The President is directed to take such steps as may be necessary to remove any such conflict. Whenever, in his opinion, no conflict exists in the case of any country, the provisions of the title are to take effect in the case of immigrants transported in vessels of such country at such time as may be fixed in his proclamation.

TITLE IV.—COMPENSATION TO VESSELS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Title IV creates a fund from which vessels of the United States are to be directly compensated upon entering into a contract with the board and complying with the terms of such contract and the terms of the title.

MERCHANT MARINE FUND.

Section 402 creates a fund in the Treasury to be known as the merchant marine fund. The moneys in the fund are to be comprised of (1) all tonnage duties, tonnage taxes, and light money, as doubled by this act, (2) 10 per cent of all customs duties, (3) the amounts which except for a contract for compensation would be payable for the transportation by vessels of mails other than parcel post, including poundage payments and the moneys payable under contracts made under the mail subvention act of 1891 and sections 7 and 24 of the merchant marine act, 1920, and (4) all excess earnings which are to be repaid by owners of vessels in accordance with the provisions of section 417.

CONTRACT FOR COMPENSATION.

Section 403 authorizes and directs the Shipping Board to enter into a contract on behalf of the United States for the payment of compensation to vessels, with a limitation that the Shipping Board is not required to enter into the contract if, in its judgment, the person with whom the contract is made does not possess ability, experience, resources, and character to justify a belief that the payment of compensation is reasonably calculated to develop the American merchant marine, promote the growth of the foreign commerce of the United States, and otherwise promote the general welfare of the United States. The Shipping Board may not give such refusal unless authorized by an affirmative vote of at least five members of the Shipping Board and unless the vote and a full statement of the reasons for the refusal are made public by being spread upon the minutes of the board. Contracts may run for a period not exceeding 10 years and shall provide that the payments of the compensation shall be made at reasonable intervals not exceeding six months. The moneys in the merchant marine fund are appropriated for the purpose of making such payments.

DETERMINATION OF COMPENSATION EARNED.

The computation of the amount of compensation earned by any vessel is subject to the limitation set forth under the following headings:

Speed and tonnage: The amount of compensation is based in part upon the speed of which the vessel is capable.

Regardless of speed the vessel receives one-half of 1 per cent for each gross ton for each 100 nautical miles covered by the vessel; but in addition to this amount power-driven vessels capable of a speed of 12 knots or over when on such draft as the owner may select, are to receive compensation graduated from one-tenth of 1 cent for each gross ton for each 100 miles covered by the vessel if the speed is 12 knots but less than 13, up to $2\frac{1}{10}$ cents for each gross ton for each 100 miles covered by the vessel if the speed is 23 knots or over (sec. 404).

A power-driven vessel as defined by the act for the purposes of this additional graduated compensation (sec. 405 (a)) is a vessel equipped so as to be self-propelled through the use of machinery if the rated horsepower of the propulsive machinery exceeds one-third of the gross tonnage of the vessel. The definition of power-driven vessels is so framed as to include sailing vessels with auxiliary power, and power vessels with auxiliary sails, if sufficiently powered for efficient operation when propelled by power only. Sailing vessels, on the other hand, are not to receive this additional graduated compensation. The gross tonnage of the vessel is to be that stated upon the vessel's certificate of admeasurement (sec. 405 (c)).

A power-driven vessel, as above defined, of 5,000 gross tons or less, but of 1,500 gross tons or over, is to be compensated as if it were a vessel of 5,000 gross tons (sec. 405 (f)). Auxiliary vessels coming under the definition of power-driven vessels, as above set forth, also receive the benefit of this advantage. Sailing vessels and slow steamers not qualifying as power driven do not have this advantage. On the other hand (sec. 406), any power-driven vessel less than 1,500 gross tons, or any sailing vessel less than 1,000 gross tons, is not to receive compensation. Compensation is thus payable to sailing vessels not equipped so as to be propelled by machinery, if between 1,000 and 1,500 gross tons, while power-driven vessels of similar tonnage are not eligible for compensation. The restrictions as to speed are only as to the speed of which the vessel is capable and not as to the speed on the particular voyage.

Mileage: As above outlined, compensation is based in part upon each 100 nautical miles actually covered by the vessel. Compensation shall not be paid in respect to any mileage excepting that comprising the customary route for vessels of same kind and type upon similar voyages between the ports touched by the vessel, based upon tables approved by the Shipping Board. The Shipping Board may, however, if such tables are not, in its opinion, fairly representative of the distance which under efficient operation is actually required to be traversed by the vessel upon its voyage, increase the mileage to such an extent as it deems fair and reasonable, but in no case shall the total mileage allowed be in excess of the mileage actually traversed by the vessel (sec. 405 (e)).

Classification: Compensation is payable to a vessel only in respect to mileage covered while classed by the American bureau of shipping in the highest classification open to a vessel of its kind and type, according to the rules of the bureau (sec. 406 (b) (4)).

Crew: Compensation under the committee amendment is payable to a vessel only for mileage covered while carrying a crew at least two-thirds of whom, exclusive of licensed officers, are citizens of the United States, and the remainder of whom are eligible for United States citizenship, except that during the first year after the enactment of this act the required number of citizens of the United States is one-half instead of two-thirds, and during the second year is six-tenths instead of two-thirds. In the case of passenger vessels the above requirements apply only to the deck and engine departments. Suitable exceptions are made for temporary situations arising from desertions, casualties, or other causes beyond the control of the master of the vessel and occurring at a port outside the United States or upon the high seas (sec. 406 (b) (5)).

Tows: Compensation is payable to a vessel only for mileage covered when self-propelled by sails or machinery. Suitable exceptions are made for cases of distress and for assistance on entering or leaving any port or in navigating inland or restricted waterways (sec. 406 (b) (8)).

Vessels of the United States: Compensation is payable to a vessel only for mileage covered while operating as a privately owned merchant vessel and registered or enrolled and licensed under the laws of the United States. No vessel is to be paid compensation unless it was documented under the laws of the United States on the sixtieth day after the enactment of this act, or was after the enactment of this act built in the United States, or was at such time undocumented and owned by the Shipping Board or by a citizen of the United States, and is not thereafter documented under the laws of any foreign country (sec. 406 (c)).

A vessel built in a foreign country before the enactment of the act and not falling within any of the categories above outlined may, if registered under the laws of the United States within three years after the enactment of the act, be paid compensation if such payment is authorized by an affirmative vote of at least five members of the Shipping Board and the vessel is found to be essential to the proper development of the merchant marine by reason of its particular type or kind and if the vote and a full statement of the reasons for such authorization are made public by being spread upon the minutes of the Shipping Board (sec. 406 (c) (5)).

Foreign trade: Vessels are entitled to compensation only for mileage covered in foreign trade. Section 407 prescribes in detail what mileage shall for the purpose of compensation be considered as being in foreign trade. Roughly speaking, mileage upon any voyage excepting a coastwise voyage may be made the basis for compensation. There are certain exceptions, however. Voyages between possessions and Territories of the United States, voyages as auxiliaries to the military or naval forces, voyages on sight-seeing tours or for scientific purposes, if not in competition with vessels in the coastwise trade, may be made the basis of compensation. Voyages in ballast between ports of the United States, and voyages between two ports in the Virgin Islands, the Philippine Islands, or the Canal Zone may be compensated if the next voyage is to a port outside of the United States or outside such possession or zone. Voyages upon the Great Lakes, whether or not in the coastwise trade, are not to be compensated unless beginning or ending east of Quebec. Voyages embracing in part mileage between a port in the United States and a port in Hawaii are to be compensated only under certain circumstances (sec. 407).

Tramps and feeders: A vessels shall be entitled to compensation for any period of time only if it has entered or cleared from a port in the United States at any time during the 12 months prior to such period of time, or if during the six months ending with such period of time it has derived at least one-half of its total revenue from passengers and cargo received from or delivered to vessels of the United States whose voyage began or terminated at a port in the United States, its Territories, or possessions, or the Canal Zone (sec. 408 (a)).

Voyages of less than 150 miles: Compensation is not to be paid for mileage upon any voyage during which the vessel enters or clears from a port in the United States, its Territories, possessions, or Canal Zone, if the distance between terminal points is less than 150 miles (sec. 408 (b)).

AMERICAN OWNERSHIP.

Compensation is not to be paid a vessel unless owned by a citizen of the United States within the meaning of section 2 of the shipping act, 1916, as amended by the merchant marine act, 1920. At any time more than three years after the enactment of this act compensation shall not be paid the owner of a vessel unless 75 per cent of the gross tonnage of all vessels owned or chartered by him or by any person affiliated with him, or for which either acts as agent, is comprised of vessels registered under the laws of the United States. In determining such percentage of tonnage, vessels of a particular type or kind and which are found by the Shipping Board to be not reasonably available for the purpose desired, are not to be counted (sec. 409).

INCREASE AND DECREASE OF COMPENSATION.

Section 410 provides that the Shipping Board may increase the rate of compensation to not more than double the normal rate when necessary in order to procure the establishment and maintenance of any particular class of service or the operation of any particular type or kind of vessel; or the Shipping Board may decrease the rate of compensation to such extent as it deems advisable. When the contract for compensation has been entered into such increases or decreases may be made only with the consent of both parties. In no case may any increase or decrease be made unless authorized by an affirmative vote by at least five members and unless the vote and a full statement for the reasons for the increase or decrease are made public by being spread upon the minutes of the Shipping Board. All contracts providing for the operation of a vessel in a particular service shall provide not only the rate of compensation in case the vessel is so operated, but a different rate of compensation to be paid in case the owner fails to so operate the vessel, provided the owner gives six months' notice to the Shipping Board of his discontinuance of the service (sec. 411).

OBLIGATIONS OF COMPENSATED OWNER.

Requisition of vessels: Any vessel in respect to which a contract for compensation is made may, at any time during the life of the contract, be taken and purchased or used by the United States for national defense or during any national emergency. The owner of the vessel shall be paid the fair actual value of the vessel at the time of taking, or fair compensation for use, based upon such value, in either case without enhancement by reason of the causes which necessitated the taking. The vessel is to be returned to the owner in a condition at least as good as when taken or an amount sufficient for reconditioning the vessel shall be paid the owner. The owner is not entitled to any consequential damages. Provision for arbitration is made in case of disagreement between the United States and the owner as to the fair value, fair compensation, or amount necessary for reconditioning (sec. 412). The purchaser of any vessel which is under a contract for compensation takes the vessel subject to the above right of requisition at any time during the term of the contract. The vessel is no longer eligible for compensation after the sale unless a new contract is made with the purchaser (sec. 415).

Repairs, renewals, and reconditioning: All repairs, renewals, or reconditioning of a compensated vessel are to be done at a port in the United States, its Territories, or possessions, or the Canal Zone, excepting repairs or renewals essential to the safety of the vessel, its passengers, crew, or cargo, or repairs or renewals of a feeder vessel (sec. 413).

Carriage of mails: Compensated vessels shall transport upon all voyages mail matter of any kind, except parcel post, required by the Postmaster General (sec. 414).

Repayment of compensation: Section 417 provides that the owner of a vessel or vessels who has made a contract for compensation in respect thereto shall pay to the United States 50 per cent of the amount by which his net income from the operations of such vessels exceeds 10 per cent of his invested capital in such vessels, but the amount of payment shall not in any case exceed the amount of compensation earned by such vessels during the year.

Net income and invested capital are to be computed in accordance with the revenue act of 1921, and all the provisions of that act and other internal revenue laws are made applicable to the determination and collection of the amount payable. In computing net income the compensation earned is to be included, but no deduction is allowed for the earnings of the vessels in foreign trade.

Provision is made whereby the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is to enforce the section, with full power to look behind the accounts of corporations and others affiliated by stock ownership or otherwise, and to apportion their profits and invested capital in accordance with the facts, regardless of any financial trick or device (sec. 417).

Terms specified in contract: The obligations above outlined are to be placed in the contract for compensation, but, whether or not so included, the vessel owner shall be held to have agreed to the obligations. The Shipping Board may incorporate in the contract any terms or conditions comprising such obligation or necessary to enforce such obligations or the maintenance of service or necessary to ascertain and determine the amount of compensation.

REVIEW BY GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE.

The determination of the Shipping Board as to the amount of compensation to which any person is entitled shall not be subject to review by the General Accounting Office (sec. 419).

TITLE V.—ARMY AND NAVY TRANSPORTS.

Section 501 provides that whenever the President finds that American vessels afford adequate facilities to meet the needs of the Army or Navy for the transportation of persons or property he may direct the discontinuance of the transport service of either the Army or Navy, and either place the vessels out of commission or transfer them to the Shipping Board. Thereafter the War Department and the Navy Department are directed to contract for their transportation requirements with owners of American vessels. Such contracts may be entered into for terms of 10 years, and the two departments may avail themselves of the expert knowledge of the Shipping Board in making the contracts.

TITLE VI.—RAIL AND WATER TRAFFIC.

Section 601 defines the term "commission" to mean the Interstate Commerce Commission.

RELATIONS BETWEEN THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION AND THE SHIPPING BOARD.

Section 602: This section declares it to be the policy of Congress to promote water transportation in connection with the commerce of the United States, and to foster and preserve both rail and water transportation; and directs the Shipping Board and the commission to cooperate to that end by the creation of a joint board to study the interrelations of rail and water traffic and the methods necessary to carry out the policy of Congress, above declared. The joint board is to meet at least twice a month, and is to formulate and transmit to the Shipping Board and to the commission such recommendations, not inconsistent with law, as it deems necessary to carry out the policy declared by Congress. Thereupon it is to be the duty of the Shipping Board and of the commission, by independent action, each within its own sphere and by the use of its own powers, to make effective such of the recommendations of the joint board as they may, respectively, approve.

EXPORT BILLS OF LADING.

Section 603 amends section 25 of the interstate commerce act, which provides for the issuance of through bills of lading in the case of goods transported by railroad to a port of the United States and thence by water to a foreign country. The amendment provides that the Interstate Commerce Commission in prescribing the form of the bill of lading shall adopt as the portion thereof governing the water portion of the voyage such form as may be certified by the Shipping Board.

RAIL-OWNED WATER LINES.

Section 604 amends paragraph (9) of section 5 of the interstate commerce act, which paragraph forbids railroads to own common carriers by water or vessels with which they compete or may compete for traffic. The effect of the amendment is to permit railroads to own water lines engaged exclusively in commerce not included within the coastwise trade or engaged in trade between the United States and the Philippine Islands even after the Philippines have been put under the coastwise laws. The amendment, however, does not permit railroads to own water lines engaged in trade with foreign contiguous territory.

AGREEMENTS BETWEEN CARRIERS AFFECTING WATER TRANSPORTATION.

Section 605 amends section 15 of the shipping act, 1916, which section provided for the filing with the Shipping Board of all agreements entered into between common carriers by water, fixing or regulating rates, controlling competition, or in any manner providing a competitive working arrangement, and imposed a penalty for carrying out such an agreement without the approval of the Shipping Board. The amendment adds to the kinds of agreements which must be filed, those providing warehousing, docking, or other terminal facilities, and those providing that one carrier shall act as agent or representative of the other.

The amendment also compels a common carrier by water and a common carrier by railroad to file with the board all agreements between them relating to the interchanging of freight or passengers, or the making of joint rates, or providing warehousing, docking, or other terminal facilities, or providing that one carrier shall act as agent or representative of the other, or providing in any manner for a cooperative working arrangement. The amendment, however, applies only to agreements relating to passengers or property transported or to be transported to or from a foreign country or the Philippine Islands. The amendment also makes it unlawful to carry out such agreements until approved by the Shipping Board. The amendment also provides that all agreements covered by the section, in effect at the time of the passage of the bill, shall be valid until disapproved by the board.

Section 606 amends paragraph (d) of paragraph (13) of section 6 of the interstate commerce act, which section authorises the Interstate Commerce Commission to compel a railroad which has made an arrangement with a water carrier operating to a foreign country for the handling of through business to enter into similar arrangements with other carriers operating to the same foreign country. The effect of the amendment is to provide that such agreements shall be subject to the approval of the Shipping Board.

JOINT OR PROPORTIONAL RATES.

Section 607 amends section 28 of the merchant marine act, 1920, which section provides that no common carrier shall make any preferential rate based on the fact that the passengers or property transported are destined for or have come from a foreign country by water, unless such water transportation is to be or has been in an American vessel. The section further provided that if the Shipping Board found that adequate shipping facilities to or from a port in a foreign country were not afforded by American vessels, it should certify this fact to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the commission could then, in its discretion, suspend the operation of the section. The suspension might be terminated by order of the commission whenever the Shipping Board found that adequate shipping facilities by American vessels were afforded. The amendment takes away from the commission the discretion as to suspending the section and makes it its duty to do so when the Shipping Board certifies the lack of adequate American vessels; and likewise makes it the duty of the commission to terminate the suspension upon 30 days' notice when the Shipping Board certifies that adequate facilities are furnished by American vessels. The amendment also adds a paragraph providing that whenever the board and the commission are both of the opinion that putting into effect or keeping in effect the provisions of the section will result in materially changing the channels of transportation within the United States, or in unduly congesting one or more ports of the United States, the commission shall suspend the operation of the section until such time as the commission and the board reach a contrary conclusion, whereupon the commission shall terminate the suspension upon 30 days' notice.

TITLE VII.—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

TRANSPORTATION OF GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS AND SUPPLIES.

Section 701 provides that all officers and employees of the United States shall, whenever practicable, travel in an American vessel if the travel expenses are directly or indirectly chargeable to the United States. Voyages may be made in vessels under a foreign flag only when specifically ordered by the head of the department or upon orders specifically approved by the head of the department, who in all cases is to report promptly to the board all voyages made in foreign vessels, together with the reasons why the voyage is so made. If any person fails to comply with this section he is not to be reimbursed for his passage money, or is to be surcharged in his accounts with the United States, as the case may require.

Section 702 provides that so far as practicable all goods belonging to or intended for the United States transported by water shall be shipped in an American vessel. If such shipments are not practicable and shipment is made in a foreign vessel, it is the duty of the officer or employee of the United States authorizing or making the shipment to notify the board in writing, with the reasons why shipment was so made.

REGULATIONS.

Section 703 authorizes the Shipping Board to make such regulations in respect to matters placed under its jurisdiction by the act as it deems necessary to make effective the intent and purposes of the act.

SEPARABILITY.

Section 704 is the usual provision that the unconstitutionality of a part of the act shall not affect the validity of the remainder.

SHORT TITLE.

Section 705 provides that the act may be cited as the "merchant marine act, 1922."

Part III.—Discussion of important features of the bill.

In the first place, the bill makes a number of amendments to the merchant marine act, 1920, with a view to removing some obstacles which in practice have arisen under certain provisions of this act.

SALE OF SHIPS.

Section 1: The effect which this amendment has is to give the board power, under special circumstances, to make sales over the counter when five or more members of the board are convinced that the interests of the United States are best served thereby. The committee added to this amended section a clause giving the board the power to write into their sale agreement a provision as to the use or the disposition of the vessel in order that, for example, with the wooden ships the board might, if it desired, sell ships with the provision that they may be broken up, or in the case of other ships, that desired services and routes should be maintained with those vessels. The committee also amended the original bill so that the deferred payments must at all times cover the depreciation of the vessel as determined by the board and fixed the rate of interest on the deferred payments at not less than 4 per cent. The committee felt that in the case of the sale of vessels where the price was left wholly in the hands of the Shipping Board the rate of interest should not be appreciably lower than that which the United States paid for its moneys.

THE MIDDLE WEST AMENDMENT.

Section 2: During the hearings, representatives of the Middle West and the South Atlantic expressed themselves as apprehensive that the sales policy of the board might be such as to vest control of the board's tonnage in the hands of monopolistic interests so as to work eventually to the detriment of the shippers of the Middle West, and possibly undo the work done by the United States Shipping Board in building up adequate services from all American ports. The committee recognized clearly the need of insuring that all sections of the country be afforded adequate water transportation facilities, and while believing that the danger of monopoly in cargo lines is not as great as is feared, nevertheless agreed that adequate guaranties should be incorporated in the bill to remove all doubt upon the point.

Accordingly a new section was added to the original bill under consideration, inserting two provisos and a new paragraph to section 7 of the merchant marine act of 1920. The effect of these additions is to insure that local interests, in the seaboard communities and in the inland districts naturally tributary thereto, shall have not less than two years in which to organize steamship companies and raise the necessary capital to purchase the lines which the board is operating from such communities; and that in developing its sales policy the board shall work to continue existing lines and endeavor in every way to bring about their permanent retention in the hands of those directly interested in the communities which the lines serve.

CONSTRUCTION LOAN FUND.

Section 3: The bill amends section 11 of the merchant marine act, 1920, by providing that the construction loan fund therein established shall come into existence as rapidly as the funds authorized for transfer to it become available, where the act of 1920 only permitted setting aside $25,000,000 each year. No increase in the eventual size of the fund, namely, $125,000,000, is contemplated. The bill added a provision to section 11 that the loan fund could be used not only in aid of construction of vessels but also for the reequipment of vessels already built with machinery and commercial appliances of the most efficient and the most economical type. It is also provided that the rate of interest to be charged shall be not less than 2 per cent per annum, while the act of 1920 specified no rate.

The minimum rate of interest of 2 per cent is authorized because of the fact that this loan is to be expended in construction in American yards, and that the Government will receive through the administration of this loan new or reengined vessels of the most desirable type. The committee therefore feels that the board should have power to loan from the fund at as low a rate of interest as 2 per cent.

TAXATION OF VESSELS.

Section 201: This section continues the policy expressed in section 23 of the merchant marine act, 1920. The exemption from income taxation allowed to shipowners by that section was by its terms to continue for a period of 10 years. It was, however, confined to the war profits and excess profits taxes of the revenue act of 1918. With the repeal of those taxes by the revenue act of 1921, the provisions of section 23 ceased to be of any effect. Section 201 of the present bill merely carries out the promised tax exemption of the merchant marine act, 1920, with some slight changes. The exemption applies only to the earnings of vessels of 1,500 gross tons or more and the vessel owner is required to supply out of his ordinary funds only one-half of the cost of new vessel construction instead of two-thirds, as provided in the former act.

The general policy of exempting the earnings of vessels in the foreign trade, upon condition that the amount of taxes thus saved to the owners of such vessels shall be invested in the building of new vessels in American shipyards, is thought by the committee to be thoroughly sound. It serves not only to encourage the operation of vessels in foreign trade but at the same time helps to maintain our American shipyards.

This section also continues another policy of income-tax exemption expressed in section 23 of the merchant marine act, 1920. Under the provisions of that section the owner of a vessel built prior to January 1, 1914, was exempted from all income taxes payable upon any gain resulting from the sale of such a vessel under the revenue act of 1918, if the entire proceeds were invested in ship construction in American shipyards.

This section makes this exemption applicable to the taxes imposed by the revenue act of 1921, thus continuing to make effective the policy expressed in section 23 of the merchant marine act, 1920. The result of this policy is to encourage the replacement of old vessels by the construction of new vessels in American shipyards, thus aiding to keep our merchant marine composed of the best and most efficient types of vessels and at the same time providing for the maintenance of our vitally necessary shipbuilding industry.

DEPRECIATION OF VESSELS.

Section 203: This section authorized the Shipping Board to prescribe rules and regulations for the determination of the depreciation of vessels of the United States for income-tax purposes under the revenue act of 1921. The committee believes that this subject is one which should properly be intrusted to the Shipping Board because of its expert knowledge of the subject. The rules heretofore applied by the Treasury Department have placed American shipowners at a disadvantage as compared with their foreign competitors. Under this provision the Shipping Board will be enabled to make rules and regulations covering depreciation of vessels which will result in overcoming the handicap to American vessel owners by reason of the less favorable treatment heretofore accorded to them in the application of the revenue laws.

Provision is further made for additional allowance in case of vessels of 1,000 gross tons or more, acquired after August 1, 1914, and prior to January 1, 1921, for depreciation based upon the exceptional decrease in values of shipping which has taken place since the latter date. This is to be determined under rules and regulations prescribed by the Shipping Board and is to be allowed to be distributed over the five years beginning with the taxable year 1922. Provision is made for a redetermination of any allowance which may be made, based upon any change in values during the five-year period. Similar allowance is made under the British revenue laws and the effect of this section is merely to place the American vessel owner in this respect on a parity with his British competitor.

INCOME-TAX CREDIT FOR TRANSPORTATION BY WATER.

Section 204: This section provides that any person paying freight for the transportation of goods between the United States and a foreign port in an American vessel shall receive as a credit against any income tax payable by him an allowance of 5 per cent of the amount of such freight money. If the person whose goods are thus transported has more than 50 per cent interest in the vessel, whether direct or indirect, no allowance is given him. The purpose of this latter provision is to exclude from the benefits of the section industrial concerns which carry their goods in their own vessels.

This section is one of the most important indirect aids provided by the bill. If direct subsidies were made enormous, vessels might be operated even without cargo. Obviously, such a method of securing a merchant marine would be highly artificial and extremely costly. A permanent and healthy merchant marine can never be established merely by paying subsidies. The secret of success in shipping, as in any other business, is volume, but American vessel owners are at a tremendous handicap in this respect compared with their foreign competitors. For so many years have Americans been dependent upon foreign vessels for the carriage of their goods, so firmly established are such foreign vessels in the carrying of freight, their commercial and financial connections are so widespread, their shipping organizations so broad and efficient, that successful competition on the part of the new American shipping industry is possible only if some means can be found for overcoming these advantages. The mere appeal to the patriotism of American shippers is insufficient. Some practical inducement to use American vessels must be found. The force of inertia tends to continue American shipments in foreign vessels. It is believed that the 5 per cent allowance provided by this section will furnish the necessary inducement to bring about the use of American vessels by American shippers, in preference to their foreign competitors, yet the total cost of this provision is estimated by the Treasury Department as not exceeding $4,500,000 per annum. No amount of direct subsidy will accomplish the same results. Even though an increase in the amount of direct subsidy paid might equalize the results of this section so far as the earnings of the vessels are concerned, it could do so only at a cost perhaps four or five times the amount of the cost of this indirect aid and no basis would be laid for the permanent establishment of the merchant marine.

If it be said that the results of this income-tax allowance can not be definitely measured, it seems none the less desirable to give the plan a trial. If it is successful, the result will be to increase the earnings of the shipowners, and under the provision of a 10 per cent limitation upon profits the amount of direct subsidy required will be decreased. If, on the other hand, the income-tax deduction does not cause American shippers to use American vessels, the cost will be negligible.

The merchant marine act of 1920 was largely based upon a similar plan. Under the tariff act provision was made for a 5 per cent deduction on customs duties, payable on goods imported, but this was not made effective because the Supreme Court held that it was in violation of our treaty obligations, and both President Wilson and President Harding have found it impossible to carry out section 34 of the merchant marine act of 1920, which authorized and directed the President to abrogate the provisions of treaties so as to enable discriminating duties to be put into effect. The income-tax deduction provided in this section applies both to imports and exports and to goods dutiable and nondutiable. Thus, while it embodies the same principle as that sought to be carried out by section 34 of the merchant marine act of 1920, it covers all goods carried in American ships, whether imports or exports. Your committee believes that this section should prove far more effective than would the carrying out of the provisions of section 34 of the merchant marine act of 1920.

TONNAGE DUTIES.

Section 206: This section doubles the present tonnage duties, except in the case of sailing vessels of less than 1,000 gross tons or in the case of other vessels of less than 1,500 gross tons. American tonnage duties are far less than those customary abroad. Even after this section becomes effective the American tonnage duties will be generally less than those charged in foreign ports.

TRANSPORTATION OF IMMIGRANTS BY WATER.

Title III: This title is intended to secure for American vessels their fair share of the immigrant traffic. Had this provision been in effect prior to the enactment of the quota law we would to-day have had a prosperous line of passenger steamers upon the North Atlantic second to none, and this without expense to the Treasury; but America has always permitted those coming to her shores as immigrants to travel as they saw fit. The result has been that the immigrant traffic has been largely divided between Germany and Great Britain, and the steamship companies of those countries have for many years entered into agreements definitely apportioning the traffic between them. It is now proposed that American passenger steamers shall be entitled to one-half of this traffic. This title accordingly provides that as nearly as practicable one-half of the total number of immigrants admitted to the United States in any fiscal year shall be transported in American vessels, and the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, is directed to make the regulations necessary to bring this about.

In view of possible conflict with the obligations of commercial treaties this provision is not to be made effective until the President is satisfied that no treaty obligations will be broken, or if he finds that such treaty obligations will interfere with the carrying out of this provision, then until the President has taken the necessary steps to renegotiate such treaties.

This title, like the 5 per cent income-tax deduction, should prove one of the most valuable of the indirect aids afforded by the bill. As the income-tax deduction provision should fill our vessels with cargo, so this provision should fill our vessels with passengers. In each case the result should be that increase in volume of business which is the sole foundation of a permanent and successful merchant marine.

DIRECT AID.

Title IV: The history of direct aid to shipping, under whatever name it may be given, postal or admiralty subventions, or navigation or construction bounties, shows clearly that there is almost no nation in the world which has not realized the importance of a merchant marine, and, to some extent, endeavored to obtain one by granting direct aid from its treasuries.

Stripped of all but the basic considerations, the problem of having a merchant marine comes down to the question of whether the economic conditions are favorable or unfavorable. The primary factors governing the situation are: First, trade to an extent sufficient to support a merchant marine; second, the necessary elements entering into its construction, i. e., coal, iron ore, and labor available cheaply and adequately; third, the necessary personnel to operate such a merchant marine available cheaply, adequately, and of a naturally capable type.

A nation which has all the specified factors will be successful at sea without national aid, because it has no economic handicaps to be overcome other than inexperience and inertia. A nation lacking any one of these factors and still desirous of a merchant marine must compensate artificially for its lack. Countries like Great Britain and Germany are examples of nations having an ocean trade upon which they are practically dependent, dowered with cheap steel and having an ample supply of labor available at low wages. Their success at sea was eventually certain, but even these nations paid postal subsidies to develop vessels of the higher types. Japan is an example of a nation similarly equipped but which entered the competition for ocean carriage only recently and therefore found it necessary to subsidize in order to get a start and while gaining experience. Japan's merchant marine is firmly established now and will probably increase steadily in the future. Her subsidies in late years have been markedly reduced.

On the other hand, nations not favored with all of the necessary factors have endeavored to make up the deficiency by national aid. They have been successful only when the national aid fully compensated for their national handicaps, and they have failed almost completely when such aid did not compensate for their economic disadvantages, although in the latter case subsidizing nations have maintained by their subsidies a merchant marine which would have been impossible without those subsidies. The one clear lesson to be learned from history is that a subsidy which is insufficient is little better than no aid whatever.

In the United States we have ocean trade and we have been becoming increasingly dependent upon it. We have cheap steel and we have a population which would again take to the sea naturally and efficiently if opportunity offered. Our one great handicap is that because of the ample resources of this great and wealthy Nation our people are able to win for themselves comfortable livings on shore, at wages two or three times those which citizens of a foreign nation could hope to obtain in a similar walk of life.

Because of the high wage of labor in this country the American shipowner is doubly handicapped. First, a ship costs him more to build because of the high labor costs in American shipyards, and he therefore must assume an annual carrying charge upon his greater first cost much in excess of that which his foreign competitor bears; second, because of the higher standard of living in this country, he must pay a higher wage to the crew obtained in American ports than does his foreign competitor for the crews which he obtains from the cheaper European or oriental labor.

It is to meet, in part, the excess cost of building a ship in the United States and operating it under the American flag that direct compensation is provided for in this bill.

The history of direct aid in the United States, as well as in other countries, shows clearly that to be effective any legislation in aid of merchant shipping must provide as far as possible for a reasonable degree of permanence. Time will be required to institute the various parts of the program, such as the sale of the Shipping Board fleet, the establishment of the loan fund, and the construction of the new ships required to round out the merchant marine, and time will be required for American private operators to establish themselves on new routes. New ships will not be contracted for, nor services developed, unless there is a definite assurance that the benefits of the proposed legislation will be applied for a period of years. All this is particularly true in view of the fact that the depression in shipping may continue for several years and that during this period a fair test can not be applied to all parts of this program.

MERCHANT-MARINE FUND.

Section 402: The source of funds for the direct aid proposed in the bill is to be a fund established in the Treasury Department and called the merchant-marine fund. This fund is to be made up of moneys derived from the tonnage duties, taxes, and light money paid by vessels entering our ports, 10 per cent of the amount of all customs duties, and the amounts which American vessels receiving compensation under the contract would have been paid, except for this section, for the carriage of mails other than parcel post. In addition to these moneys the merchant-marine fund receives all refunds of compensation paid into the Treasury by reason of the operation of section 417.

THE CONTRACT.

Section 403: The bill therefore provides that no vessel owner shall be entitled to compensation unless he has entered into a contract with the United States Shipping Board. These contracts may be for any period of time up to a maximum of 10 years. The board is authorized to refuse such contract to the incapable or inexperienced owner, or to the owner whose lack of resources or of character are such as to make him, in the opinion of the Shipping Board, unfit to receive compensation from the National Treasury. Because of the broad power this proviso gives the board, the committee felt it essential that this power could only be exercised on the affirmative vote of not less than five members of the board, accompanied by a full statement of the reasons for such action spread upon the minutes of the Shipping Board.

Section 412: To the United States the contract will insure that the vessel with respect to which it is made will be available for use by the Nation in time of war or any other national emergency at a fair price, and such fair price is to be based upon a fair actual value of the vessel without inflation, due to the causes which necessitated the taking. It relieves the United States of any liability for consequential damages to the requisitioned vessel; that is, damages resulting from the loss of possible profits due to the seizure.

Section 413: In addition to binding himself to sell or lease his vessel to the United States at a fair price in time of national emergency, the vessel owner who enters into a contract for compensation agrees that all the repairs or renewals or reconditioning of the ship or its fittings shall be done in a port of, or belonging to, the United States, except that in case of emergency the minimum work necessary to the safety of the vessel may be performed in a foreign port; and, except in the case of special feeder vessels, never touching American ports.

Section 414: The owner also contracts to carry free of charge mail matter of any kind, except parcel post, to such extent as may be required of him, and in so doing to waive all rights for compensation under the law or under any contract made thereunder, but in so waiving his rights to compensation the vessel owner is not relieved of any obligations incurred under existing law or contract, and the transportation of mails is subject to all the requirements of the Post Office Department, and the owner is liable to the prescribed penalties for infraction thereof.

Section 415: If a vessel in respect to which a contract for compensation has been made is sold prior to the expiration of the contract, compensation automatically ceases unless the new owner makes another contract with the board. Such sale, however, does not relieve the new owner of the vessel from the liability of having his vessel requisitioned in time of national emergency.

The owner contracts to turn into the Treasury one-half of his net earnings in excess of 10 per cent in any one year until the compensation received during that year has been repaid.

RATE OF COMPENSATION.

Section 404: The direct aid is based upon the size and speed of the vessel and the distance covered. The reasons for the adoption of this method of computing compensation were brought out clearly and in considerable detail during the hearings.

All vessels, otherwise eligible, receive compensation at the rate of one-half of 1 cent per gross ton per 100 nautical miles covered. Power-driven vessels, capable of making speeds on trial of 12 knots or more, receive a higher rate, proportionate to their speed, and hence to their first cost and to their operating cost. The maximum rate provided is 2½ cents per ton per 100 miles, which may be paid to vessels of 23 knots speed or above.

LIMITATIONS OF COMPENSATION.

Section 406: In order to make the compensation apply to vessels which are of real value to the foreign trade of the United States, and to obviate the need of negotiating contracts with a multitude of small vessels, a limit of 1,500 gross tons is provided, and no vessels of less than this tonnage receive compensation, except in the case of vessels solely propelled by sails, for which a minimum of 1,000 gross tons is established.

In the bill as reported it was provided that a vessel to be eligible for compensation must carry American citizens to the extent of not less than half her deck and her engine department, considered separately, and without counting licensed officers required by law. The committee amended this subparagraph by requiring that vessels must carry a crew two-thirds of which, exclusive of licensed officers, should be American citizens, and the entire remainder of the crew should be eligible to citizenship. Because of the impracticability of getting American servants, the committee excepted the steward's department of passenger vessels from this requirement and further allowed a period of two years in which the proportion should be attained, providing that in the first year after the enactment of this act only 50 per cent citizens would be required, in the second year only 60 per cent, while thereafter the full two-thirds should be demanded.

This subparagraph as amended will not only raise the proportion of American citizens upon vessels in the merchant marine to an extent probably greater than ever existed but it further has the effect of barring from the crews, except in the case of the steward's department of passenger ships, all aliens who are ineligible to citizenship during the period. The committee feels that this amendment is the most important provision in the interests of an American-manned merchant marine.

Because the encouragement of American shipbuilding is one of the primary purposes of the bill, it provides, generally speaking, that only American-built vessels shall be entitled to compensation. Exceptions are the vessels of foreign construction now under the American flag, either privately or publicly owned, and such ships as only brought under the flag within 60 days after the enactment of the act.

It might be desirable, or even necessary, to add to our merchant marine in the immediate future special types of ships which at present we do not possess but which do exist elsewhere. To make this possible the board has power, upon a vote of not less than five members, to admit to compensation a foreign-built vessel owned by a citizen and admitted to registry after the taking effect of the section. Such admission can only be made to a vessel built prior to the enactment of the act—that is, to existing vessels. This exception, therefore, will not permit new contracts to be placed abroad with the idea that the vessel may be given compensation. Further, only three years are allowed for the exercise of this prerogative by the board, for that time is sufficient to permit American shipyards to build the needed vessels.

OWNERSHIP OF VESSELS BY CITIZENS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Section 409: This section does not become effective until three years after the enactment of the act. Thereafter, at least 75 per cent of any vessel owner's total gross tonnage engaged in foreign trade must be American, otherwise he is deprived of any right to compensation under the act. This applies equally to tonnage owned, chartered, or for which the owner acts as agent.

Provision is made for the suspension by the board of this provision with respect to vessels of a particular type or kind not reasonably available under the American flag.

At the present time nearly all American vessel owners and operators are more or less heavily interested in foreign vessels. The committee feels that this was a condition which, in the interest of the American merchant marine, should not be allowed to continue. Of course, Americans must be allowed to be interested in foreign vessels if they see fit to do so, but it seems a reasonable requirement that they shall not receive the benefits of a subsidy unless they devote their capital, their skill, and their industry solely to the development of the American merchant marine, for whose benefit the subsidy is given. There can be no divided allegiance or conflicting interest. Such a radical change in existing shipping interests and relations, it was felt, however, could not be instantly brought about, and accordingly a period of three years was allowed before the section is to become effective.

ALTERATIONS IN RATE OF COMPENSATION.

Section 410: As the board has for sale a number of vessels of the passenger or combination type, some of which the United States acquired by seizure at the outbreak of the war, the sales price of these vessels will not reflect their present-day cost of construction. The rate of compensation for vessels of the higher speed is based upon their cost of construction. Obviously, therefore, the board should have it in its power to decrease the rate of compensation where vessels are sold at such prices, or, where special circumstances otherwise make it desirable, to reduce this rate from that provided for new construction.

On the other hand, it is possible that, to further carefully laid plans, either for trade or national defense, special types of vessels should be constructed whose nature might render them unprofitable for a number of years at least, or it might be that the board, to build up a trade over a certain route, desired to have a line operated thereon in spite of the fact that such operation will be manifestly unprofitable even with the scheduled amount of compensation. In order to bring into being such types of vessels, or to establish services upon special routes, the board has the power to give more than the schedule rate of compensation. Further, in case the conditions change materially after the contract has been entered into, the board may, with the consent of the vessel owner, alter, or further alter, the terms of the contract. It should be emphasized, however, that while the board is free to set such rate as it pleases in the contract that it enters into, no change can be made, once this contract is executed, except by mutual consent.

The maximum rate to which the amount of compensation can be set by the board is twice that provided in the bill. Any change in rate, either increase or decrease, can only be made upon the affirmative vote of not less than five members of the board, with full reasons for their actions spread upon the minutes.

MILEAGE AND CONSTRUCTIVE TONNAGE.

Section 405: Because of the fact that in small steamers the wage cost and cost of construction is very little less than for vessels of much greater size, the bill provides that these small steamers, on which a very large portion of our commerce depends by reason of our trade to the West Indies and Caribbean countries, should be computed for purposes of compensation upon a constructive gross tonnage in place of their actual tonnage. The words "power driven" have been defined so as to include only those vessels whose horsepower bears a certain ratio to their gross tonnage. This prevents underpowered steamers or auxiliary vessels, who have not the differential which the constructive tonnage was designed to compensate, from receiving its benefits.

The mileage covered by the vessel is to be determined by the table of actual distances between the ports touched, except that when such distances do not fairly represent the distance required by efficient operation to be covered by the vessels, the board may allow up to the actual mileage covered by the ship. The idea of this exception was that vessels might be engaged in important work with a negligible distance between ports touched; for example, a steamer chartered to carry a cargo of coal to naval vessels operating at sea might return to her port of departure without having called at any port whatever, and hence without this exception not being entitled to any compensation.

FOREIGN TRADE.

Section 407: Because of the somewhat peculiar status of the island possessions of the United States with regard to their distance and their present lack of trade in any great volume, it was necessary in drafting the bill to define for compensation purposes foreign trade in such manner as would best promote the establishment of necessary services to our distant possessions and in a period of years would give them an opportunity to build us such trade, especially with the United States, as could be expected from their natural resources. With some of these possessions—small, distant, and in many cases used only as naval stations—it is hopeless to expect that their trade will ever reach such an extent as to make them profitable ports of call for first-class lines. The maintenance of services to such points is essentially part of the duty of the Nation and one of the basic reasons for national aid.

These points are cared for by providing that trade between ports of the United States, or between the United States and Alaska or Porto Rico, is not to be considered as foreign trade. Trade between the United States and Hawaii is not to be considered foreign trade unless the revenue from such trade forms one-fourth or less of the total revenue accruing to the vessel; or, in other words, the important part of the voyage is that part beyond Hawaii.

This special requirement was necessary because a vessel traveling, say, from San Francisco to the Philippines direct would be compensated for the entire distance. If a vessel which called at Hawaii was compensated only for the distance from Hawaii to the Philippines, the natural tendency would be to eliminate Hawaii as a port of call. On the other hand, if a vessel going past Hawaii were to be compensated fully for the run between the United States and Hawaii, even though the majority of her cargo were for or from those islands, it would seriously affect her competition with those lines terminating at the islands and therefore receiving no compensation whatever.

Intraisland carriage is also excluded from foreign trade for purposes of compensation. Special rulings can be made by the board in the case of unusual voyages, and such voyages can be considered as foreign trade even though passengers might be transported between two ports of the United States, provided the transportation is done in such manner as not to compete with vessels in the coastwise trade.

The compensation was designed primarily to be paid to vessels which were engaged in furthering the direct foreign trade of the United States; that is to say, were carrying passengers or cargo between the United States and foreign ports. Because of the excess of exports of the United States in bulk over the imports, the ordinary cargo steamer of the tramp type, as distinguished from the vessel operated on a regular line, must engage in indirect trade and adopt the so-called triangular route to reduce as much as possible the distance steamed in ballast. In order not to penalize such craft but at the same time to insure that vessels receiving compensation are engaged to a reasonable extent in the direct trade of the United States, the bill provides that a vessel shall be compensated for indirect trade provided it returns to the United States at least once a year.

One other type of service was excepted from the direct-trade provision. In distant waters there is a use for small vessels to collect cargo and bring it to some principal port, where it can be picked up by a larger vessel in direct trade, or to take it from such vessel and distribute it to the various ports of destination in small lots. The larger vessels can not with profit call at numerous ports. To supplement them vessels of this "feeder" type are needed, and under the American flag are to receive compensation, if otherwise eligible, provided the great part of their revenue is derived from persons or property received from or delivered to a vessel flying the United States flag and engaged in direct trade.

REPAYMENT OF COMPENSATION.

Section 417: The charge which has been most often brought against direct aid to shipping is that it led to abuses and resulted in profiteering. Your committee believes that in H. R. 12021 the possibility of these evils has been effectively prevented by a means probably unique in shipping legislation.

The rate of compensation itself has been set at a rate which falls short of equalizing the actual difference in cost of operation of American ships as compared to foreign vessels. The bill hedges about the payment of compensation with such requirements as to insure that all direct aid is paid to the vessels which are directly furthering the trade of the United States and promoting its future safety. In addition to all these restrictions, the bill further provides that compensation shall be returned by any vessel which does not actually need it.

In any year in which a vessel having a contract for compensation makes in excess of 10 per cent on its invested capital, the owner thereof must return half of all his net earnings in excess of 10 per cent until the entire amount of direct aid received in that year has been returned to the Treasury.

The bill provides in a most definite and certain manner that in computing his net profits the owner is restricted beyond any possibility of fraud to a profit based upon his vessels alone. He can not include the workings of other activities, such as stevedoring companies, piers, lighterage companies, or other means by which profits could be unequally distributed through a single control of several activities. In case he owns goods carried in his own vessels he can not charge himself a lower rate of freight nor otherwise penalize his ship to the advantage of his cargo. The ships, and the ships alone, are considered.

The committee feels that this provision should be sufficient answer to those who feel that national aid to shipping is a private raid upon the Treasury. While in no year and at no time guaranteeing any profit whatever to any vessel, the bill provides that any year in which the vessel makes a profit of more than 10 per cent she shall repay compensation to the Treasury.

ARMY AND NAVY TRANSPORTS.

Section 501: As another means of indirect aid the bill proposes that where adequate facilities are afforded by private American shipping for performing services required by the military or naval forces of the United States the President may direct that such forces lay up their own vessels or such of them as are not needed, or if the superfluous vessels are of a suitable commercial type they may be transferred to the Shipping Board for eventual sale or other disposal.

In such cases Army and Navy are directed to make the contracts with owners of private vessels necessary to obtain the required services. The section grants the power to make these contracts for a 10-year period, so that private owners may be assured of a permanence sufficient to justify the construction of special types of ships, or the investment otherwise of substantial amounts in establishing suitable services.

RELATIONS BETWEEN INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION AND UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD.

Section 602: This section reiterates the policy of Congress, expressed in previous legislation, to foster and promote both rail and water transportation. The importance of the closest cooperation between the United States Shipping Board and the Interstate Commerce Commission is recognized and a joint board is created to assist in solving the problems arising out of the interrelations of rail and water transportation.

The committee believes that valuable results may flow from thus bringing these two bodies together in a common effort to solve our vastly important and difficult transportation problems.

SECTION 607.

Section 28 of the act of 1920 may prove to be of valuable assistance in the upbuilding of our merchant marine. There has been a certain amount of distrust of its provisions on the part of various communities. To remove any apprehension the bill amends the section and permits the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Shipping Board, when both are of the opinion that the provisions of section 28, as amended, will result in changing the channels of transportation within the United States or in unduly congesting any ports, to suspend its operation.

TRANSPORTATION OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES OR SUPPLIES.

Section 701: It is provided that, wherever practicable, the transportation of personnel and property of the United States the expense of whose transportation is borne by the Public Treasury shall be either in a vessel the property of the United States or in a vessel flying our flag.

In the case of passengers, if the travel is undertaken on a foreign flagship, the person concerned will be obliged to bear the expense himself unless the head of the organization of which the traveler is a member specifically approves or directs travel by such ship and reports the reason for so doing to the Shipping Board.

It seems unnecessary to comment on the futility of attempting to build up an American merchant marine if the Government itself does not set the example of patronizing, whenever possible, the vessels of its nationals.

AMEND AND SUPPLEMENT THE MERCHANT MARINE ACT, 1920.

[House Report No. 1257, Sixty-seventh Congress, third session.]

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, submitted the following report, to accompany H. R. 12817:

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report thereon with the recommendation that it do pass.

This bill is practically the same as H. R. 12021, reported to the House last June, except for a few changes which are hereinafter discussed. The reasons for the passage of this bill are fully set forth in House Report 1112, accompanying H. R. 12021. The following are the differences between this bill and that bill as reported:

REPORTS BY SHIPPING BOARD.

The second paragraph of section 12 of the shipping act, 1916, requires the board to include in its reports, among other things, "a statement of all expenditures and receipts under this act." This provision, strictly construed, would not require the board to make any statement of expenditures or receipts under any other act than the shipping act. In order to make clear that the board is required to make a statement of all expenditures and receipts, this paragraph of existing law is amended by section 703 of the bill.

INSURANCE.

This section amends section 9 of the merchant marine act of 1920 so as to permit the board to require purchasers of vessels from the board to place the insurance necessary to protect the equity of the United States in the vessel with the separate insurance fund, created under section 10 of the merchant marine act of 1920, in any case where the purchaser is unable to place such insurance with American insurance companies at as low a rate as that quoted by foreign insurance companies. It is obviously desirable that such insurance shall be placed at home, but at the same time the purchaser should not be burdened with the added insurance cost where for any reason he is unable to obtain his insurance with American companies at as favorable rate as from the foreign companies. To meet this situation the board is given authority to permit the placing of such insurance under these special circumstances in the insurance fund. This applies both to hull insurance and to protection and indemnity insurance. With respect to the latter form of insurance the board is permitted to waive the requirement that it shall be furnished by the purchaser in all cases. This is to meet the situation where the character of the vessel sold by the board is such as to make protection and indemnity insurance unnecessary for the proper protection of the Government's equity.

Section 10 of the merchant marine act of 1920 is amended so as to make possible the carrying out of the provisions of section 9 as amended. In addition, the language of section 10 is broadened so as to remove any doubt as to the power of the board to cover in its separate insurance fund every form of insurance, including both hull and protection and indemnity insurance, to the full extent of the interest or equity of the United States in any vessel. (See secs. 3 and 4 of the bill.)

COMPENSATION FOR THE CARRIAGE OF MAILS.

Under H. R. 12021 it is contemplated that any vessel in respect of which a contract for compensation under that act was executed would forego any compensation for mail other than parcel post and that compensation which would otherwise have accrued for such transportation would be turned over to the merchant marine fund. This procedure met with objections on the part of the Post Office Department, which contended that without receiving compensation directly for the carriage of mails vessels would cease to take an interest in the carriage of mails and the efficiency of the service would suffer therefrom. They also felt that certain administrative difficulties would arise in view of the fact that all compensation would be vested in the hands of the Shipping Board and that the Post Office Department, on which the responsibility for mail services still lay, would be deprived of effective authority and control over the carriers.

It was also felt that a certain amount of inequity might result. Cases might occur where two carriers were receiving the same subsidy, but one was carrying large quantities of mail while the other was carrying little, if any.

In order to correct this situation and at the same time to remove conflicting and obsolete legislation, the following changes are made:

Vessels receiving subsidy are not required to carry mails free of charge and the provision whereby the compensation properly payable for such transportation of mails was to be paid into the merchant-marine fund is struck out. The ocean mail act of 1891, no longer practically effective and under which no contracts exist to-day, is repealed. Sections 7 and 24 of the merchant marine act of 1920 are amended by striking out so much thereof as authorizes the Postmaster General, in conjunction with the Shipping Board, to enter into contracts for the carriage of mails. (See sec. 6 of the bill.)

In addition to the foregoing reasons for the change, there is the added one that the application of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act seriously affects the revenues of passenger ships. It is these ships which usually carry the mails, and the committee feels that the slight additional compensation which would thereby accrue to passenger vessels is highly desirable in view of the difficulty experienced in maintaining under our laws American passenger services in competition with foreign services on which those laws are not applicable.

RATES OF INTERSTATE WATER CARRIERS.

The act of 1916 provided that common carriers by water in interstate commerce should file with the board their maximum rates and that if an unfair or unreasonable rate were charged the board could prescribe a just and reasonable maximum rate.

Section 704 amends section 18 of the shipping act of 1916 so that such carriers shall file with the board their actual rates, fares, and charges. These rates and charges can not be altered except with the approval of the board, and after 15 days' notice in the case of an increase and 3 days' notice in the case of reduction. In case the board disapproves any rate or charge on the ground that it is unjust or unreasonable, it may prescribe a reasonable rate or a maximum or minimum limit, or both. In this the procedure of the interstate commerce act is followed and the powers given the board herein with regard to interstate carriers by water are those which the Interstate Commerce Commission enjoys with regard to interstate commerce by rail.

APPROVAL OF BOARD TO TRANSFER OF DOCUMENTATION.

Section 42 of the shipping act of 1916 provides that vessels are documented under the laws of the United States until their documents are surrendered with the approval of the board. As it reads, however, this section only applies to Subdivision B of section 37 of the same act, which subdivision prohibits the transfer without the approval of the board of a vessel documented under the laws of the United States during war or national emergency. The effect of the amendment, which consists of the addition of the words "of section 9 and," is to make the board's approval of the surrender of documents equally necessary in time of peace and to prevent any evasion of the provisions of section 9 by first surrendering the vessel's documents and then transferring the undocumented vessel. (See sec. 709 of the bill.)

HOME PORT OF VESSELS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Section 4141 of the Revised Statutes reads as follows:

"Every vessel, except as is hereinafter provided, shall be registered by the collector of that collection district which includes the port to which such vessel shall belong at the time of her registry, which port shall be deemed to be that at or nearest to which the owner, if there be but one, or if more than one, the husband or acting and managing owner of such vessel, usually resides."

The above section was enacted in 1792, before the time when corporations were engaged in operating vessels. The language of the provision was framed without consideration of the possibility of corporate, as distinguished from individual, ownership of vessels. The result is that, if the requirement that a vessel's home port be the place where "the owner * * * usually resides" were literally enforced, many of our vessels would have home ports in such interior points as Denver, Colo., and Nogales, Ariz. However, the Bureau of Navigation has in practice generally authorized the issuance of the marine documents of a vessel at the port where the greater part of the vessel business of the owner is conducted rather than at such interior points. This interpretation of existing law is based in part upon the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in White's Bank v. Smith (1868) (7 Wall. 646), in which the court remarked that the home port is the port where negotiations or dealings with respect to vessels would naturally be conducted and in part upon certain implications drawn from the case of Southern Pacific Co. v. Kentucky (1911) (222 U. S. 63). This existing practice of the Bureau of Navigation is made law by the present bill in order that any question as to the lawful authority of the bureau to select coast ports as home ports rather than interior points in the State in which the corporation is created may be removed.

The question of the home port of the vessel also is of importance, not only in connection with the place of issuance of marine documents but in determining the place at which records of sales, conveyances, and mortgages of vessels of the United States shall be made. Subsection B of section 30 of the merchant marine act, 1920, is therefore amended to require that such record shall be made at the home port, as shown in the vessel's documents. In inserting the language "as shown in the vessel's documents," the validity of the record is made to rest not upon the vendee's or mortgagee's guess as to the home port of the vessel but on the definite fact of the actual determination of the home port by the collector of customs and the Secretary of Commerce, as shown in the vessel's documents.

While the general rule provided by the change is that the home port shall be "that port of documentation at or nearest to, and in the same customs district as, the place at which there is conducted the greater part of the vessel business of the owner," the Secretary of Commerce is given power by regulation to prescribe home ports in cases not within the above rule—as, for instance, vessels owned by the United States or the United States Emergency Fleet Corporation, vessels not engaged in trade, as yachts or cabin boats—and cases where there is no port of documentation in the same customs district as that which includes the place where the greater part of the vessel business of the owner is conducted.

The new provisions as to the home port of a vessel do not change the existing law (sec. 4178 of the Revised Statutes, as supplemented by sec. 21 of the act of June 26, 1884) relating to the port of hail of a vessel; i. e., the port whose name is to be painted upon the bow and stern of the vessel.

The new provisions determining the home port of a vessel do not in any way affect the situs of a vessel for taxation purposes, for the Supreme Court has held in Southern Pacific Co. v. Kentucky, above cited, that the taxable situs of a vessel is not dependent in any way upon the home port or port of hail.

Subsection O of section 30 of the merchant marine act, 1920, is also amended. The existing law provides that the documents of a vessel covered by a preferred mortgage may not be surrendered without the approval of the board, except in case of the forfeiture of the vessel and its sale by court order. By agreement between the Bureau of Navigation and the United States Shipping Board the board has given a blanket approval to surrender of the documents of a vessel covered by a preferred mortgage, in case of the renewal of the documents without change in ownership of the vessel, and in case of change of documents incident to change of trade, but without change of ownership of the vessel. These additional cases are now incorporated in the law. (See secs. 705 to 708 of the bill.)

TAX PROVISIONS.

Several minor changes have been made in the administrative provisions of Title II of the bill relating to taxation.

The Assistant Secretary read the minority views, as follows:

MINORITY VIEWS.

GOVERNMENTAL POLICY.

This is a proposal to enact a law adopting a permanent policy of the Government which has been repeatedly proposed heretofore and as often rejected by Congress.

That policy involves launching the Government upon a sea of trouble and enormous expense, in the form of a direct cash contribution from the Treasury to specific private enterprise.

The proposal is based upon the averment that the adoption of such a policy is necessary to the establishment and maintenance of a merchant marine adequate for the needs of the United States.

The measure is attempted to be supported by the assumption that it is sound because the opponents of such a policy do not propose anything better or different.

Such an assumption is, of course, unwarranted. It assumes that if an unwise or positively vicious measure is proposed it should be accepted unless some substitute for it is suggested.

The answer to such a measure is and must be resistance and defeat.

Any attempt to modify, amend, or substitute, means compromise, more or less recognition of the principle involved, and therefore would be inadequate and unsatisfactory.

The argument in support of the measure is based upon two proposals.

First. The Government now has a fleet of some 1,400 steel vessels, cargo carriers, and 44 passenger carriers, and their maintenance and operation is costing the Government some $3,000,000 per month over and above their earnings.

Second. It is essential to the establishment and maintenance of an American merchant marine that these vessels should pass to private ownership speedily and the Government agency or bureau known as the United States Shipping Board should go out of existence.

The first and complete answer to these reasons for the measure is that it will not accomplish either of these things.

The second answer is that by the merchant marine act of 1920 ample provision has been made for the orderly and proper accomplishment of these proposals in so far as they should be accomplished in the public interest.

The third answer is, if the Shipping Board is incompetent or inefficient and can not execute the law or administer the affairs intrusted to it, the remedy does not lie in making an annual draft on the Treasury of from $53,000,000 to $75,000,000, but rather by a change of officials or Government agency, or change in the plans and practices which are producing alleged disastrous results.

The proposed measure means simply the establishment of a general subsidy system which will be fastened on the country for an indefinite period.

That can be determined on its merits, and the fact of the Government's having idle ships is not a material factor.

That it is put forward simply shows that the bill is based on a temporary situation which happens to be a period of intense depression.

It is a question of cargoes, and payments out of the Treasury will not solve that question. Natural and economic causes for decline in volume of international trade can not be overcome by financial Federal aid, out of the Treasury, to ships.

The whole tendency of the administration is against encouraging international trade. We can not have cargoes in the absence of foreign trade. Losses will not be eliminated because only a small portion of the tonnage will pass into private hands, as proponents of the bill admit, even if it should become a law, for years to come, and a costly overhead will continue.

In consequence, overhead expenses of the bureau and the losses will simply be supplemented by cash out of the Treasury. The taxes of the people will be increased by the amount of the aid given.

If the Government had no ships would this subsidy be voted?

The Government owning the ships, with full authority under existing laws in the Shipping Board to dispose of them on such terms as they may determine, so far from that situation supporting the grounds for the subsidy, it absolutely destroys or removes all basis for the demand.

The claim that there is need for a balancing of the fleet, as an argument for some of the provisions of the measure, is fallacious. We will never get a balanced fleet under this bill.

COMPENSATION—DIRECT SUBSIDY.

It is alleged that the subsidy is intended for the benefit of a suitable fleet to carry American grain and provisions and cotton to markets in foreign lands. These are described as "the farmers' kind of ships."

It is perfectly plain, on the other hand, that the ships which would chiefly be benefited are not the cargo ships at all, but passenger ships, and those of other types.

For instance, a cargo ship of 5,500 gross tons, such as those vessels built at Hog Island, would receive a minimum compensation. Such a ship, along with practically 1,200 others, composing our cargo carriers, would have about 200 steaming days a year, and make about 200 miles a day, and receive the one-half-cent rate, which would amount to about $11,000 per annum.

It is not conceivable that this amount would induce purchasers to acquire those ships or be a very material figure in their operations.

On the other hand, for instance, the George Washington, 25,000 gross tons, would receive approximately $300,000 per annum.

This ship on a recent voyage, just completed, made a profit over expenses of $140,000.

Is there any need for taxing the people $300,000 a year to be paid out of the Treasury to this particular ship directly when she is, even in present circumstances, able to make a profit of $140,000 per voyage?

Her sister ship, America, made a net profit of $45,000 on her last voyage, and she would receive out of the Treasury annually a gift of $300,000 under this bill.

These ships are 18½ knots, and it is estimated that they would sail 400 miles a day, and have 220 sailing days, and they would receive 1.3 cents per gross ton for each 100 miles.

If these passenger ships carried mail they would receive the mail subsidy in addition to the compensation mentioned.

The Standard Oil Co. has approximately 100 ships, aggregating 700,000 gross tons. Even at the minimum rate they would receive, as the bill was introduced and reported, a subsidy in the shape of direct compensation, it is called, of about $1,500,000 a year, notwithstanding they are engaged primarily in carrying products of their own. The bill was amended so as to eliminate this particular contribution to them as respects their own goods.

The United States Steel Corporation has 35 ships, aggregating 200,000 gross tons. They are engaged in carrying their own products primarily, but they would receive out of the Treasury, as the bill was reported, and from this direct compensation, approximately $500,000 a year. This, too, was eliminated by amendment, as applied to their own products.

The United Fruit Co. has 22 ships, 100,000 gross tons. On this compensation basis they would receive, as the bill was reported, about $250,000 a year, although they were built and are operated primarily for the transportation of their own commodities. The amendment applied to these vessels, respecting their own commodities.

The William Penn, 7,600 gross tons, our only ship equipped with the Diesel engine, recently made a voyage to the Orient, and her net profits were $30,000—her speed 10 knots.

The operating expenses of these ships equipped with the Diesel engine is about two-thirds of the oil or coal burners. The oil burner is generally cheaper than the coal.

Under this bill the Minnekahda, 17,281 gross tons, 16½ knots, would have a rate of compensation of 1 cent, and her subsidy would amount to $150,000 a year. She is owned by the Atlantic Transport Line, affiliated with the International Mercantile Marine. We never understood they were in need of a subsidy, or of any direct aid by way of compensation.

The Pacific Mail has 12 ships. They are rather slow and small, and they aggregate 60,000 gross tons, and the amount of compensation or direct subsidy for the entire fleet would be about $150,000 under this bill.

It will be seen that one ship of 17,281 gross tons would receive as much compensation as an entire fleet of 12 ships of the aggregate gross tonnage of 60,000 would receive.

The Leviathan will be entitled to receive of this direct compensation $1,250,000 per annum, which may be doubled.

In all cases compensation is to be computed "for each gross ton of the vessel," no matter what her cargo may be. If she goes empty, she will receive as much as if she goes loaded.

We mention these cases by way of illustrating how the bill would operate and to show the utterly indefensible results of the legislation.

These contracts are to run for 10 years from the time they are made—not from the passage of this act—as the bill was reported, but the Commerce Committee proposes to amend by limiting the period of all contracts to 15 years after the passage of the act. That question may go to conference.

It is true the bill vests in the Shipping Board the power to withhold compensation entirely or double it, at its discretion.

Instead of strengthening the bill, this provision, vesting such enormous power in a bureau which loudly proclaims its inability to cope with the situation, is enough to defeat it.

This power to build up or destroy ports, to enrich or impoverish ship lines, thus dominating localities, controlling shipowners, ship operators, and financial institutions, and the insurance companies, and all other connecting interests, would make that bureau a political autocracy and a dominating influence, equipped to work its own will.

SUBVENTIONS AND INDIRECT SUBSIDY.

As to indirect subsidies and subventions provided in the bill as reported to and as it passed the House, it was conceded by the proponents of the measure that they can not be, without any approach to accuracy, estimated. In that form, it was admitted, such benefits would be greater in extent and value than the direct compensation provided.

Congress was asked, therefore, to pass a law conferring benefits in the way of exemptions from taxation and deductions from income taxes, the extent and amount of which can not be stated, but known to be most unusual, discriminatory, and extensive, and constituting drains on the Public Treasury. The Commerce Committee of the Senate reports an amendment striking out sections 201 and 202, respecting exemptions from income taxes, and that question may go to conference.

The estimates of benefits arising from this provision in the bill range all the way from $7,000,000 to $15,000,000 per annum. Then, in addition, there are provisions respecting a huge loan fund at 4½ per cent (reported at 2 per cent), respecting the transportation of immigrants, depreciation allowances, monopoly of the mails, elimination of Army and Navy transports, transportation of Government officers and supplies, all conferring extensive indirect aids.

LOSSES.

Regarding the alleged losses now experienced by the Shipping Board from operations we have no accurate data.

One thing is certain, and that is, there is no occasion for continuing those losses.

If the Shipping Board can not escape them, then let them turn the ships over to the Panama Steamship Co., or to the United States Line, under Mr. Rossbottom, these two concerns alone now being guilty of the offense of Government operation, and we have no doubt we will share in the experience which these lines have enjoyed up to this time, namely, a profitable and successful business.

The present plan of operation by the Shipping Board was condemned in the hearings on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, July 27, 1921, by the chairman and his advisors. (See pp. 17, 116, 117, and 118 of those hearings.)

The chairman of the committee asked Mr. Smull (p. 117):

"You are not in favor of continuing this present contract under which the Government pays all of the expenses and the operator receives 5 per cent of gross receipts?

"Mr. SMULL. I would prefer to have a man with something at stake, so that he would be vitally interested in the operation of the boats.

"The CHAIRMAN. Are you in favor of abolishing the present contract system of operating those ships?

"Mr. SMULL. Yes, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. Is there any chance under the present system for the Government ever to make anything out of the operation of ships?

"Mr. SMULL. That just keeps the Government in the business.

"The CHAIRMAN. And it keeps the taxpayers paying the loss?

"Mr. SMULL. Yes."

And yet that system has been continued, and it has been the only kind of Government operation we have had until recently, when the United States Line was placed in charge of Mr. Rossbottom, who was borrowed from the Panama Steamship Co. to operate that line for the Government.

All the other ships are operated under that system, to wit, a contract made with private parties under which the Government pays all of the expenses and the operator receives 5 per cent of the gross receipts.

As to the alternative proposal, briefly it may be stated in the language of Mr. Lasker, the chairman of the Shipping Board, at the hearings which we have alluded to, at page 116.

Mr. Smull then said:

"The best plan, and the one we advocate most strongly, is the sale of the ships, so as to get rid of the fleet, and get out of the business entirely. Getting these ships into American ownership is the best plan, and that will be done as soon as the market will absorb this tonnage and give us any kind of price which will let us out at all.

"Mr. KELLEY. Have you figured how much leeway Congress should give you in order to get rid of this fleet?

"Mr. SMULL. That is a hard question.

"Mr. LASKER. I will answer it. When the world's shipping gets buoyant the avarice of men will make them want to increase their fleets, and we will sell the ships, and that day is sure to come; and the Government has got to keep the ships going and put confidence either in ourselves or some others to keep them going as efficiently as can be under the circumstances until such time arrives. Is that a fair statement?

"Mr. SMULL. Yes, sir; I can not tell you how long it will be."

AMOUNT OF SUBSIDY.

Let us quote from Lasker himself respecting two other important facts.

At the hearings of the joint committee on this measure as it was first introduced, page 273, Mr. Lasker gave the items as to the amount of the proposed subsidy.

He said:

"The total cost to the Treasury if the bill ever becomes highly successful in operating, so that we have an adequate merchant marine for peace and war, will be:

Customs	$30,000,000
Tonnage	4,000,000
Income tax	10,000,000
Construction	8,000,000
Postage	5,000,000

"Mr. DAVIS. How much does that add up—$52,000,000?

"Mr. LASKER. That will add up $52,000,000."

If the Commerce Committee's amendment prevails, it would exclude one item in this list, to wit, income tax. That has not yet been determined, but supposing that elimination is accomplished, the subsidy would then stand at $42,000,000 a year.

How consistent is that with the talk that the amount of this subsidy should not exceed one-half of the present losses from operation!

HIGH WAGE COST.

A great deal has been made of the suggestion that our laws operate to make the cost of operation of American ships greater than the cost of foreign ships.

At the hearings mentioned, page 43, volume 1, the following appears:

"Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand from the President's address to Congress, and also from the statement that you have made, that you do not undertake to recommend or urge any material change in the seaman's act that now exists?

"Mr. LASKER. You are right. I want to take occasion to say here that I think the seaman's act has been one of the most misrepresented acts of which I have ever heard. I came down to Washington believing, as most people in my part of the country do, if you repeal the seaman's act you would have a merchant marine. That is pure bunk.

"Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the reason I asked the question, because for a long time those who were undertaking to give reasons why we could not operate successfully with our foreign competitors based their assertions exclusively on the discrimination caused by the seaman's act.

"Mr. LASKER. I think they have gotten worn out on those representations.

"Mr. BANKHEAD. I am glad to hear that."

At the hearings Mr. Andrew Furuseth stated:

"As a result of these reductions the wages of American seamen are now much lower than the wages of Canadian and Australian seamen; are practically on a level with British wages; and are substantially higher than the wages only of Japanese among the principal maritime nations."

SHIPYARDS.

We have all the raw material for building ships in the United States. We have demonstrated our ability to build ships. At Hog Island we laid the keel of a cargo steel ship and launched her in 27 days. We set the high mark and standard for the world.

Under the recent tariff act we tax ships 50 per cent of the repairs made in foreign yards in order to force them to have their work done in our yards. This will add to insurance and other expenses of the American ships.

What we lack in this country is cooperation on the part of shippers and owners and the people generally. It is that spirit of cooperation which has built up the merchant marine of other countries.

Subsidies never created or maintained permanently a merchant marine in any country.

SUBSIDIES TO COMPETITORS.

It is argued that we must have a subsidy because our competitors subsidize shipping and shipyards.

These competitors are named as Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan.

The entire aggregate provision made for subsidies, subventions, and other aids in those countries amounts all told—Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan—to approximately $17,000,000 per annum.

Ten per cent of our customs duties would yield over $40,000,000, which must go into this compensation fund under this bill.

That item alone will amount to nearly three times the total of all subsidies and subventions afforded by all our competitors named.

On this subject of cooperation we refer to clipping from a newspaper headed, "Germans building ships for Bethlehem Steel Co." and reading as follows:

"HAMBURG, November 19.—Two motor-driven ore-carrying steamships, each of 20,000 tons and measuring 560 feet in length and 72 feet in width, are under construction in German shipyards here for the Bethlehem Steel Co. The boats will ply between Chile and the United States."

Also,

[From the Public Ledger.]

ORDER SHIPS BUILT ABROAD—LIVERPOOL FIRM TO BUILD THREE FOR BOSTON CONCERN.

(Special cable dispatch.)

"LONDON, June 25.—Three electric motor-driven refrigerator ships have been ordered by the United Fruit Co., of Boston, from Liverpool shipbuilders, it was announced to-day.

"The operative power will consist of Diesel engines, and each ship will be about 4,000 gross tons, making them the largest ships in American fruit trade to make use of this new type of engine."

And,

[From the Manufacturers' News of Chicago.]

"CHICAGO.—The arrival June 12 of the Cunard Line steamship Mauretania at Cherbourg with Morris & Co. products from Chicago again demonstrated the practicability of a fast overseas freight service from Chicago to Europe in seven days. On June 4 the shipment left Chicago over the Erie Railroad at 4.30 a. m., and after a fast run to New York was loaded aboard the Mauretania early Tuesday morning. The ship sailed at 1.30 p. m. same day. Cablegrams announce the arrival of the ship after a world's record-breaking ocean voyage, 5 days, 8 hours, and 10 minutes to Cherbourg, France, making a total running time from Chicago of 7 days, 9 hours, and 40 minutes.

"Two weeks before the White Star liner Majestic carried a shipment from Chicago to Southampton in 7 days, 11 hours, and 56 minutes in connection with a fast New York Central train.

"Another refrigerator trainload of provisions from Chicago, over the Erie Railroad, was loaded Saturday onto the fast Cunard liner Caronia for Hamburg, Germany, and on the White Star liner Majestic, which also sailed Saturday noon."

This is simply an illustration to show that legislation—donations, gifts, aids, subsidies—such as proposed here will not solve our problem.

Our total exports and imports for this year are but little over one-third what they were in 1920. The world's trade pendulum will swing upward again, and there is no occasion to be stampeded into paying some people to relieve the Government of temporarily unsalable but very valuable property.

THE GOAL.

We must keep in mind the real and vital purpose of a merchant marine, namely, the preservation, development, and extension of American commerce overseas. We make a mistake to constantly think only in terms of the ship operator and his profits. Commerce is the main thing. While we are establishing new markets, new shipping lines, transportation may not be profitable purely as a business venture, particularly in times of depression and readjustment, we must expect to encounter discouragement and financial loss. That condition simply calls for constant prodigious effort. We will make national advancement and enrich American commerce beyond the seas by such effort and proper cooperation, resulting in the creation and maintenance of an American merchant marine. At the same time, while promoting foreign trade, we provide a fleet of vessels to meet national emergencies.

The kind of encouragement and support, and the ways and means of supplying it, as provided in this bill, would simply result in the unseemly spectacle of representatives of private enterprise crowding to the Capital from every quarter of the country, besieging the Shipping Board, vested with the vast powers provided in the bill, for a participation in governmental favors. It is inconceivable that such a spectacle should be tolerated.

"MO 4" CONTRACTS.

Operating losses are arising by reason of the falling off in international trade and the fact that the Government ships are being operated under what is known as the MO 4 contract, except only in the case of the United States Line, now under the management of Mr. Rossbottom for the Shipping Board.

This contract Mr. Lasker himself said in July, 1921, page 16 of the hearings before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations on the urgent deficiency bill, "is the most shameful piece of chicane, inefficiency, and of looting of the Public Treasury that the human mind can devise."

Further, he said, page 17:

"The minute that the world trade shows up at all, the minute it gets so that men may make money, we are going either to make them charter or buy these boats or take them away from them and give them to somebody who will charter or buy, and maybe while doing that we can get rid of some, but in the meantime we are under this MO 4 contract."

He promised also:

"If we have not fully succeeded in putting in our system, you can hurl it back to me when I come again in six months."

It has now been a year and a half since the promise to change that plan so strongly denounced by Mr. Lasker was made, and yet it is continued.

As to Government ships operated by companies in connection with their own, there would appear to be no justification for the plan—the MO 4 contract—and no escape from loss. It was condemned in the strongest language a year and a half ago, and yet it is continued in practice.

Operating losses have been reduced by tying up two-thirds of the ships and operating only one-third, approximately.

The problem is stated to be to relieve the Public Treasury of the drain of about $50,000,000 a year, estimated by those who heard the testimony before the joint committee to be about $36,000,000 instead. This is the chief plea for the subsidy which is erroneously stated to be about one-half that amount, in the face of itemized estimates by the board that it will amount to $52,000,000 a year, and while the direct subsidy may be limited to $30,000,000, the mail monopoly and other indirect aids will be very considerable. Instead of merely authorizing all moneys in the merchant marine fund to be appropriated the committee amendment (p. 24, line 7) permanently appropriates all such moneys, except the discretionary increases. There is therefore $30,000,000 a year actually and permanently appropriated in the way of direct subsidy, and the friends of the measure themselves can not definitely say what the various aids and benefits will aggregate.

These vast donations to shipowners will be added to terrific expenses of Shipping Board and Fleet Corporation. A few hundred of the best and only profit-producing ships of the fleet will be sold at about one-tenth their cost; the remainder will be on hand, tied up, or operated at a loss. Nothing will be gained, but enormous burdens will be added.

ALTERNATIVE.

The proper course is, the alternative, if you please, to stop this loss immediately by turning all the ships over to the highly successful Government-owned and Government-operated line, and the only one, except the United States Line, lately established in the trans-Atlantic business, the Panama Steamship Co., or both that company and the only other Government-owned and operated line, the United States Line, or else care for and operate them directly, properly, and efficiently, as conditions require. Not only would the loss be stopped, but the ships employed would be operated at a profit, as are the ships now being operated by these two Government steamship companies.

AMERICAN SHIPPING.

The rash claim is made that American shipping can not exist, that private shipowners can not finance themselves, without a subsidy.

The answer is, there is to-day a greater privately owned tonnage under the American flag than there ever has been in the whole history of our country at any previous time.

On November 1, 1922, there were 1,900 privately owned ships of 500 gross tons or over, and the total tonnage of these ships is 5,797,925 gross tons—approximately 8,500,000 dead-weight tons. They are being operated by some 76 ship-owning corporations, under the American flag, without any subsidy, and new ships are being constantly added.

At least 16 American companies are operating ships under the American flag, successfully and profitably, to foreign countries, in competition with foreign-flag ships, without a subsidy.

The effect of a subsidy will be not to create but to retard the proper and permanent development of an American merchant marine. The subsidy proposed will be at best a premium on inefficiency.

Subsidy never created, established, or maintained permanently a merchant marine in any country. It has proven either an unimportant or a positively harmful factor wherever tried.

Some 14 companies owning ships for their own requirements primarily, carrying their own goods, capitalized at $5,046,000,000, will receive compensation and benefits under this bill, running into millions. Its provisions are indefensible and monstrous as it was reported, and the amendments agreed to and those now proposed still leave the principle asserted and an unwise policy established and the tax of millions each year for 15 years fixed and certain.

GETTING RID OF THE SHIPPING BOARD.

One avowed object of this measure is to put the Shipping Board out of business.

We submit it is not in the public interest to dispense with a Government agency of this character.

Whether all the ships are privately owned, or whether some are so owned, and some are owned by the Government—in any case we shall need some governmental agency to deal with the question of rates at which American commerce shall be carried. If this measure is passed and results in the elimination of the Shipping Board, as its friends intend and expect, American commerce will be at the mercy of the lines running and operating the ships, even though they fly our flag. Conference agreements will determine the rates of freight, as well as passenger traffic. There would be no control with reference to the routes upon which steamship lines would be established.

These questions of rates and routes, together with questions of discrimination, classification, insurance, and such other regulatory powers as will favor the development of American trade in foreign lands and facilitate the movement of our surplus products overseas are matters which clearly should be within the supervision and control of the Government. Unless the ocean freight rates are kept just and reasonable it avails us little to have our flag on the ships.

For these reasons an effort to dispense with the Shipping Board and close up its affairs should not prevail unless some substitute is provided.

This, of course, is predicated upon the theory that such a board will perform its full duty, conscientiously and intelligently.

The bill should not pass.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the following order. One Senator especially has stated to me that he would like to have four or five hundred copies of the bill to send out to his constituents, and he also stated that several other Senators would like to do the same thing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed order.

The order was read and agreed to as follows:

Ordered, That 5,000 copies of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes, be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I had intended to go on this afternoon and finish my statement with reference to the bill, but several Senators have asked me not to do that until to-morrow. Therefore I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were opened, and the Senate (at 4 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 12, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 11, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, bless abundantly the Congress assembled and let the unifying principle be founded upon the moral forces of justice and righteousness. Upon the work of this day let Thy benediction rest. May the knowledge that we have of Thee be so directed that we shall go on to greater virtue, to finer fortitude, to better aspiration, and to utmost endeavor for our country's sake. Everywhere promote mutual confidence among men, and may no great destructive power be allowed to spread its dark shadows over humanity. By faith, by hope, and by love may we hold on to Thee and the best that is in the world. Through Christ. Amen.

PENSIONS.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I endeavored to have the bill (S. 3275) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Mexican Wars, and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers and sailors, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows, sent to conference. At that time the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] made an objection, but after conference with him I understand that he does not now wish to object further. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 3275 be taken from the Speaker's table, and that the House further insist on the amendments of the House and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3275) granting pensions and increase of pension to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Mexican Wars, and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers and sailors, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FULLER] one day last week asked unanimous consent to take this bill from the Speaker's table and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. I objected because I wanted time to compare the Senate bill and the House bill. Since then I have had that time, and I find, according to my judgment and my viewpoint, that there are some very objectionable features in both bills, but as far as I am able to figure, the House bill, if passed without amendment in lieu of the Senate bill, would probably entail a larger charge upon the Treasury than the Senate bill would, and for that reason I think that almost any kind of an agreement reached in conference would be an improvement probably over either one of the bills, and I have decided not to insist upon my objection, because if the Senate should adopt the House bill I think it would probably entail a larger charge upon the Treasury than the Senate bill would.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman about the provision that was stricken out of the bill relative to certain Indian wars and ranger service. What about that provision?

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, the only reason why that was stricken by the Committee on Invalid Pensions is that it is a matter over which that committee has never assumed any jurisdiction. It is one that belongs to the Committee on Pensions. There is a bill now pending there to the same effect.

Mr. BLANTON. I am receiving a good many letters from ex-rangers and Indian service men from all over the West, asking about that provision.

Mr. FULLER. I understand the Senate insists on reinserting them.

Mr. BLANTON. Unless something is done for the rangers and Indian service men, and done soon, it will be too late. I hope the gentleman will not object to the inclusion of those in the bill.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. As I understand the difference between the two bills, so far as the widows are concerned, the Senate bill provides that the widows of Union soldiers shall be eligible to pensions down to the date of the enactment of the bill, and your bill takes it down to 1917?

Mr. FULLER. To 1915.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I should like to know whether we are going to have a right to pass upon that question before the gentleman and the other House conferees agree to that provision of the Senate bill.

Mr. FULLER. I will say to the gentleman that there can be no possible agreement upon that provision in the Senate bill.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The gentleman assures the House of that?

Mr. FULLER. I am very sure of it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. FULLER, Mr. LANGLEY, and Mr. RUCKER.

BILLS STRICKEN FROM CALENDAR.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have stricken from the calendar of the House certain bills that have already passed and become law, but which are still on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to strike from the calendar certain bills.

Mr. SNYDER. The bills are S. 2532, S. 902, S. 2211, S. J. Res. 59, and H. R. 7426.

The SPEAKER. Have they all been acted on?

Mr. SNYDER. They have all been acted on.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CARTER. Reserving the right to object, what disposition has been made of these bills?

Mr. SNYDER. All these bills passed through the House in an omnibus measure that passed the House and then passed the Senate in the final days of the previous session.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RICARDO FLORES MAGON.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. We are going into Committee of the Whole on an appropriation bill and there will be general debate for two or three hours. I do not understand just why the gentleman should go ahead now in the House and get 10 minutes when he can get it as soon as we go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I will say to the gentleman that it is necessary that I should be absent from the House for a part of the day on account of official duties, and I have a matter in which I believe the House is very much interested, and under the circumstances I should like to address the House at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Speaker, yesterday there was held in the city of Washington a so-called free speech and amnesty meeting in memory of Ricardo Flores Magon, a so-called political prisoner who died in Leavenworth prison on November 21, 1922. The following announcement of this meeting was circulated:

Mrs. WINNIFRED MASON HUCK, Member of Congress from Illinois; Dr. John A. Ryan, of the Catholic University; Mrs. Harriot Stanton Blatch, of New York; and Mr. Robert Morss Lovett, editor of the New Republic, will speak on free speech and amnesty at a meeting held in memory of Ricardo Flores Magon, political prisoner, who died in Leavenworth prison November 21, 1922. You are invited to attend the meeting at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon, December 10, Shubert-Garrick Theater, Seventh and F Streets NW.

I believe that in the interest of the facts in regard to Ricardo Flores Magon the House and the people of this country should have some knowledge of the record of Magon and of the offenses for which he was convicted.

No one questions the right of American citizens to gather together peacefully and hold meetings in the interest of anyone or in the memory of anyone they please; but in a notice which was sent out to the Members of this House under date of December 6, 1922, which I desire to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, certain very misleading statements, to say the least, were submitted in regard to the crimes for which Flores Magon was incarcerated and regarding the testimony and the methods which were used in his prosecution.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINEBERGER. Briefly.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I think it is quite probable that a good many of the Members did not receive this notice. I did not, and I would be very glad to have it read.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I will read the notice:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 6, 1922.

To the Members of the Congress of the United States:

You are cordially invited to attend a meeting in memory of Ricardo Flores Magon, a political prisoner, who died in Leavenworth, November 21, 1922.

Magon, who was the editor of a paper in Los Angeles, was arrested in 1918 for publishing an article in which he set forth his views on war and pleaded for the brotherhood of man. For this he was sentenced to 21 years' imprisonment in Leavenworth.

The New York World, commenting upon his death on Friday, November 24, said: "In reality the article for which Magon was convicted had no bearing on the war with Germany except what was read into it by the prosecution. That, of course, was not unusual. In the heyday of witch burners and unofficial spies Magon was only one of the victims."

The failing health of Magon was well known to the Department of Justice. His case was placed before them many times, and they had been told in a physician's report that he must eventually lose his sight, which was fast failing. In spite of this knowledge, Attorney General Daugherty refused to release him upon the grounds that he was "unrepentant."

The liberty-loving people of this country should give notice in some way to the world that they have had no part in this shameful act of officials intrusted with authority which all the records show they have abused.

As a Member of the Congress of the United States to whom the whole earth now looks for guidance out of the wilderness of world-wide misery you are invited to attend a meeting in honor of Magon and thus be able to show by your presence that you have had no part in bringing this blot on the fair name of a country dedicated from its foundation to the cause of freedom.

This meeting is called by citizens of many political and religious beliefs, bound by a desire to show the world that they continue to cherish the traditions of liberty, and that the persecution of Magon and other political prisoners was not the act of our people but of those intrusted for a very little day with authority.

You will doubtless welcome this opportunity to show that our love of liberty is not just a glorious tradition but a living principle to be honored through maintaining liberty of speech and conscience in our own day and generation.

Following this is the statement that this meeting is indorsed by a committee, of which the chairman is Mrs. Abby Scott Baker, and among the names appear those of 8 or 10 Members of Congress.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman please read them?

Mr. LINEBERGER. I will read all the names:

Mrs. Abby Scott Baker, chairman; Mr. Dean Acheson, Hon. J. D. Beck, Mr. Jose Miguel Begarano, Mrs. Ethel S. Cohen, Mrs. Wilbur F. Dales, Mrs. Gilson Gardner, Miss Edith Goode, Mr. Frederic C. Howe, Hon. George Huddleston, Mr. William H. Johnston, Hon. Oscar Keller, Hon. Charles L. Knight, Hon. Florian Lampert, Hon. W. Turner Logan, Mr. Lowell Mellett, Mrs. William Spencer Murray, Hon. John M. Nelson, Mrs. George Odell, Mrs. Nanette Paul, Hon. Joseph C. Pringey, Mrs. Charles Edward Russell, Dr. John A. Ryan, Hon. J. H. Sinclair, Hon. Edward Voigt, and Mrs. Laura Williams.

Now, gentlemen of the House, in order that the record may be clear, and in order that the people of this country may know something of the facts in the matter, I desire to read into the record a statement, for which I will assume full responsibility, and for which I want to say to you that I have consulted the Department of Justice, which department can substantiate the statements contained therein, and I propose to submit to the House at a later date copies of official records existing in the Department of Justice and the Federal courts of southern California bearing on this case. The facts are substantially as follows:

Ricardo Flores Magon was a Mexican anarchist who was forced to leave Mexico and come to the United States in 1919. He was the author of the publication entitled "Carranza se Despoja de la Piel de Oveja," a rabid publication advocating the overthrow of government and the substitution of anarchy. Upon his exile from Mexico he came to the United States, where, together with his brother Enrique, he was connected with the publication of Regeneration at Los Angeles. In 1920 he was convicted of a violation of section 211 of the Criminal Code for printing an article in Regeneration tending to incite murder or assassination. He was sentenced to a term of 21 years in the penitentiary. Because of several previous convictions of a less anarchistic nature, he was given the severe sentence which the court imposed. He was also convicted on a count under the espionage act and sentenced to a term of 20 years in the Federal penitentiary at McNeil Island. He had been previously convicted on two occasions for anarchistic activities and sentenced for short terms. He commenced to serve his term at McNeil Island, but due to the climate was later transferred to Leavenworth, where he died in November of this year. Together with his brother, Enrique, he was the source of considerable trouble both in Mexico and in the United States and was looked upon as one of the most pronounced Mexican anarchists with whom this country has had to deal.

Gentlemen, no less a personage than the President of the United States, in the address which he delivered on the floor of the House on the 8th of December, had the following to say:

While I have everlasting faith in our Republic, it would be folly, indeed, to blind ourselves to our problems at home. Abusing the hospitality of our shores are the advocates of revolution, finding their deluded followers among those who take on the habiliments of an American without knowing an American soul. There is the recrudescence of hyphenated Americanism which we thought to have been stamped out when we committed the Nation, life and soul, to the World War.

Now, gentlemen, I am not here to accuse or to berate anybody; but when such a worthy organization as the American Defense Society takes up a matter of this kind, when the entire House of Representatives is circularized with such a letter as I have read to you to-day, I think it is time that we, as Members of this House and as American citizens, take cognizance of some of the things that are going on about us. I herewith insert an article appearing in this morning's issue of the Washington Post quoting the American Defense Society on the subject under discussion:

REBUKES SYMPATHY FOR WAR CONVICTS—DEFENSE SOCIETY POINTS OUT ALL WERE FOUND GUILTY OF CRIMES AGAINST LAWS—NOT "POLITICAL PRISONERS"—NO SUCH THING EXISTS IN AMERICA, SAYS STATEMENT—SOLDIER POISONERS ARE CITED.

[From the Washington Post, Monday, December 11, 1922.]

Denying that there are any "political prisoners" in the United States, a statement issued yesterday by the Washington bureau of the American Defense Society declares that every prisoner was duly convicted of a crime against the laws of the country.

"The so-called 'political prisoners,'" the statement continues, "were all convicted on substantially the same charges, in every case involving conspiracy against this Government.

LISTS CONSPIRACY CHARGES.

"The charges were in substance as follows:

"1. Conspiracy by force to prevent, hinder, and delay the execution of certain war-time legislation of the United States.

"2. Conspiracy to injure, oppress, threaten, and intimidate citizens of the United States in the exercise of a legal and constitutional right, to wit, to furnish the Government war munitions and supplies, etc.

"3. Conspiracy to obstruct the selective service act, otherwise known as the draft act, and cause desertion from the service of the United States in time of war.

"4. Conspiracy to violate the espionage act, to wit, to cause insubordination, disloyalty, and the refusal of military duty by personal aid, solicitation, public speeches, articles printed, and distribution of certain I. W. W. publications in violation of the espionage act."

CITES SOLDIER POISONERS.

The statement further declares that "among these criminals whose release is now sought by the communists here and in Russia and by such misguided persons as those ignorantly connected with amnesty drives are men who deliberately misdirected food supplies to be sent to American soldiers in France, who actually poisoned such foods when not misdirected intentionally, who set fires at plants engaged in the production of war materials, who placed bombs where they would explode and destroy property, and who burned or otherwise destroyed crops needed for the successful prosecution of the war."

CALLS THEM MURDERERS.

"The Joint Amnesty League," the statement continues, "Members of Congress, and others who are thus apologists for criminals should not be allowed to get away with the idea that these prisoners are languishing in jail simply because they violated the American right of free speech. They are murderers and destructionists, and the I. W. W's themselves have not had the hardihood to claim that they are illegally confined.

During the dark days of the war, when all patriotic men, women, and children under American skies were giving their all in order that the country might win the war, people such as Ricardo Flores Magon were seeking to obstruct our endeavors in winning that war.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I ask one minute more in order to conclude.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks one minute more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Ricardo Flores Magon during that time was publishing this paper of his, Regeneration, in Los Angeles, obstructing the draft, trying to get those Mexicans in this country who were of American citizenship to refuse to serve under the colors, and inciting them to return to Mexico and enlist themselves under the banner of Mexico with Germany in order to recover the so-called lost provinces of Mexico, to wit, California, Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona. So I hope that the patriotic membership of this House will give cognizance to some of the things that are going on about us, and I hope that the American people will read and know the facts in regard to this infamous Ricardo Flores Magon. [Applause.]

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It is the matter of the circular and the statement which the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER] has just made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see any question of personal privilege.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman from California read a circular and used in connection with it my name and that of other Members of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman think that that raises a question of personal privilege?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That circular in connection with the statement raises a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman think that the circular accuses the gentleman of improper conduct?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I think the circular in connection with statements made by the gentleman from California places Members of Congress whose names were used in a position which justifies them in making some defense.

The SPEAKER. That may be, but the Chair does not think it raises a question of personal privilege. The gentleman can probably get time——

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, Mr. Speaker, we are soon to take up an appropriation bill and the gentleman can get time in general debate.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I want to say what I have to say now, and I think the gentleman will find it desirable not to object at this time.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, let me say to the gentleman from Wyoming that I called attention to this when the gentleman from California asked for 10 minutes. I called attention to the fact that we were going into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on this bill and he could take 10 minutes in the general debate, but no one objected to his request, and now, it seems to me, the gentleman from Alabama ought to have 10 minutes as well.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, a number of names of gentlemen have been mentioned in connection with the letter, and if we give one time all will want time. We are to have some general debate, and gentlemen can be heard as well in that general debate as now.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I am willing to give way now to anybody else that wishes to discuss the matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama to proceed for 10 minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I did not sign the circular that has been read nor was I asked to sign anything. The matter was mentioned to me by a lady who explained that she and some other persons desired to hold a memorial meeting and that Magon was one of those who had been convicted merely for expressing an opinion in violation of the espionage act. The statement was further made that in order to enable them to get a hall in which to hold the meeting it was necessary that some persons of responsibility should allow their names to be used, and to the end that it might not appear that the meeting was being held by a lot of extremists I consented that my name might be used.

I did not attend the meeting. I do not know who was there. I was informed that it was the purpose of certain Members of Congress to address the meeting, and I presume they did so.

I have no personal knowledge of the case of this man Magon. I assumed that it was similar to the cases of other men who are being held in prison for having expressed their sentiments during the war. Their sentiments did not meet with my approval. I did not share in them. It may be that they were foolish, it may be that they were wicked, nevertheless I have no hesitation in saying that the war is now over, and now that every civilized country in the world has released its political prisoners I see no reason why the United States should lag in the rear and appear the most tyrannical of all peoples.

Mr. MONDELL. From what standpoint does the gentleman refer to these men as political prisoners?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. As men who were not in accord with the purposes of their Government during the war. They expressed themselves against the espionage act and conscription and criticized various other harsh and oppressive measures which the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] rejoiced to support during the war.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. No. I have only a short time; I can not yield.

The gentleman from California shows the poverty of his case by undertaking to say what this man Magon did in Mexico while a citizen of that country.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Will the gentleman yield? I hope the gentleman will not misquote me.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman from California said that this man had been engaged in publishing an anarchistic paper in Mexico. He retailed hearsay charges as to what Magon had done before he came to the United States.

Mr. LINEBERGER. And also in Los Angeles.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Why did the gentleman charge Magon with violating the laws of Mexico if he had a good case against him in this country? Why did not the gentleman confine himself to the acts of Magon in this country?

Mr. LINEBERGER. I wanted to show that he was an anarchist.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. No; the gentleman was trying to prejudice the public against Magon, who is now dead and can not answer him and to embarrass Members of Congress who allowed their names to be used to get a meeting in Magon's memory. That is the reason the gentleman brought in this hearsay and extraneous matter. He sought to blacken Magon's name, to damn the dead man so as to discredit those who countenanced the meeting so that all others might be intimidated from taking a part in similar meetings.

No, there was no purpose to deal fairly. If this man committed an offense against the United States as the gentleman from California wants to make it appear that he did, why did he not produce and read the disloyal or anarchistic article Magon was charged with publishing and let it speak for itself? Why did not the gentleman produce the indictment against him? Why did he not confine himself to the facts contained in the record? The gentleman has obtained leave to extend his remarks—he has plenty of time in which to get the papers. I now challenge the gentleman to put in the RECORD in his extension of remarks the article which Magon is said to have published. If he wants to be fair he can not fail to do so.

I would like to see the indictment against the man. I know nothing about the facts in Magon's case, and it may be that everything the gentleman from California tries to make you believe is true. But he contents himself with generalities, vague charges, and calling Magon names. I demand the facts.

It may be proper for us to put a man in the penitentiary and leave him to die there because he was an anarchist while in Mexico. It may be more proper to put a man in the penitentiary for having expressed certain sentiments in this country. But it seems to me that those who believe it is right for men to be put in jail for expressing their opinions need to go back and read the first amendment to the Constitution before they begin to pose as super-Americans and patriots. This is a time of peace. Men ought not now be in jail merely because they did not agree with the majority during the war.

Some of the superpatriots of this country, some of the "unco guid," were themselves guilty of excesses during the war. There were many of them who took occasion to rob our Government and profiteer on our people during that time of distress. Let us prosecute them and put them in the penitentiary, and not confine ourselves merely to prosecuting men who did not happen to think we had sufficient cause to go to war or that we ought not to have passed certain harsh and oppressive laws in connection with carrying on the war.

No, Mr. Speaker, the very ones who are most bitter and vituperative against those who expressed their opinions of dissent from the majority are the chiefest defenders of the Attorney General who has failed to prosecute the grafting war contractors.

Mr. MURPHY. The gentleman's party was in power for years and did not put any of these men in jail; you knew them better than we know them.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MURPHY] assumes that we know the war contractors and profiteers better than Mr. Daugherty does, I have only to say that he pays a very high compliment to our acquaintance with the criminal classes.

But I am not defending the past administration for whatever, if anything, it may have done or failed to do. This is not a partisan matter, it is a matter of whether we believe that honesty should rule our affairs and whether we should have men in the Department of Justice who would prosecute those who robbed their country and did it infinitely greater injury than some humble and obscure fellow who merely expressed an opinion. [Applause.]

Mr. TINCHER. Is it not true that this man was sentenced to deportation, and that Acting Secretary Post refused to deport him and extended to him the charity of an American prison because his own country would take his life if he had been deported? [Applause.]

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I am not acquainted with the facts.

Mr. TINCHER. That is the fact.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I am not acquainted with the facts, but I do say this, that any government which, merely for the expression of opinion, would deport a man to a country where his life would be forfeited, would deserve the contempt of civilization.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that under the law, as it stands to-day, when a man is convicted he can not be deported until after his sentence is carried out?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I am not interested in legal technicalities. I am concerned about the principles of humanity and good government.

Here are about 60 cases of men who are still in prison, not for spying, not for disloyalty, not for aiding the enemy, but for expressing opinions against war or conscription or otherwise dissenting from the majority. I do not know whether the Magon case is a fair sample or not—I know nothing about the particular facts in his case. I rest my judgment upon the cases of the other men who are in prison, and as a citizen who loves the fair name of his country I demand that their prison doors be opened. It can not be said that they took any active part against our Government, that they did anything more than simply to say something which tended to obstruct conscription or to question the motives or conduct of some of those in authority.

I like to think of America as a land of free men—of liberty of conscience and opinion. I would rescue her from the stigma of holding men in prison four long years after the war merely for the utterance of a few ill-considered words. Others may have taken an active part against the war, but these men are not even so accused; they merely expressed their opinions; and they are yet in jail. And all the while war profiteers, crooked war contractors, and grafters run freely at large.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman has been so persistent that I yield to him.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

DEPARTMENTS OF STATE AND JUSTICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13232) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes. Pending that I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to three hours, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to three hours, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Colorado. Is there objection?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, that is agreeable to me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13232.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13232, with Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, this is the bill covering all general appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice, including the foreign service and the judiciary. Last year the total appropriation carried for both these departments was $28,676,921. This year the bill carries appropriations exceeding that amount by about four and a half million dollars, due to the fact that we did not carry in the bill last year the $5,000,000 payment to Colombia. Eliminating that payment, therefore, our appropriations for this year are a little over $500,000 less than the appropriations for last year. There is only one important change made in the items for the State Department proper. We have here assembled for the first time all of the printing and binding items, which amount in the total to $160,750, and we expect thereby to effect a considerable saving. We have reduced the item for post allowances to diplomatic and consular offices, which is a mere increase of compensation. We hoped to wipe it out entirely, but it did not seem to the committee just to bring about a greater reduction under present conditions. In many cases the cost of living is still greatly affected by the rate of exchange.

I am glad to report that the boundary-line work between Alaska and Canada and between the United States and Canada, which has been dragging along for many years, is completed, so far as the field work is concerned, and that the official in charge of that work has more than kept his word with the subcommittee. He told us last year that he would do it if we gave him the requisite funds.

But from the general history of such matters possibly some of us had our doubts about it. It is completed and there is nothing now left to be done but the work of compiling field notes and making the maps and arranging for their publication.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. I will.

Mr. TILSON. Have the boundaries been marked and the monuments set up?

Mr. HUSTED. The actual physical boundaries have been set up and the work on the boundary line of every name and nature has been fully completed.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes, sir.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I notice at the bottom of page 37 an appropriation for assistants to the Attorney General, in special cases, including an appropriation of $50,000 for clerical help for such assistants.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentlemn yield?

Mr. HUSTED. I will.

Mr. LINTHICUM. On page 15 I notice the International Boundary Commission for the United States and Mexico.

Mr. HUSTED. Yes, sir.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I notice you have an appropriation here of $30,713.50. Is not that increased again? We had reduced that appropriation very largely, I believe to $5,000.

Mr. HUSTED. Yes, sir; we had reduced it; but since then they have appointed a commissioner, and he is now cooperating with the Mexican commissioner, and while they are not authorized to make definite decisions, still they can accomplish a great deal by coming to informal agreements. The Mexican commissioner's status is a little different from ours. He can have his action immediately ratified by the Mexican Government, but our commissioner's status is somewhat different.

Mr. LINTHICUM. What can our commissioner do under the present status of affairs with Mexico?

Mr. HUSTED. He can do a great deal. The course of that river is constantly changing, and there are many points seriously affected; one of them is El Paso.

Mr. LINTHICUM. That has been for some 20 years——

Mr. HUSTED. The situation there at the present time is serious and some action will have to be taken.

Mr. LINTHICUM. What can be accomplished under the present status between the United States and Mexico; what can our commissioner do?

Mr. HUSTED. He can do this: He can arrange for the measuring of the water and for making the necessary surveys, and he can meet with the Mexican commissioner and discuss these different situations that come up on the river and have stenographic notes taken of the facts in each case to be kept for future action.

Mr. EVANS. If the gentleman will permit, there are constant disputes arising between claimants who reside in Mexico and those who reside in the United States because of the constant change of water, and those disputes become quite acute, and by reason of tentative agreements arrived at by the commissioner appointed by Mexico and the commissioner appointed by the United States they have been enabled to have these citizens agree rather than quarrel and create still worse conditions.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I know that the appropriation got very large and then Congress cut it down and finally got rid of the commissioner until some arrangement could be made with Mexico and the United States as to the use of water. They can measure that water without any commissioner, so what can be accomplished? Now the subcommittee has been very active in reducing this appropriation and wisely so, but this old Mexican sore has been in evidence very long, and this Congress has been fighting this appropriation, and I can not see why this subcommittee is willing for the $30,000 appropriation.

Mr. HUSTED. Well, that amount was retained at the solicitation of the Secretary himself. He said it was necessary; that this amount was needed, and that a larger amount was really required to do the work which should be done for the preservation of American property interests on that river.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Some time ago General Mills, a retired Army officer, was appointed. He served and was paid through the War Department. I can not understand why we should embark on this Mexican situation again. It is very expensive.

Mr. HUSTED. Well, the appropriation is not a very large one.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. I will.

Mr. ROGERS. I note there has been appointed to represent the United States in the matter of the German claims certain officials, a commissioner, counsel, and so forth. Has there been any provision made in this bill for the payment of salary and expenses of these officers?

Mr. HUSTED. No, sir; they are not to be carried in this bill at all, as I understand it.

Mr. ROGERS. This would seem to be the place to carry them, in view of the fact that we appropriate for the International Boundary Commission with Great Britain in this bill.

Mr. HUSTED. No provision whatever has been made.

Mr. ROGERS. And none asked for?

Mr. HUSTED. None asked for and none made.

Mr. ROGERS. Does the gentleman know in what bill there will be a provision carried?

Mr. HUSTED. I do not know.

Mr. ROGERS. The officials are functioning and arguing cases, and I suppose it would be natural for them to know where the money was going to come from.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Certainly.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to page 11 under the heading "Expenses, passport control act." How does that item of $259,500 compare with the appropriation for the present year?

Mr. HUSTED. It is about $90,000 less than the amount carried in the present law.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. There has been a great deal of congestion in some of the various consular offices, and my own files show that a great deal of attention is being given to these matters. I was wondering why the appropriation is so much less this year than in preceding years—the reason for it.

Mr. HUSTED. This is not the only fund that is drawn upon to cover passport expenses. We think we have made ample provision in the different funds to meet all the necessary expenses.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Did the information presented to the committee by the Department of State indicate that they were going to be less busy in the next fiscal year in these matters than they have been in the present year or were in the preceding year?

Mr. HUSTED. Well, they are better organized now than they were a year ago, and they can accomplish the same amount of work for less money.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Can the gentleman tell me whether the amount provided for in this bill is substantially the same as the amount provided for in the Budget?

Mr. HUSTED. It is exactly the same as the Budget figures.

Mr. EVANS. You will find it on page 47 of the hearings.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HUSTED. We think we have made ample provision.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes, sir.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I notice at the bottom of page 31, in the appropriation for the investigation and prosecution of war frauds, an appropriation of $500,000.

Mr. HUSTED. Yes, sir.

Mr. KINCHELOE. And then at the bottom of page 37, "For assistants to the Attorney General and to the United States district attorneys employed by the Attorney General to aid in special cases," an appropriation of $850,000. I presume that is for the same purpose. There you will notice an approriation of $850,000.

Mr. HUSTED. Yes, sir.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Are these apropriations in addition to the $500,000 that the Congress appropriated for the Attorney General at the last session?

Mr. HUSTED. Last year we did not carry any specific amount for the prosecution of war frauds, but $500,000 was provided later in one of the deficiency bills.

Mr. KINCHELOE. How many special attorneys are now employed in this special investigation by the Attorney General?

Mr. HUSTED. Thirty, and they are all paid out of that specific $500,000 fund.

Mr. KINCHELOE. How much salary do they draw?

Mr. HUSTED. I think the highest-paid attorney gets about $7,500.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Are not about nine drawing $10,000 each?

Mr. HUSTED. We have a list of them here, stating just exactly what they get. I shall be glad to give the gentleman their names and the amount of salary paid.

Mr. KINCHELOE. What is the highest amount paid any special attorney, and how many of them are receiving that amount?

Mr. HUSTED. I think the highest-paid attorney in the Department of Justice receives $12,000.

Mr. KINCHELOE. How many of them are receiving $10,000?

Mr. HUSTED. Very few. There are just 30 attorneys employed in this special work of investigating and prosecuting war frauds.

Mr. KINCHELOE. That is under the $500,000 appropriation?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes; that is under the $500,000 appropriation.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Can the gentleman give the committee any idea of what the total salaries of the 30 are?

Mr. HUSTED. We have got the evidence here somewhere in the hearings. I will look it up and let you know later.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Does the gentleman know how many additional attorneys are contemplated to be employed under this $850,000 appropriation?

Mr. HUSTED. I do not think they have increased the number of attorneys at all except for this special work of investigating and prosecuting these war frauds.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Is it not a fact that one of the chief accountants under the $500,000 appropriation is now drawing $18,000?

Mr. HUSTED. That is a very highly paid man. He is not a lawyer; he is an accountant.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Now, if the gentleman will permit, I would like to ask him if he knows what progress is being made under the $500,000 appropriation, and how many men have been indicted, and how many have been sent to the penitentiary?

Mr. HUSTED. I do not think anybody has been sent to the penitentiary. They were not organized for the work until the month of August last. They have passed on to United States attorneys a great many cases for prosecution.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Has anyone except one man been indicted?

Mr. HUSTED. I do not know how many have been indicted, but I do know that about three hundred and some odd cases are in course of active prosecution.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Are those criminal cases?

Mr. HUSTED. Criminal and civil; and I know that at least $150,000 have already been covered into the Treasury which was recovered in one of these cases.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. In preparing the bill, in so far as it pertains to the State Department, did the committee give any consideration to the matter of——

Mr. KINCHELOE. Before the gentleman goes into that matter I just wanted to make this observation: I remember when these investigating committees, created in the Sixty-sixth Congress, had finally made their reports they said there was plenty of ground and plenty of evidence to send many war profiteers to the penitentiary, but that the reason why they had not been sent was because the then Attorney General, Mr. Palmer, would not do it; but when Mr. Daugherty came in there would be an immediate and vigorous prosecution; that the prosecutions would go on vigorously and those gentlemen would be sent to the penitentiary.

The fact is that there was not even a dollar asked to be appropriated under this administration to prosecute anybody for these war frauds until the gentleman from South Dakota and the gentleman from Michigan undertook to impeach the Attorney General.

Mr. HUSTED. I do know this, sir, that since the $500,000 fund was provided and the force was organized for this work, the preparation of these cases has gone on with all reasonable speed. They have examined and acted upon some 450 cases, over 250 of which have been placed in the hands of United States attorneys for prosecution.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Is it not true that we are almost certain to be disappointed in the amount of money that may be returned, because these people have acted under contracts that were made, under which these exorbitant profits were produced?

Mr. HUSTED. That may be true. The claims already investigated by the advisory council and passed upon for prosecution amount to over $100,000,000.

Mr. FESS. If the gentleman please, I know of one case in Ohio where they are undertaking to set aside a contract for cost-plus, and if that can be set aside there will be an immense amount of money recovered, but if it is not set aside, then the tremendous amount of profiteering was under a contract, so that we have no ability to recover.

Mr. HUSTED. That may be.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Does the gentleman from Ohio know of any probability of anybody going to the penitentiary under the administration of the present Attorney General?

Mr. FESS. If fraud can be established I hope they will go.

Mr. KINCHELOE. So do I.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does not the gentleman think the Government officials who made these contracts are just as culpable as the men who profiteered under them?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I do, and I do not care whether they are Democrats or Republicans. I know we have appropriated hundreds of thousands of dollars for their prosecution, and for my part, I would just as soon see a Democrat sent to the penitentiary as a Republican, if he has been guilty of fraud.

Mr. HUSTED. I think the gentleman is unjust when he intimates that nothing has been done. There have been 32 criminal indictments found, and 284 cases have been passed upon, which involved a tremendous amount of work. If I thought this business had not gone forward properly, I would be free to say so. It has gone forward properly since we provided money for the purpose, and I have not seen the slightest evidence of any disposition to delay.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I have no doubt the gentleman is honest in what he says. The point I am making is that there has not been anything done.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is it not true that before the present administration came in probably 85 per cent of the documentary evidence upon which convictions could be had was destroyed, making prosecutions impossible in many cases?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Where did the gentleman get that information?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Where does the gentleman get any such information as that?

Mr. KNUTSON. It is absolutely true. There are whole files missing down in the Department of Justice—that were taken out of the files before March 4, 1921.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman has made a definite statement. Where is his evidence?

Mr. KNUTSON. I make that statement upon my responsibility as a Member of this House.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman makes the statement, but he does not give any information.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. HUSTED. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. Besides the only final judgment which has been secured through the efforts and instrumentality of our former colleague from Nebraska, Mr. Reavis, who is doing splendid work, has there been any other final judgment obtained against these men, either criminal or civil?

Mr. HUSTED. I think the gentleman is a lawyer, and I have already stated that the money for this purpose was not furnished to the Department of Justice and the force was not organized until the month of August, 1922. They have had charge of this work only four months.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the gentleman can not tell us of any other final judgment than the one secured by Mr. Reavis?

Mr. HUSTED. I told the gentleman that they have passed on 284 cases and put them in the hands of United States attorneys for active prosecution.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, they are pending?

Mr. HUSTED. And they have found 32 indictments.

Mr. BLANTON. And they are pending?

Mr. HUSTED. And they have recovered at least $150,000 in money which has been covered into the Treasury.

Mr. BLANTON. Just one other question. Besides this salary of $18,000 a year that the chief accountant gets, how many other parties are employed at salaries greater than $7,500 a year?

Mr. HUSTED. Very few, if any. I will give the gentleman all that information under the five-minute rule, when the item comes up.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman put a statement of that in his remarks in the RECORD?

Mr. HUSTED. I will give it to the gentleman under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman give their names and the salaries that they draw respectively?

Mr. KNUTSON. That is all in the hearings.

Mr. BLANTON. No; not all of it; not the answer to the question I have asked.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. I will secure the names of the attorneys and the salaries paid, and give the gentleman the information he desires.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not object to the salary drawn by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Reavis]. He is earning every cent of it, because, as I said before, he is doing splendid work, and I wish all of them were doing as good work as he is.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman made the statement a few minutes ago that 85 per cent of the testimony has been destroyed.

Mr. KNUTSON. I said probably.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will accept the gentleman's amendment. He said that probably 85 per cent of the testimony that had been collected in connection with these war frauds had been destroyed and taken from the files of the Department of Justice, which, if true, constitutes in itself a crime on the part of the persons responsible for such action. I want to ask the gentleman from New York if he has any information of that kind.

Mr. HUSTED. I have no information on the subject.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does any Member of Congress outside the gentleman from Minnesota have any knowledge of the subject?

Mr. KNUTSON. Let me say the gentleman misquoted me. I did not say that the evidence collected had been destroyed. I said that documents pertaining to the different contracts had been removed from the files of the Department of Justice prior to March 4, 1921, so that special investigators in pursuit of certain cases were left in a blind alley, and could not proceed any further for the want of testimony which has been surreptitiously extracted from the record.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Then my statement was correct, because documents constitute evidence. I want to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question. He has made these assertions charging against some one, making a charge against some official, whether Democrat or Republican, and I want the gentleman to tell the House and the country from whom he gets his information.

Mr. KNUTSON. I have never quoted anyone unless I had authority to do so, but I got it from a very good authority.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman think that as a Member of Congress, having made that sort of a charge, the Department of Justice and the country and Congress are entitled to the names of the persons from whom he got it?

Mr. KNUTSON. The statement was made to me in the presence of other Members, and there were at least two Democratic Members present at the time.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman has brought his charge on the floor of the House——

Mr. KNUTSON. I just made a plain statement.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And I regard it as the duty of the gentleman to give the name of his informant.

Mr. KNUTSON. I do not know the people who did it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I say the name of the person who gave the gentleman the information.

Mr. KNUTSON. It came from a very high official.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Who was it?

Mr. KNUTSON. I am not quoting people without authority to do so.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Then I submit that the gentleman ought not to make statements on the floor of the House impugning officials without he gives the authority from whom he gets it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I make a suggestion to the gentleman from Tennessee, namely, to request the gentleman from Minnesota to mention one single case in which this thing has happened—he need not mention the person from whom he got the information, but mention a case in which the department has been embarrassed by the loss or destruction of evidence in the manner stated.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. FESS.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time under general debate because the first part of the bill is devoted to the Department of State. I want to call the attention of the members of the committee to some of the serious problems that were inherited from the war that had to be taken up by the State Department, and then to make a brief statement, as I see it, of the accomplishments of that department of the Government.

You all recall that the first great problem that the administration had to deal with was an adjustment of the difficulty arising from the relationship with our enemy country because we had not achieved peace, and the first problem was after the restoration of peace the resumption of diplomatic and trade relations. These after-war problems were carried on largely through diplomatic channels.

Then, in addition to that, were involvements with our former associate countries that grew out of the mandate power in the Versailles treaty. Two of those countries, very prominent, with which differences arose were Great Britain and Japan. The dispute with Great Britain grew out of the mandate touching Mesopotamia; that with Japan grew out of the mandate touching the Pacific islands, and especially the Yap Island. Secretary Colby had already taken up the question of Mesopotamia. His position was followed by Secretary Hughes in his wonderfully concise method of procedure, and I think all will agree that it has progressed to a finality without any loss of honor or prestige to our country.

However, the dispute with Japan was more delicate, because it involved the possibilities of our intervention in the development of the Pacific interests.

I will not take the time at this moment to indicate what I think are our possibilities in the Pacific other than to make the mere statement that in time when the oriental countries with their teeming millions and their industrial possibilites shall become what Japan has already become, the largest and most important channels of trade between the Orient and the Occident will go over the Pacific through the Panama Canal, rather than by way of the Straits Settlement, the Suez, and the Mediterranean, for reasons, I think, that will appear to all Members if they look into the possibilities in that future trade. Therefore it was very important that we should not lose our vantage position in that area; that we should hold our rights inviolate in the Pacific, especially in a dispute growing out of Yap Island. So the arms conference recently held here in the Capital, whose opening was somewhat delayed because of the scope of the discussion, finally included in the agenda the discussion of the Far East question as well as the limitation of armaments on the sea.

Members of the committee, we have had several world conferences, but no conference in the same length of time left such definite, far-reaching, and significant results as the one that was held here last year. These results plainly and simply expressed as I interpret them would be the limitation of armaments on the sea, the lessening of the chances for war, the reduction of the burdens of taxation due to war, the end of naval rivalry for all time, and an incident that is not usually viewed in its fullest significance—an agreement with Great Britain and Japan, that the British Navy, which heretofore was always conceded to be double the next largest navy, should not be larger than our own Navy, and that ours would be 40 per cent larger than that of Japan. Such in brief were the definite results on the original purpose of the conference. In addition to this achievement in the limitation of armaments, we also have definite results appertaining to the solution of the Far East problem. The most outstanding item in this program was the unanimous adoption by the nine powers in conference of the Magna Charta of China, in which China won in that short space of time more than she ever won in 500 years before.

In addition to that achievement there is the open-door policy, which was fostered by McKinley back in the unfortunate Boxer rebellion and is now agreed upon by the nine nations. This is primarily an American doctrine, in which our country led in 1900 and in 1921–22. Then there is the agreement to cancel the offensive Anglo-Japanese alliance that had existed for 20 years, a cancellation without offense to Japan and with the approval of Great Britain. In many respects this was supremely important and alone would be looked upon as a great achievement. We obtained our contention in respect to the island of Yap, and therefore have lost nothing along that line of the future development of channels of trade between the Orient and the Occident. Also there is the fulfillment of the agreement of the withdrawal of the troops of Japan from Siberia and China, and lastly, but of most importance to the peace of the Orient, we see the return of Shantung to China. The machinery was outlined to avoid war in the Pacific between the four great powers whose interests are found in that area. Measured by their possible significance, I believe those achievements to be as far-reaching as any ever conducted by the Secretary of State of any country. So much for our service to reduce the burdens of war and promote peace in the Orient.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman mentioned Mr. Colby in relation to the island of Yap.

Mr. FESS. No; in respect to Mesopotamia.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does not the gentleman think that Secretary Colby's idea in reference to the island of Yap, protesting against its being assigned to Japan, if it had been followed up, would have been better than to have allowed them to have the island and obtain a station there?

Mr. FESS. I think so, and that was one of the unfortunate outcomes of the Versailles treaty which the arms conference corrected. I mentioned Mr. Colby especially with reference to Mesopotamia, however. Then we have had some rather strained relations with some of our South American neighbors, especially with Colombia. That trouble has been adjusted by this administration. Members will recall the serious dispute for a time with Panama over her difference with Costa Rica in a boundary dispute, in which the United States had pointed the way to close it. Exercising a sort of suzerainty over Panama, we acted as umpire, and the two countries followed our advice. Then the settlement between Chile and Peru of a long-time contention, quite serious at times and a continuous source of concern between the countries, a settlement which largely took place in Washington, is of very far-reaching possibilities and regarded by the head of the State Department as of tremendous possibilities for better understandings. Then, in addition to that, there was recently a meeting here in Washington of representatives of the Central American countries looking to possible settlement of all disputes which may arise in the future without resort to war.

So much for our influence toward a better understanding between the countries of the Western Hemisphere.

While there may be a tendency in some circles to criticize the United States because of the position we assume at Lausanne, it strikes me that our position there is sound and to be approved. We can not very well close our eyes to the situation in the Near East. What we have done for peace in the Far East is very suggestive of what might be done in the Near East. The conference at Lausanne was not called by the United States and it is not meeting in the United States. Therefore we are not sponsor for it, but as an observer and a well-wisher of all the countries we prefer not to umpire their disputes, but at the same time we wish to be helpful. For that reason our Nation watches the trend of that conference.

Whether that position be subject to criticism I do not think it is. We are virtually leading that conference to-day, without any commitment whatever of our own country or without any interference whatever with the rights or prerogatives of the conference or any members of it. It is almost certain that the suggestions and recommendations of our country, unofficial as they are, will be the final decision of the Lausanne conference. It is not too much to believe that this influence as now exerted will be the determining factor in the adjustment of the difficult situation in the Near East.

There are two difficulties with which we are not yet through. One is with Mexico, and while it is not unpromising it is not yet finished. I believe that all unprejudiced minds that will look into the Mexican situation and recognize the position of our Government as expressed by the Secretary of State will admit that the way is open and the terms defined upon which that adjustment can be made, and so far as I can follow I think the United States is taking precisely the proper attitude on the Mexican situation. Mexico can find a recognition of her Government, in my judgment, as quickly as she is willing to recognize the rights of America, especially those rights that were possessed prior to 1917, when the present constitution took effect, and the rights which were due to an invitation of a prior Mexican Government, when these American citizens went in that country in response to an official invitation to develop the Mexican resources. I think we are right on this. I believe the administration, through the Department of State, has taken the only sound view of the matter.

The situation in Russia is serious. It seems to me not promising, but that is not because of any laxity on our part, that is not the subject of any criticism on the part of our State Department or of the present administration. Russia is in a rather hopeless situation—a country that a short time ago commanded the respect of the world, a country that was not long ago a rival of the Anglo-Saxon possibilities of the world, with now none so poor to do her reverence—a nation of 200,000,000, with all of the natural resources that America had 70 years ago, with a territory 7,000 miles in extent in the direction in which the sun travels, and 2,500 miles in the direction that the glacier moves, a contiguous territory of one-sixth of the inhabitable globe, with prospects were the way open for growth and development that none would put a limit upon, awaiting only a sound system of government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Under the present régime in Russia, which comprehends but a fraction, a very small proportion, of the population as the ruling element—and I do not want to be critical, and do not want to speak without information, as I am one of the last Members of the House that would attack without grounds—I say, under the present régime there is total disrespect for the sanctity of any kind of contract, the basis of all law and order, even the foundation of government; and our Government has taken the right position, I think, when it announces that until a different policy is pursued with respect to the validity and sanctity of a contract this Nation is not in a position to enter into any sort of international contractual relations with that country. It strikes me that that is the sound view, and the only salutary position for our country to take.

Mexico and Russia are the only two problems on our international horizon that have not yet been adjusted, so far as our foreign relations are concerned. But in each case the way is open and the terms are specified.

There is a problem yet in the Atlantic countries. What is to be the solution of that problem is still in doubt. The famous Frenchman who has just left our shores has concentrated the American mind on the problem of the western countries of Europe. I know what he would like to have us do, and I am certain that we will not do what he would like to have us do. At the same time, America stands always ready to perform her duty to the world, and we will now, as we always have done, perform that duty, but America will never permit any foreign country or any group of foreign countries to state to her what that duty is. We will define that duty ourselves.

I have no authority to say what I am now going to say, and I say it on my own responsibility. It is this: What we did for the Far East, what we are doing in the Near East, what we are this moment doing for Central and South America, may be a suggestion of what we will yet be able to do for the countries in western Europe. [Applause.] That does not mean the League of Nations, it does not mean a supergovernment, it does not mean that we will surrender our sovereignty or independence, but it may mean that we will yet be able to lead the public mind of western Europe in the way of peace that will not involve the loss of our sovereignty.

Take these two years of the direction of our foreign relations under the present administration, measured by the adjustment with our enemy countries, by the composure of the differences between us and our former associates, by the adjustment of disputes between our Government and several neutral countries, by the accomplishment of the arms conference in its Far East problems and the limitation of armaments, and by what we are now doing in the Near East—taking these into consideration as a measure of success, I think it will challenge the record of diplomacy anywhere in the world. I rose to make that statement while the bill providing for the appropriations for the Department of State is under consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss for a few minutes something relative to the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which is being pressed by the President, to prohibit the issuance of further tax-free securities. This agitation did not begin until the farm-loan system began to function and the bonds to procure the loans for the farmers of this country were being sold tax free over this country. We have had a tremendous amount of agitation against flooding the country with tax-free securities as the result.

The situation is this, that we are getting the money for the farmers and lending it to them at 6 per cent. The law as it originally was provided that they could not charge a farmer more than 1 per cent more than they paid on the bonds, and not exceeding 6 per cent. It became evident that we had to give a little higher rate, because the rate of 5 per cent represents the limitation as being the highest that could be paid. We had difficulty in selling them at 5 per cent. The result was that, at the request of the farm-loan system, we have amended it so that bonds can be now sold by them at 5½ per cent, and the farmer is charged 6 per cent, and the system is run on one-half of 1 per cent, and it is now running; but if you put a tax on the bond or a tax on the income derived from them you can see very easily you have got to elevate the rate to the farmer or you can not sell the bonds. Now, this is the thing I desire to refer to. The President made a considerable appeal on behalf of the farmer. He is exceedingly interested in their behalf, both in his first message and in his last message. Now, I want to call attention to one of the things that the farmer has been after, and that is to have a farmer member of the Federal Reserve Board. That law has been in existence since last May, and yet the President has not been able, being so interested in the farmer, to appoint a member yet. The financial problems for the coming year have been all staked out and the program arranged. I am inclined to think that this promise to the farmer is not being justified by the performance in so doing. This proposition to retire all tax-free securities is a proposition which will immediately and inevitably raise the rate on the farmers' mortgages that are being taken all over the country.

Mr. QUIN. What is the reason the President will not appoint a farmer member?

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not know what is his reason. It has been announced that he will appoint J. R. Howard, who is the only farmer in the United States who has announced that he was in favor of a ship subsidy bill.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. I deny that.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Mellon gave out the statement, and he is higher authority than the gentleman from New York. The proposition to make all State bond issues of every kind taxable by the National Government is simply a proposition to destroy, cripple, and limit the credit of the State and its subdivisions. You may say that is a rash statement. Let us see if it is. What does the President say about it? He says:

> Tax-exempt securities are drying up the sources of Federal taxation and encouraging unproductive and extravagant expenditures by States and municipalities.

In other words, the power of this Government is invoked by an amendment to the Constitution and by the taxing power to step in and regulate extravagant expenditures and unproductive expenditures of States and municipalities. In other words, when you want to build a schoolhouse in any school district in this country they propose to fix it so they will put a tax on the bonds issued for the purpose, because they are spending too much money on schoolhouses. If you want to build good roads and the county wants to issue bonds, they propose to put a tax on it, because, forsooth, the President says the States and municipalities are becoming extravagant.

It is just simply another effort to dehorn and to destroy the power of the State governments, and to do it by more dictation from Washington, as to what shall be spent in school districts, as to what shall be spent for roads, as to what shall be spent for courthouses, and as to what shall be spent for any internal improvements by the States.

Not only that, but he says there is more in it than a menace to the payment of the public debt; there is a dissipation of capital which should be made available to the needs of productive industry. That is the same cry that we have from the Secretary of the Treasury in his report just filed, in which he says we must reduce the surtaxes from 50 per cent to 25 per cent in order to have money to go into productive industry. It is the same old song in another key. Choke off the power of the States to finance their local affairs, to finance their public roads, to finance their schoolhouses. Choke it off by Federal legislation, in order that we may have more money with which to exploit the oil resources of this country and other countries wherever we may go.

And not only that, he says it will correct the growing menace of public borrowing. That is not merely to keep the sources of public income from drying up. It is a proposition boldly propounded by the President in this House in a message, in a solemn declaration well thought out, to put a curb on the power of any State or any of its subdivisions to borrow whenever it or any of its subdivisions sees fit to borrow and in such sums as they see fit.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. As a suggestion along the line which the gentleman is pursuing, the President nowhere in his message suggested that the Republican Party change its policy, which it has been pursuing for three years, of exempting the trading corporations and the shipowners from taxation, which will not require an amendment to the Federal Constitution; but the whole program is to undertake Federal legislation to control and stop the issuance of bonds by States and municipalities and school districts.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes. That is a very proper statement. The very bill we had here before us, backed by the administration, the ship subsidy bill, is intended to further increase the enormous sources of income which are to be exempted from Federal taxation. But there is another proposition. To-day there are $40,000,000,000 of these outstanding securities; $25,000,000,000 on United States issues which the Congress could have taxed already and only $15,000,000,000 on State issues; they are owned largely by people who are wealthy. Leave them alone and begin to tax those securities that are issued hereafter. What is the result? The $40,000,000,000 bonds outstanding, that are already in the hands of the millionaires very largely, will be increased in value by 25 per cent, and you will lift them by one stroke of the pen $10,000,000,000 in value for the holders of these securities, and yet the income arising from that increase can not be reached by Federal taxation. [Applause.] But if they say they will exempt farm loan bonds this very proposed amendment makes that impossible, because it provides that tax on issues by States can not exceed the tax on issues made "under the authority of the United States," and if none is imposed on farm loan bonds none can be imposed on State issues and the amendment is worthless. Hence to get at the State issues they will necessarily tax farm loan bonds also and will do it without question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. TINCHER. I yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I just want to state that the last speaker [Mr. STEVENSON] labors under a singular misapprehension with reference to the constitutional amendment which he was discussing. It would not affect the condition of the farm loan bonds in the least to tax them now. We can leave them exempt under this amendment if we see fit. It will not affect their situation in the slightest degree, one way or the other.

And the gentleman is equally in error as to the other matter. But I can not go into that now. The gentleman from Kansas has control of the time, and I do not wish to take up the time now in discussing it.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, of course the statement of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] is correct. Every Member of Congress knows that the Congress could tax the Federal farm-loan bonds now if it wanted to and that the change in the Constitution would have no effect one way or the other upon that. However, I think the statement was fairly accurate, considering the statements made by that side of the House concerning the things that the Republican Party does.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The gentleman does not mean to state that if a constitutional amendment were passed forbidding the issuance of tax-free securities, without exception being made of agricultural bonds, that it would exempt these?

Mr. TINCHER. No such amendment was advocated by the President in his message.

Mr. JONES of Texas. He said there should be an amendment to the Constitution forbidding the issuance of tax-free securities.

Mr. TINCHER. Authorizing the legislative bodies of the United States and States hereafter to tax all securities. But there is no danger of Congress taxing farm-loan bonds.

But I did not rise to talk about this particular subject. Other suggestions in the President's message appealed to me. I am going to talk real business. I think if this Congress adjourns without passing some law looking to the relief of the people who are oppressed by excessive freight rates to-day it will be inexcusable on the part of Congress, and we shall have to take the consequences.

On the 11th day of last April—on April 11, 1921—I introduced a bill to abolish the Railroad Labor Board, and that bill was on that day referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. On the same day I took up with the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce the proposition of obtaining hearings on the bill, and I got the customarily polite receipt for the bill, saying that the chairman of the committee would keep the matter in his mind; and as a demonstration of the size of his mind, it has been there ever since, and I have been unable to secure any hearings on the bill.

In the President's message the other day he indorsed this measure and took a firm stand in favor of abolishing the Railroad Labor Board. At the time the bill was introduced it met with the denunciation of organized labor, but since that time I have reason to believe that even organized labor has to some extent changed its mind concerning the necessity of retaining this monstrosity known as the Railroad Labor Board, and it has always been my opinion that we would never have a fair adjudication of the railroad rates in this country so long as we had one board to fix the rates and a separate agency to fix railroad wages; one tribunal to fix the cost of operating the railroads, and another to fix the charges on the public.

I want to call your special attention to the fact that the President, on page 6 of his message, says:

> The substitution of a labor division in the Interstate Commerce Commission, made up from its membership, to hear and decide disputes relating to wages and working conditions which have failed of adjustment by proper committees created by the railways and their employees, offers a more effective plan.

He says that in connection with his advocacy of the proposition to abolish the Railroad Labor Board.

I am not criticizing the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, because I know that, just like any other big committee of this House, they have a great number of bills before them and ordinarily they do not pay much attention to a bill that does not come from a member of the committee. But I have taken the precaution this morning to introduce a motion, which will be put on the calendar, because I am determined that if this Congress does not act on this matter this Congress alone shall be responsible. I have offered a motion to discharge the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and, if permitted to do so under the rules of the House, after it has been pending seven days I shall call up this motion to discharge the committee and place this bill on the calendar for passage. I do not have much hope of calling it up. I think the committee will take action, and I have no pride of authorship in the matter. The fact that I offered this bill the day that the first session of this Congress convened does not necessarily entitle it to have my name. If the members of the committee want to take the bill and work it over and amend it, that is their privilege. The President suggested an amendment to increase the number of the interstate commerce commissioners. That is the only change he has suggested in the bill I have offered. If some member of the committee wants to do that, that is all right; but I say we can not sit here all winter and go home next March without having made some effort to change these freight rates, in the face of the final analysis of this situation by the President, and look our constituents squarely in the face. If the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce does not intend to act on the bill which I have introduced, then I intend to try to press my motion to have that bill placed on the calendar for a final vote. As I say, I am not making any criticism of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I know they have hundreds of bills before them, but there is no excuse for our not acting on this matter. We can carry out a good part of the President's program before the 4th of March. We can pass the farm credits bill, and we will do so, no doubt, if the Banking and Currency Committee will get a move on themselves, which I think they have shown a disposition to do in the past. We can pass that bill and we can pass this bill, which if it had been passed in the summer of 1921 would have saved to the people of this country hundreds of millions of dollars. It will behoove this Congress not to let a thing like this go by, especially now that we have the O. K. of the Chief Executive. It will behoove us not to wait until another strike and another and another before passing some law of this kind. I think while the committee are having hearings on that bill it would be well for them to take up the Hoch bill and try to settle this whole disputed question of what interest the whole public has in labor disputes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. As I remember, the gentleman's bill provides for abolishing the Labor Board.

Mr. TINCHER. Transferring their powers and functions to the Interstate Commerce Commission, exactly as the President's message advocated the other day.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Do I understand, then, that the gentleman wants still to continue the regulation of wages through some sort of governmental agency?

Mr. TINCHER. Oh, yes. I am not making an appeal to overturn that. I think we must have an agency of that kind. The fact is, from what little I know about it I am inclined to think I support the Kansas idea, as voiced by the Hoch bill pending in the gentleman's committee at this time. It would not be a bad idea if we passed it before the 4th of March; but I figure that that bill will probably excite so much opposition that it will be impossible to pass it before that time, and if we pass this one little measure that I propose it will probably have a tendency to prevent another strike. No one wants the Labor Board now. Even the labor people, who claimed I was an enemy of labor when I proposed to abolish the Labor Board, have changed their minds about that, because when the Labor Board made an order which reduced wages the railroad employees whose wages were reduced went out on a strike which cost the people of this country hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. The railway managers also refused to accept the decision of the Labor Board, did they not?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. It is only fair to mention that.

Mr. TINCHER. The railway managers, however, so far as I know, did not abuse me for introducing the bill.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. What improvement does the gentleman believe the Hoch bill would be on the present Railway Labor Board, if the Hoch bill was enacted into law?

Mr. TINCHER. I think the Hoch bill, if enacted into law, would at least have this improvement—that it has teeth in it and gives the power to enforce the orders of the board; and as I understood the President's message he thinks the time has come in this country when the Government agency that has to do with these matters should look to the interest and rights of the over one hundred and some odd millions of other people as well as the interests of organized labor and of the owners of the railroads. That is the idea of the Hoch bill, and that is the idea of the Kansas industrial law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I ask that the gentleman have one minute more so that I may ask him a question.

Mr. HUSTED. I will extend the gentleman's time one minute.

Mr. TINCHER. The gentleman may ask his question, and if I can not answer it, it will be all right.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Does the gentleman believe we ought to pass a law along these lines—that if a Government tribunal makes an award of wages and the railway employees refuse to accept that decision they should be penalized and fined or put in jail for not doing so?

Mr. TINCHER. Oh, no. That is not in the Hoch law and that is not in the Kansas industrial court law or in any other law that I have ever heard advocated. The only time I ever heard anything like that intimated in any case was from those seeking to totally misrepresent the law.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. The President did not advocate that.

Mr. TINCHER. The President did not say anything like that in his message.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I agree with the President that the present Railway Labor Board should be abolished.

Mr. TINCHER. Then let us do it.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. But I believe, in the next place, that we should go back to the condition which existed before the war and reestablish the board of mediation and conciliation, and let the railway employees and the railway managers settle their own differences and let the Government keep its hands off.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I have been very much interested in the remarks made by my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Ohio and the Senator elect of that State [Mr. FESS]—in what he has said as to the accomplishments of the State Department during the present administration. I entirely agree with him that much has been accomplished. It is a great honor to the Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes, but it must be remembered that he has always been in favor of an alliance between the nations of the world to preserve peace; in fact, in the famous letter which he and Mr. Root are given credit for drafting, which was signed and issued on the 14th of October, 1920, by Mr. Hughes and some 30 other gentlemen, it said:

> The undersigned, who desire that the United States shall do her full part in association with other civilized nations to prevent war, have earnestly considered how we may contribute most effectively to that end by our votes in the coming election.

And again—

> The conditions of Europe make it essential that the stabilizing effect of the treaty already made between the European powers shall not be lost by them, and that the necessary changes be made by changing the terms of that treaty rather than by beginning entirely anew.

It is manifest, therefore, that the Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes, has always been in favor of an association of nations, if not identical, then similar to the League of Nations. He has never been heard to issue his voice against the purposes of the league.

Mr. Hughes, the Secretary of State, in addition to this firm foundation, has been big enough, broad enough, and in the exercise of his knowledge and intelligence has not cast aside the policies of the Democratic administration, but has rather followed them, and has carried to fruition the work begun and partially finished by Mr. Colby, his predecessor.

The gentleman from Ohio mentions what was accomplished in Mesopotamia. Mr. Colby on November 20, 1920, sent a note to the British Government asserting the equality of treatment for the citizens of all nations, including, of course, the United States, in mandatory territory, and this policy has been carried out by Mr. Hughes.

The principle of the "open door" in China was a Wilson policy, which President Harding in a note of his Secretary of State dated July 8, 1921, reiterated and which was later confirmed by the Washington conference.

Ratification of the wrong done to the Government of Colombia by the illegal seizure of the Panama Canal route was a Wilson policy, and the Senate was asked to ratify a treaty to that effect, which it refused to do until the Republican Party secured control of the three branches of Government, and then on April 20, 1921, the treaty providing $25,000,000 for Colombia was ratified.

Nonrecognition of the unstable and illegal de facto government of Mexico was a Wilson policy, which has been consistently pursued by President Harding and his Secretary of State.

Nonrecognition of the barbarous Bolshevik government of Russia under Lenin and Trotski was a Wilson policy, which President Harding and his Secretary of State still maintain.

The Secretary of State under Mr. Wilson on November 9, 1920, protested to Japan and the other allied powers to giving Japan a mandate over the island of Yap. On February 21, 1921, a second note of similar character was addressed to the League of Nations, and on April 6, 1921, President Harding approved of that policy and sent a note similar in character and in argument to Great Britain, France, Japan, and Italy. The Washington conference, however, allowed Japan to maintain its mandate over the island of Yap but confirms to the United States full privileges of equality in the maintenance of wireless and cable stations on the island. Perhaps this was the best the Harding administration could procure, but it is certainly far less desirable than the policy laid down by the Wilson administration, because so long as Japan maintains control of this island just so long is it a menace to the Philippines, and our cable rights will avail us very little in the event of hostilities.

I wish to congratulate the Secretary of State for what was accomplished under the four-power agreement entered into at the Washington conference. It is a movement in the right direction, and from the tone of the President's message before Congress on Friday last it may lead to big things through an association with European nations. It must be said, however, that the Harding administration went far beyond the League of Nations in that they entered into an alliance with the other three powers. I think it could have been improved had the Senate adopted the Robinson amendment making it conform to the underlying principle of the covenant of the league.

If we can not enter the league by the front door it is better to enter into peace by the back door of a four-power treaty than not at all.

The gentleman from Ohio has spoken of the Near East conference now in session at Lauzanne, Switzerland, and says the United States is leading in this conference. I am glad to know that this is a fact, but it does seem to me if we want to lead in matters for the peace of the world we should also be willing to accept membership and responsibilities to maintain that peace. It seems astounding that a great nation like ours, which only a few years ago was foremost in world affairs, is now only in the position of looking on, looking in, or advising with. I note, however, in this Lauzanne conference that the Harding administration has declared that the Dardanelless and the entrance to the Black Sea must be kept open and free to the nations of the world. This same doctrine was issued by President Wilson as the twelfth of his famous 14 points.

I say this with no disparagement to the present Secretary of State and without any desire to belittle his accomplishments; in fact, it is to his honor and greatness that he has seen fit to grasp the good, whether from the Wilson administration or from the present administration.

What I do deplore is the fact that this Nation, with all its intelligence, with all its wealth and power, should not be willing to help maintain the peace of the world by assuming the leadership and the consequent responsibility which comes with it. In 1920 I was talking to the Secretary of State of Germany, and he said:

> We can never have reconstruction and peace and prosperity in the world until the United States is willing to sit down with the other great nations and help solve the problems which now confront us.

He said:

> We are all debtor nations; the United States is the only creditor nation. How can the affairs be settled unless the debtors and creditor together reach a conclusion?

The four-power pact will perhaps accomplish a great deal in the Far East, but there are great responsibilities which we must in some manner, either as a nation or as a people, assume if we would bring peace and normal conditions into the world. We have established in the Philippine Islands a democracy; the people constitute a mixture of Malay and Spanish. The task is perhaps one of the greatest and most progressive in the world's history. The Philippines extend for several hundred miles along the coast of China and the Malay Peninsula. India is near by. It is at the crossroads of world commerce. Can we not perceive that democracy is gradually entering the minds and hearts of the people of these far-off nations? There is India, with 320,000,000 people. Some 20 years ago they scarcely realized that they were more than chattels and slaves. They have awakened to the fact that they are human beings, with human rights and human aspirations. Look at China, with her 400,000,000 people. Already a democracy. A great Chinese Republic has been established. Japan has 70,000,000 people, who long since realized their position in the world. Take these great nations, and you have a people of over 800,000,000, constituting half the population of the globe. Can we not behold that the fires of democracy which were started by our forefathers in this country, which has consumed the nations to the south of us, has leaped the great Pacific, maintaining foothold in the Philippines, and spreading to this vast concourse of people?

In Europe democracy has spread like wildfire, and the great nations are to-day either republics or largely conform to the principles of that kind of government. Who shall say that America has not her responsibilities and, more than that, her opportunities, as a great leader of world affairs, and to her own honor and glory help settle the great questions which confront the peoples of all nations? Not long ago I was talking to Mrs. Sharp, the wife of our former ambassador to France. She had just returned from several months spent in the countries of Europe. She described conditions as deplorable, money as worse than valueless, and she said:

> What the people of Europe want is not sympathy, gifts, or donations, but leadership. They have reached that state of despondency and despair when they know not where to look for guidance. They feel that we have neglected them, and yet they pray for America to take the lead in righting things and bringing the Old World to its feet again.

We need not fear entangling alliances. No nation or people would ask it; but what they do want is leadership; and if the League of Nations can not be agreed upon by such amendments as may seem proper to the majority party, then let us pray that our Secretary of State will devise some other method which will bring peace, happiness, and prosperity, and likewise confidence, to the nations of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS].

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I want to direct attention to the condition with respect to the district judiciary, suggested by the item on page 33, appropriating $937,000 with which to pay the salaries of the district judges of the United States. Gentlemen will recall that last year the Department of Justice urged very strongly upon the Congress to increase the number of district judges in the United States, stating that the business of the country is congested, that justice is denied and criminals are permitted to escape because there is no tribunal before which they may be tried. Acting on that suggestion, Congress passed a bill which was approved on the 14th of September, and about the 22d of September the President sent to the Senate the names of three nominees for those positions, two for Massachusetts and one for the eastern district of Illinois. Some twenty-odd judgeships provided for in this bill have not been filled. The remaining days of September have gone by, all of October has passed, November has gone into history, and we are almost at Christmas. During all of that time determination as to nominations has been possible and the Senate has been in session since November 20. In so far as I can ascertain not another name has been suggested to the Senate to fill the positions created by Congress. In the southern district of New York, the heart of the congestion, a vacancy has remained unfilled for more than a year, and the country has the right to know why. If the condition obtains which the Attorney General a year ago told us did obtain, congested prisons, congested courts, and civil litigants denied the opportunity of trial, why this holding up of nominations to fill the positions created by Congress in response to the Executive request? Why is it that the nominations are not forthcoming for these congested districts and these men put to work? If any gentleman on the Republican side has an answer to the question, I yield to him that he may answer in my own time.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am addressing myself now to gentlemen on the Republican side. I want to hear from them.

Mr. McSWAIN. Assuming nobody is going to rise, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. STAFFORD. It may be that conditions have changed, and that there is no need for them, and that would be a saving to the Treasury.

Mr. McSWAIN. But is it not the gentleman's observation and information that conditions are worse than they were a year ago?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not think that anyone will contend that the congestion in the district courts of the United States has to any degree subsided since the time when the Attorney General first came before the Judiciary Committee of the House.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Possibly it may be that the Attorney General has been so busy answering these charges laid against him that he has not had time to make his recommendations.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not know about that, but with this need, which is insisted upon by the Attorney General, by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, by the committees of the House and Senate, and by gentlemen who have stood in their places here and detailed the conditions of congestion in their respective sections of the country, it seems to me, with nothing having been done since September, we have a right to know why. Congress provided the positions, too many positions it is true, but some are needed; badly needed. Almost a quarter of a year has passed since Congress created the positions, and only three of them have been filled. I say some of these positions ought not to have been created. I tried my best to have the extra judgeship for the district of New Mexico stricken from the bill.

That judgeship was not recommended by either the House or the Senate Judiciary Committee. I have recently introduced an amendment to the law striking from it the judgeship provided for the district of New Mexico. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the positions on the Federal judiciary ought to be held absolutely free from every suspicion of political jockeying. At this time I am not proposing to call a spade a spade, although I shall do it some other time——

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Do it now.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Very well, I shall. I say there was but one possible consideration for incorporating the judgeship of New Mexico, which was not recommended either by the House or the Senate Judiciary Committee investigating as to the needs of the situation. I say in regard to that judgeship, if I must call a spade a spade, that the hand of practical politics was laid on the Federal judiciary. If we are to endure as a Government we must protect the judiciary from the fact and from every just ground to suspicion that judicial positions are created to meet political exigencies. If it be apparent that that be the motive for the creation of the position, who can be made to believe that that motive stopped short of the filling of the position? I am not speaking merely in criticism. It is not too late to strike from the law of the country the congressional authorization for the appointment of this judge for New Mexico. While there are, I believe, a number of judgeships included in that bill that ought not to be there, this one stands out indefensible, a reflection upon the Congress and a hurt to public confidence. In the year preceding the writing of this bill, according to the report of the Attorney General, there was tried in the district of New Mexico only one civil case to which the United Sates was a party; as I recall it, 22 civil cases to which the United States was not a party; and 22 criminal trials where a jury was had. In all, 44 cases. And yet we send another judge into that district for the taxpayers of this country to support at a time when every public interest demands the most rigid economy. Of course, no new judge is needed there. The present judge must either remain idle much of the time or go out of the district in order to find employment. If there is no public need, the only other need is a political need; the only other motive is a political motive.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman inform the House as to the number of cases now on the calendar in New Mexico?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. At this moment I do not have the report, but they are relatively small.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield for just another question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I make this statement. I know the gentleman well. The gentleman serves on the Judiciary Committee with me. He is a high-toned, patriotic, efficient legislator and he will not say to the membership of this House that he believes that there is need in the district of New Mexico for another judge.

Mr. MICHENER. That is what I was trying to find out, and that is in regard to the length of those cases tried down there. The gentleman well knows in some cases 44 cases of a certain kind tried in a year would be a big program.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right. The gentleman is a member of the Judiciary Committee. He voted for the bill, and I will ask him if he knows now there was such litigation in New Mexico as to justify this appointment?

Mr. MICHENER. No; we did not put it on in the committee.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; and we ought to take it off. If there had been any need we would have heard of it when the bill was being prepared.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I will.

Mr. GARNER. If the President should delay the appointment of a judge in New Mexico in proportion to the delay in appointing those that seems to be necessary he will not make the appointments during this administration, will he?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I will say to the gentleman that there seems to be a rather general opinion that these appointments will come pretty soon after they get through with a few bills in the Senate, including the ship subsidy bill. But about that I do not know. All I do know is that the three judges who have been appointed were appointed within about a week after the bill was passed; then two months followed in which to determine other appointments. The Senate has been in session since the 20th of last month to receive those appointments, and they are not forthcoming. It is not because there has not been time in which to consider a substantial number and determine as to nominations in most of the districts of greatest need. It can not be because there is not the most urgent need in some districts. One of the districts where there is the least need of a new judge—the eastern district of Illinois—was given one of the three which has been appointed; yet the appointments are not being made. Why, I do not know, but it does not seem to me that the reason can be the only worthy reason which can obtain in this situation, namely, the lack of time in which any of the remaining selections could be made. That, of course, is an Executive responsibility. I want to speak a little further of the congressional responsibility. I want to direct your attention with reference to the New Mexico judgeship to the further fact that it can not be claimed that this judge, who is not needed in New Mexico, can be sent into any of the contiguous country. You can not send him into California, because by this bill we are providing one new judge for each of the districts of California. You can not send him to Arizona, because we are providing a new judge for Arizona, which oversupplies that district. We are providing new judges for the northern district of Texas, the eastern district of Oklahoma, for Wyoming, and for Montana. If used at all, he will have to be transported across the continent at public expense and $10 per diem extra. The fact is that good faith and due regard for the sacredness of the Federal judiciary will not countenance an excuse for such an appointment as this, that maybe work for the appointee can be found in some other district into which from time to time he may be transported. Such appointments are not made when the motive is to serve the public interest. It is not done that way. The Congress ought to right itself in this matter.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, how much time did the gentleman yield back?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back 7 minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LOGAN].

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I simply want to make a statement in connection with the public meeting which was held in Washington on Sunday in regard to a man by the name of Magon. On Friday or Saturday a lady called at my office and asked me if I was in sympathy with these political prisoners. I told her, "Yes." I understood the meeting would be called generally for clemency, and under those circumstances I stated she could use my name. I did not have any idea that the meeting was to be of the nature that it was, and while I have no idea that I was intended to be deceived, I would not have signed the call had I known the nature of the meeting that was going to be held. I only wanted to make that statement in justice to myself and other Members of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN].

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a statement concerning a bill which I have introduced affecting rural credits, known as, I think, H. R. 13270, and also some additional facts in regard to House Joint Resolution 400.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to take a few minutes of time to explain the provisions of the bill that I have introduced, being H. R. 13270, to provide adequate credits for the assistance of farmers, whether they are producing the products of the fields or of live stock. In the very beginning I must acknowledge my obligation to the well-worked-out and well-expressed bill introduced by Mr. McFADDEN, chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and also to the bill subsequently introduced by Mr. ANDERSON, chairman of the Agricultural Commission. I confess to having adopted much of the language of Mr. McFADDEN's bill with respect to the details of organization, management, and inspection of the rural-credits banks, but my ideas of the fundamental principles underlying the systems differ so widely from the plans contained in the bills of Mr. McFADDEN and Mr. ANDERSON that I feel it my duty to put before the Congress my plan. I do this with all deference to the wider experience of the gentlemen already named, but each one of us is responsible to his own constituency and to his own conscience for the exposition of his own convictions.

PROMPT RELIEF NECESSARY.

Mr. Chairman, while it is now universally admitted by all classes, even by the large bankers of the East, that agriculture is the fundamental and the basic industry upon which rests the hope of prosperity and of life itself for the Nation, and while an adequate and wonderful system of financing has been devised for the use and convenience of commerce, industry, and capital in the Federal reserve system, yet the farming business has been left to the very last to receive such relief, when in fact it should have been the first for consideration. No doubt this is due largely to the fact that the farmers are not organized, or at least are disorganized, and their various organizations present a diverse and conflicting front, but everybody is beginning to recognize that there is too great a difference between what the consumer pays for what he eats and wears and what the farmer gets for those very things when they leave his hands.

The farmer, as the primary producer of the essential wealth of this and all countries, is certainly entitled to the first and, I solemnly believe, to the largest slice of the profits to be made out of the commodities he produces. Strange to say, we all know that many persons who never see the farmers' meat, and corn, and wheat, and cotton, and vegetables, and other produce, and merely allow the same to pass over their books, take infinitely more profits than the farmer himself. The mind of the thoughtful man must be impressed with the comparison between the modest, and oftentimes pitifully inadequate, homes upon the farm, with few conveniences and no comforts, whereas the great cities contain mighty palaces and structures reared at vast cost out of the profits made from handling over the books the very things that the farmers' toil and skill and long watchfulness have builded by the assistance of the magic processes of nature, out of sunlight and moisture and soil, into the most delicious morsels that tempt the human appetite.

WE SHOULD EMPLOY EXISTING MACHINERY.

The bills of Mr. McFADDEN and Mr. ANDERSON contemplate employing in a large measure the machinery of the Federal land bank and farm loan system, and, on the contrary, my suggestion is to employ the machinery of the Federal reserve system. These systems are fundamentally different. The farm loan system has the dual aspect of first furnishing an absolutely safe and continuing investment for capital, and, on the other hand, long-time loans at reasonable rates, with the opportunity to pay off gradually for the borrower. The investing public has been convinced that the farm loan bonds are the best in the world, as they are. But the loans necessary to assist the farmer in producing his crops annually or in raising his live stock, over a period not exceeding three years, do not correspond with the ideas of the farm loan system, but do coincide with the plan of the Federal reserve system. The Federal reserve system is designed to furnish credits to meet fluctuating demands of commerce and industry. By the concentration of reserves, and by the transfer of reserves, and by the power to issue Federal reserve bank notes and Federal reserve notes, that system can expand as the requirements demand and contract as the needs cease. It is true that the limitation of 90 days applies to commercial paper in the Federal reserve system, but we all know that, as a matter of experience, merchants and manufacturers who borrow from their local bank for 90 days do not expect, nor does the bank expect, that the note itself will be paid in full and forever at the end of the 90 days. It is expected that the note will be renewed for a larger or a lesser amount, because the merchant or manufacturer, or other business man, who must borrow once will most likely be in need of constant borrowing. The Federal reserve system has in its several reserve banks over $15,000,000,000 on deposit that are drawn from member banks and from the Government, for the use of which absolutely nothing is paid, and so the member banks have thousands of millions of dollars on deposit, a large part of which belongs to farmers themselves and little, if any, interest is paid for the use of this money. The farming class, the essential class, the producing class, the conservative class, the class from which is drawn the fresh blood and pure morality that constantly saves the Nation, is entitled to every consideration of convenience and relief.

PLACE RELIEF CLOSE TO EACH FARMER.

One of the chief objections that I must offer to the plans of Mr. McFADDEN and Mr. ANDERSON is that they are too remote from the small and, as we say, one-horse farmer who lives on his own small place or upon a rented place and works the land with his own hand with the assistance of his wife and his boys and girls, and this class of farmer constitutes more than 75 per cent of those who produce the things upon which we all live. If transactions must be through the Federal land banks, as their plans suggest, and as there are few such Federal land banks, they are therefore far removed from the masses of the people. The large farmer with hundreds of thousands of acres can carry on correspondence with the Federal land banks or take the train and go hundreds of miles to confer, but not so the small farmer.

HOW CAN LOCAL RELIEF BE ACCOMPLISHED?

It is fundamental in a system that will be convenient and at the same time safe that there must be assurance of at least one bank in each county in the agricultural sections, and there must also be local financial responsibility in order to insure that advantage will not be taken and thus the system weakened. It is but human nature for people to borrow all they can, and it is sadly true that often persons fail to show the same diligence in repaying that they do in borrowing. Therefore I suggest that there may be organized banks under the Federal Government, to be chartered by the Comptroller of the Currency, consisting of at least 10 natural persons with a minimum capital stock of $10,000 and with no maximum, and that State or National banks may take not more that 49 per cent of this stock and that the business may be transacted in the same banking room, if desired, and that the same officers, if elected by the board of directors, may administer the affairs of the local rural credits bank as administers the State or National bank in connection with which the rural credits bank may be organized. Of course the rural credits bank may be entirely separate, with an entirely separate set of officers, but I believe, in the interest of economy and of speedy organization, that the banks will take up the organization of rural credits banks very quickly. My observation and experience is that the local banks in the small cities and towns in agricultural sections are entirely in sympathy with the needs and requirements of the farmers and wish to help them, but for economic reasons they can not.

First, the farmer must compete with business men who can pay a higher rate of interest, and usually the farmer who must borrow has no money to deposit, though there are many farmers out of debt and depositors. With a minimum capital of $10,000 and with power to turn over and lend a total of $100,000, and with the power to make 2 per cent thereon, it will net to the local rural credits bank $2,000, and as there will be little clerical work I am persuaded that the cashiers and assistant cashiers of the banks will be only too glad to take a salary of $100 per month to attend to the business of the rural credits bank, so that the bank can pay 6 per cent interest on $10,000 capital and have $200 margin of profits.

The bank itself will be glad to have the farmers' bank operated in connection with it. The bankers want to show themselves friendly to agriculture. Many banks in my section furnish seed grain, brood sows and boars, and thoroughbred bulls and stallions at actual cost, and finance the farmer in order to promote the welfare of the farmers. Therefore, I am convinced that they will gladly organize these banks, at least one in each county, and they will also derive a certain financial benefit for two reasons: First, the farmer borrowing his money at the first of the year will deposit it in the State or National bank and check it out gradually so that the deposits of the bank will be swollen; and in the second place, the farmers having found the way into a certain bank will return when they begin to be prosperous and have money to deposit generally.

RIVALRY WILL ENCOURAGE BANK ORGANIZATIONS.

In practically all of our county-seat towns, even in the remotest rural sections, there are at least two banks, and if one bank organizes in connection with its business a rural-credits bank, the other bank, fearing the effect of such competition, will also organize one, and by watching and competing with each other we may make sure that the farmers' needs will be fairly met. Then if the cashier is having his salary increased $100 per month, the cashier in the other bank will be anxious to receive the same increase. One hundred dollars per month additional in our smaller towns is a vast increase to men who are receiving now in many cases $150 to $300 per month.

MY PLAN OFFERS USE FOR SURPLUS GOLD.

Gold is still the basis of money value and probably will be for generations to come. The statement of the United States Treasurer for December 4, 1922, shows that we have in gold $3,270,472,528.86. It is admitted by everybody from the President down that we do not need so much gold. Some have argued with show of reason that this vast quantity of gold is a detriment to our commerce, and the unequal distribution of gold among the countries of the world is certainly one of the prime causes for the destruction of a stable basis of exchange. In my bill, therefore, I propose to transfer to the Federal Reserve Board $500,000,000 of this gold as a guaranty for the Federal reserve notes that shall be issued in order to meet the requirements of the farmer. As will be found by reading the bill, this money is virtually lent in trust and will be ultimately refunded out of the profits of the system itself, and, when fully refunded by the profits of the system, will accumulate in gold in the notes of the Federal Reserve Board in order to guarantee and insure the stability and par value of the circulating medium required to be issued in order to finance the farmers from year to year.

ADDITIONAL CURRENCY WILL STIMULATE BUSINESS AND ENCOURAGE PROSPERITY.

The need for a larger volume of money as a medium of exchange is increasing every year, as our business becomes more complex and our business transactions more multiplied. Our fathers and grandfathers, living on large plantations, each of which was a sort of empire within itself, with the mill and the tanyard, shoe shop, and the cows in the pasture to produce the hides, and the smokehouse to cure the meat, and the sheep and cotton to produce the thread, and the spinning wheel and loom to make the cloth, did not need much money. They required only enough to pay small taxes, and to buy some sugar and coffee, pepper and salt, medicine, and something for the doctor and preacher. But now, under a constantly multiplying division of labor, the farmer usually does not even sharpen his own plows and shoe his own mule, much less make or mend his own shoes, or grind his own wheat or corn, or manufacture his own cloth. And all these things must be paid for in money, so that it takes a larger volume of money constantly passing through his hands in order to meet his requirements. This increase in the volume of currency will help the merchant and the manufacturer, and the railroad, and the banker himself, and will help everybody except the person or corporation whose sole assets consist of cash itself, and who will find that the demand for their cash is diminished as the quantity of actual money in the country is increased.

HOW WILL THE VOLUME OF CURRENCY BE INCREASED?

The plan contemplated by my bill is that when the farmer takes his note and mortgage, whether on land or on crops or on stock, to the local farm credits bank and has the same discounted, that note can be sent to the Federal reserve bank for the district, which must discount it at a rate not exceeding the interest being earned for the preceding year by the investors in Libery bonds or Victory bonds, which are unsecured obligations of the Government of long standing. This duty to rediscount by the Federal reserve banks is obligatory. That is one of the sharp differences between the bill introduced by myself and that offered by the gentlemen named. If the Federal land banks merely may rediscount for local banks the paper of farmers, then the local banks will be very chary to accommodate farmers, so long as it is a mere matter of discretion with the Federal land bank. But under the plan proposed by me the Federal reserve bank must rediscount every paper that the local farm credits bank tenders and indorses.

IS THIS PLAN SAFE?

I submit that it is safe, because the local farm credits bank must indorse and guarantee payment to the Federal reserve bank of every one of these notes, and the stockholders will be responsible in double the amount of stock invested by them, and the associate bank will have a certain degree of moral responsibility for the safety of the loans. There is no duty imposed by this bill upon the local farm credits bank to lend money to any and every farmer who wants to borrow. If the farmer is lazy or inefficient or dishonest, he neither can nor should expect any help from any system. On the other hand, if he is honest and if he is industrious and if he is capable, he has the right to expect accommodation upon reasonable terms for at least 12 months at a rate of interest not exceeding 6 per cent.

HOW CAN THE FEDERAL RESERVE BANK FINANCE THESE FARMERS' OBLIGATIONS?

When the paper is rediscounted by Federal reserve banks it is then tendered to the Federal reserve agent and it is obligatory upon him to pay to the Federal reserve bank the amount of such paper in Federal reserve notes, and it is the duty of the Federal Reserve Board to issue Federal reserve notes in sufficient sums, backed up by a $500,000,000 guaranty in gold, in order to meet these requirements. It is hardly possible that the total short-term credits of all the farmers in the United States under such a system would aggregate five thousand million dollars, but if it should, the soundness of the currency is guaranteed by one-tenth of the amount of gold and by 100 per cent of the amount in paper and by 200 per cent of the amount of the liability of the stockholders of rural-credits banks. With this margin there can be no reasonable doubt about the soundness of the currency. Every dollar of the Federal reserve notes, which will bear upon their face evidence of the fact that they have been issued to carry on the agricultural industry in this country, will be redeemable any day in the year in gold. But who can demand their redemption? They will be legal tender for all obligations, both public and private, in the United States. The citizens of other countries can not acquire them in any substantial quantities, because other nations and other citizens owe us and our nation in the aggregate sum of at least fifteen thousand million dollars. Therefore, by no possibility of international finance can these Federal reserve notes for farm purposes fall into the hands of foreigners and, therefore, we will not find them presenting them to the Federal Reserve Board and demanding their redemption in gold.

WHAT WILL BE DONE WITH THE PROFITS OF THE SYSTEM?

The local bank can not charge more than 2 per cent above the rate of rediscount and that will be used to pay dividends and the expenses of administration. Out of the balance a fair proportion of the expenses of each Federal reserve bank and any losses on any paper will be paid, to be fixed by the Federal Reserve Board, and the balance will be placed to the credit of the Federal Reserve Board and used to redeem and refund and to restore to the Government the $500,000,000 in gold lent by the Government to set the machinery in motion. When all of the advancement by the Government shall have been refunded, then the rate of rediscount shall not exceed 2 per cent and thereafter the farmers will be receiving their annual accommodations at a rate of interest not exceeding 4 per cent; and then probably it will be found that the 2 per cent allowed to the local bank may properly be reduced to 1½ or even 1 per cent, so that we may reasonably hope for a time when the farmers who go forth to sow and to reap, who watch the live stock from birth until the day of sale or slaughter, will be receiving financial assistance at about 3 per cent per annum.

RELIEF WILL COME QUICKLY.

Under the system proposed by the eminent and able and experienced gentleman referred to a delay of one or perhaps two years even after the enactment of the legislation will follow. The huge corporations proposed by them must be organized, and in our impoverished sections of the country their organization will be practically impossible. Then the bonds, in order to raise the money from private subscribers, must be floated, and that will involve delay. Their plan is to furnish a place for the investment of capital that the very people have accumulated who have made enormous profits out of the produce of the farm, and by a strange irony of fate these people who have grown rich by using the opportunities and agencies of our economic and transportation structure to exact an unreasonable profit and toll for the things that they handle almost theoretically for the farmer are now brought to believe and think that they are benevolent and almost charitable by subscribing to bond issues to finance the farmer when they are to draw interest on those bonds and to continue to profit immensely on the products of the farm. I make no war upon any line or class of business. I recognize that some middlemen are necessary under our economic structure, though I believe that there are too many middlemen, and I believe that we have permitted to continue an economic and transportation system that makes it possible for those who stand at the gates to exact a toll for their services altogether out of proportion and excessively large for the value of the services actually rendered.

WHY SHOULD NOT THE LAW DO FOR THE FARMER WHAT IT DOES FOR THE BUSINESS MAN?

It may be objected that my plan proposes the issue of a sort of "fiat money" in order to finance the farmer. While I deny it and in a few minutes can prove it to be false, yet I remind you that the Federal reserve system contemplates the issue of the same sort of "fiat money" in order to help the merchant, the manufacturer, the railroad, the speculator in cotton and wheat and corn and meat. The Federal Reserve Board can issue Federal reserve notes when there is only 40 per cent in gold or other legal money as a guarantee behind the same, and in such a case 60 per cent of the circulating medium thus poured into the channels of commerce is "fiat money" in the sense of those who may criticize the plan I propose. But I submit that in neither case is it actually fiat money, and the Federal reserve notes to be issued to finance the farmers will be safer and sounder and more sure and certain of redemption than those issued to finance the merchant, the manufacturer, and the speculator. Why? Because the Federal reserve notes to accommodate the farmer are backed not only by the gold above mentioned and not only by the indorsement of the local bank but by the papers, which represent actual commodities and actual values, either in existence or to be brought into existence in a little while, and when brought into existence constitute the very things that more than 100,000,000 people of this Nation and the teeming millions of other people must eat every day and must wear all the time.

The basis for the Federal reserve notes now being issued to accommodate commerce and business consists, to the extent of 60 per cent, of the unsecured notes bearing the signature of two or more persons and resting solely upon their financial responsibility at the date of maturity. Take the statistics to see how 95 per cent of the merchants of this country ultimately become bankrupt. Ask the statistics how many of the notes of these merchants are worthless, or partly worthless, at maturity. But, on the other hand, under my system, as a matter of fact the obligations of farmers based upon a lien on the crop or the live stock are worth almost par. A gentleman of high character, well known to me, and now more than 70 years of age and having been engaged in business as a merchant and banker in a rural section for more than 40 years, has often told me that out of the perhaps millions of dollars that he has lent to farmers $500 would perhaps cover all the losses he ever sustained. Not at all, by a great deal, were the papers paid when due. Many of them had to be carried over and added into the next year's obligations, and some of them had to be continued for three or four years in part, but ultimately, when Providence smiled with suitable seasons, and fortune aided with adequate prices, the honest farmer stepped up and met his obligations, new and old. The plan provides criminal penalties for anything like fraudulent representations and fraudulent failure to preserve and protect the commodities and apply the cash proceeds to the liquidation of the farmer's debt. Therefore, there can be no reasonable doubt about the soundness of the system.

WHICH SYSTEM WILL YOU CHOOSE?

Will you choose the system that involves delay; that rests upon the word "may"; that depends upon the willingness of the capitalists to subscribe stock; that rests upon the impossibility of raising capital sufficient to organize the financing corporation, when the farmer has already waited too long and waited to his own loss and suffering and to the consequent impoverishing of the Nation as a whole and to the delaying of the return of prosperity, or will you adopt the system here offered by me that can be put into operation by every agricultural section of the country within at least 60 or 90 days after its approval by the President? The press can advise the country of this ample and easy method of furnishing financial relief. The banks in the smaller towns and cities, with eyes open and ears keen to learn of ways and means to promote their business interests, will be applying for permission to organize the rural credits banks the very next day after the law has been placed on the statute books. When one bank in the town, through its friends and business associates, to wit, at least 10 natural persons, shall have organized such a bank as a sort of side pocket and business feeder, the other banks in that town and the banks in the neighboring towns will wake up and begin at once the organization of such banks.

The very day the bank is chartered by the Comptroller of the Currency it can begin to lend money, and if this bill could be put through the House and Senate by the 15th day of January, 1923, then by the 15th day of February, 1923, the farmers could be getting money at not exceeding 6 per cent for a period of 12 months; and with this financial aid they could prepare the soil and buy the fertilizer and buy the seed and cultivate and harvest the crop, and eventually market it in an orderly manner; and at the end of 12 months hope would have returned to their hearts, confidence would have been restored, the volume of commodities necessary to support the Nation would have been increased, and by the assistance of cooperative markets the farmer would be getting a better price and at the same time the ultimate consumer in the cities would be getting what he must eat and wear at a lower price, and a contented and happy people would join in a common chorus of praise for the blessings of such a system. All the world agrees that the Federal reserve system is a marvel in the world of finance. While it has defects that should and can be easily corrected and perfected, yet in the main it is a matchless system. Now, on behalf of the farmers, whom everybody serves with his lips and so few assist with their hands, I ask for the application of the blessings of this wonderful Federal reserve system to his needs. The farmer reminds us that he is a part of this Nation, and as such part had a hand in the forming and chartering of the Federal reserve system. It is as much his system as it is anybody's. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I know that we are told by the lawyers, and it is technically true, that the Federal reserve system is a private banking system and that it belongs to the banks as a private institution, and that it is in no sense a governmental institution, but we must remember that it required long years of agitation to convince an American Congress that such a system would be necessary, and it required the exercise of sovereign power on the part of this National Government to create this system and to breathe into it the breath of life. The private banks never could have created it and, worse still, they never would have created it. They fought it from the beginning, and most of them went into it unwillingly and were forced in only by mandate of law, and some national banks surrendered their charters rather than enter the system. I can well remember that the national banks in the little towns and cities, echoing the voice of Wall Street and of the mighty financial interests that had profited immensely by the control of money and currency, fought with all their might to prevent the Congress from enacting the law. Now these very banks all join in singing its praises. It is a blessing to the little bank. It has saved the little bank from the clutches of the greedy manipulator of money on Wall Street.

TREAT THE FARMER AS YOU DID THE BUSINESS MAN.

All we ask is that the Government exercise the same power for the benefit of the farmer as it does for the benefit of the business man. The Government uses its sovereign power and right to make money to circulate as a medium of exchange and to have the quality of legal tender in order to accommodate the requirements of commerce and industry. How can it and how dare it do less for the farmer? Remember that the farmer has struggled through three desperate years with the prices of his products constantly falling, while the prices of the things he must buy remain constant and in some cases rising. To adopt a system that will involve a continuing delay of at least one and perhaps two or three years, that will not carry its conveniences close to the farmer's door, that will accommodate the large farmers but be practically beyond the reach of the smaller farmers, will result in continued stagnation, so that hope so long deferred may not rise in the farmer's heart; and since the prosperity of all the people depends upon his labor and production, the return of prosperity of the whole Nation will certainly be delayed and may be prevented by such a system as is contemplated by the honorable and able gentlemen above mentioned.

I appeal for relief, for quick relief, for adequate relief, and in the name of the farmers who feed and clothe this Nation and a large part of the world, of the farmers who settled this continent, who cleared its fields and drained its swamps, and ultimately built its cities and all of its great industries, I affirm that we have a right to demand this quick and adequate relief.

Mr. Chairman, I beg to call the attention of the House to the following extract from the inaugural address of President Harding, delivered on March 4, 1921, in connection with House Joint Resolution 400:

> Our supreme task is the resumption of our onward, normal way. Reconstruction, readjustment, restoration—all these must follow. I would like to hasten them. If it will lighten the spirit and add to the resolution with which we take up the task, let me repeat for our Nation we shall give no people just cause to make war upon us; we hold no national prejudice; we entertain no spirit of revenge; we do not hate; we do not covet; we dream of no conquest nor boast of armed prowess.
> If, despite this attitude, war is again forced upon us, I earnestly hope a way may be found which will unify our individual and collective strength and consecrate all America, materially and spiritually, body and soul, to national defense. I can vision the ideal republic, where every man and woman is called under the flag for assignment to duty for whatever service, military or civic, the individual is best fitted; where we may call to universal service every plant, agency, or facility, all in the sublime sacrifice for country, and not one penny of war profit shall inure to the benefit of private individual, corporation, or combination, but all above the normal shall flow into the defense chest of the Nation. There is something inherently wrong, something out of accord with the ideals of representative democracy, when one portion of our citizenship turns its activities to private gain amid defensive war while another is fighting, sacrificing, or dying for national preservation.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Congress, I submit that the principle contained in House Joint Resolution 400 is as sound and as unassailable as the axiomatic principles contained in the Declaration of Independence. How can it be said that the only persons morally bound to make sacrifices on a large scale in time of war, to sacrifice health, to sacrifice body, to sacrifice life itself are the young and vigorous men who take up arms and follow the flag? Why should our country, the first great modern democracy, demand one citizen to give up his life in time of war and at the same time bestow vast wealth upon another citizen as profits upon war supplies bought by the Government? If our Nation should suffer a defeat at war—a thing well-nigh unthinkable—all investments, all capital would be very largely wiped out. Reparations are paid out of property and not measured in human blood. Therefore, there is the selfish motive for the holders of vast accumulated wealth to furnish the sinews of war, while the masses of humanity furnish the soldiers.

It seems hardly necessary to argue the proposals contained in this resolution. In fact, remembering the fine and unselfish spirit of patriotism which moved and inspired our civil population during the World War, I conclude that if they had been called upon to make voluntary donations to carry on the war we would not have lacked for material and supplies. Men too young to be drafted, men too frail to be accepted as volunteers, and men too old to bear arms saw with tear-stained eyes the boys marching out to the transports to go over to defend and to save liberty, justice, freedom, and democracy, would gladly have given a fractional part of their wealth to have been parties by proxy in that heroic crusade. And certainly when we now propose that there shall be equity and fairness and justice in the draft upon the resources of the different industries and individuals we conclude that no man will raise his voice in opposition to the adoption of the plan.

The man power making up the Army must itself fight out the war now and can not postpone and shift the fighting duty to subsequent generations. Then why could it be urged that the nonmilitary part of the population should have their obligation to contribute the material to make war postponed, as represented by bonds, to be paid with interest by later generations? The adoption of this method of universal mobilization will be evidence of America's devotion to the ideals of democracy and of her faith in the justice and permanency of republican institutions. We will no longer see the choice and selected young men, found to be physically and mentally superior, serving in the Army at a dollar a day while those who have been rejected as physically or mentally unfit or, worse still, while the dodgers and yellow backs are earning from five to ten dollars a day digging ditches, building ships and shacks, constructing roads, and performing other kinds of unskilled labor.

The adoption of such a policy of military preparedness will remove the motive for jingo propaganda; it will also notify industry to get ready for a change to war needs, and such change can be made with less shock and jar. Furthermore, to conduct a war on this principle of universal service and universal contribution to the common cause will prevent the feeling that injustice has been done because some have contributed more than their share, as measured by the profits that others made and the security that others enjoyed in the defense of those principles of national life that are dearer to the American people than life itself. When the feeling of resentment arising from injustice no longer prevails, then we may confidently hope for internal peace and social solidarity. The only safe and abiding foundation for any government, and especially a government that rests upon the consent of the people, as does ours, is justice. And by that I mean something approaching moral justice. I do not mean justice in the sense in which it is used in the courthouse when the criminal is being tried according to the law as already written; I mean justice as it should abide in the breast of the lawmaker who searches and seeks to know what the law should be.

I am personally grateful that the President, in his message delivered to the Congress on December 8, 1922, asks us to give this principle of drafting the resources of the Republic, both human and material, for national defense our approval, and I hope it will receive our speedy approval. I think the reasons assigned by the President are ample, but I cite the fact that the American Legion, at its annual convention at New Orleans in October, 1922, unanimously adopted the report of its military affairs committee approving this principle of war duty. I think the war power as it now exists in the Constitution is sufficient. The adoption of this legislation now would be conditional upon the subsequent declaration of war by Congress. The President could not exercise the power of mobilization until war shall have been declared by Congress. The war power is full and complete. In time of war this Nation may do all that any sovereign may do to prosecute war, especially where the Constitution itself expressly forbids the conduct of war in a given manner. The Constitution does not forbid Congress to exercise the power now in question. However, if I am wrong about this, then I am for a constitutional amendment; and I believe the people are for such a constitutional amendment, and I can not believe that any substantial number of persons will resist the adoption of such a measure so manifestly just, so long as 4,000,000 men still live who were called upon to make the great sacrifice of time and effort, and many of them of blood and 70,000 of them of life, while, on the contrary, thousands and hundreds of thousands remained in security, bought with the soldiers' blood, and piled up such profits as they had never dreamed of, even in the wildest moments.

The joint resolution which I propose merely lays down a broad proposition undoubtedly sound. In order that there may be no snap judgment and no lack of many-sided considerations, I propose that we call to the council table 12 men who ought to know more about the Nation's needs in times of war than any other 12 men.

Three of them will represent the nonofficial and civilian point of view. In fact, all of them will represent the interests and feeling of the people themselves. The four Members of the House of Representatives have come fresh from an election by the people. This may also be true of the Senators who will serve. The three members of the Cabinet have rendered conspicuous public service, two of them in Congress, two of them in war, and one of them as the most conspicuous administrator of relief to suffering humanity that history yet records. Then the President is asked to choose three persons from nonofficial life to represent by their experiences and vocations and sympathy those interests which we ordinarily describe briefly as labor, industry, and capital. When their conclusions are laid before Congress, then the 531 Members of the House and Senate will give it very close scrutiny before it is enacted into law. Therefore we may have confidence that no half-baked and immature notions will be enacted into law. But when the principles contained in this joint resolution shall have finally found their way to the statute books a new day will have dawned in the history of this American people. Just as the Declaration of Independence was epoch making, not only for America but for the world, so this measure of military duty will make its way into the minds and hearts and upon the law books of the other civilized nations. As America has ever lead in the march toward human justice in government so we confidently hope and reverently pray that she may renew, by the adoption of this principle of war service, her commitment to the everlasting principles of equal rights to all and special privileges to none.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the original Bursum bill contained a provision that veterans of the Indian wars and of the Ranger Service in the West should have their pensions raised from $20 to $30. As that bill came back to us this morning it did not contain that provision, and had been changed in many other material respects from its text when the House passed the measure. There were fundamental differences. Now when it comes back from conference, if it is in the same fix, a man who might support the conference report might have been against the provisions of the original bill and vice versa. I just mention this to show that a vote for a conference report upon a bill in many instances is not a support of the original measure, because many things may intervene, many new questions may arise. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] spoke of amending the Esch railroad bill in one vital particular. That reminds me of the vote on the conference report on the Esch bill.

A vote for the conference report was not necessarily in support of the Esch bill. I mention this because in my district in the recent campaign my several opponents went around the district stating that I had supported the Esch bill, because I supported the conference report in final action thereon. Now, let me mention the real facts concerning the matter. That bill came up for passage in the House on November 17, 1919. Four days before that I gave to the press a statement protesting against the provisions of that bill, and here is the statement:

WARNING TO THE PEOPLE—THE ESCH RAILROAD BILL IS PREPOSTEROUS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 14, 1919.

From the people's standpoint, the proposed Esch railroad bill is ridiculously preposterous. It is but another call upon the people to make additional sacrifices to the molochs of railroad corporations and autocratic labor unions. Half of the bill has been drawn by railroad attorneys, and the remainder has been framed by the big attorneys for railroad employees. The American people have been left out and forgotten. Their rights are ignored. Congress again is asked to sidestep and truckle. The public has in it no guaranty or even promise against continued tie-ups of public business and Government industries.

To pay the railroads the sums asked is outrageous. To continue the $1,300,000,000 increases in salaries granted by the Government to railroad employees during the war, under threats of strikes, means the continuation of present unconscionable freight and passenger tariffs, which precludes passengers from riding trains and producers from shipping farm and ranch products to market.

The proposed Railway Labor Adjustment Board, of thirty-odd members, will prove as inefficacious and impotent and as fully dominated by American Federation of Labor influence as the present Board of Mediation and Conciliation, and promises nothing but additional expense to the people.

Likewise, the proposed railway board of labor appeals, with its nine members drawing $10,000 each per year from the Government, will accomplish nothing but added expense to the people.

Does any sane person imagine that unions will pay any attention to the decisions of these boards when same are mere recommendations with no teeth to enforce decrees?

God only knows what is to become of this Republic unless the people demand of their representatives that their rights be protected. The railroads must be returned to their owners immediately if we keep our Nation out of bankruptcy. The 110,000,000 people must speak and demand proper action by Congress.

THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Representative Seventeenth Texas District.

When the bill came up for passage in the House on November 17, 1919, the vote shows, on page 9181 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, that I voted against the Esch railroad bill, but it passed by the vote of yeas 208, nays 160. Then what intervened? The bill went to the Senate. Then it went to conference. Several months elapsed. During that interim there arose a substitute plan known as the Plumb plan, a pernicious plan of Government ownership; and as much as I opposed the provisions of the Esch railroad bill, I just that much more opposed the provisions of the proposed Plumb plan, which meant Government ownership at a greater cost to the people, which beyond doubt led to bankruptcy.

If there is any one single lesson that the World War taught the people of America it is that the American people do not want Government ownership of railroads. It would bankrupt this country in a very short time. If it had not been for the fact that we returned those railroads to their owners the country would have been bankrupted. That was the only thing that saved this country from bankruptcy.

When the bill came to conference it was a question with the conferees whether they should stand by the Esch bill or accept the alternative of Government ownership under the pernicious Plumb plan. While the Esch bill would cost the American people millions of dollars, the proposed pernicious Plumb plan would have cost the American people billions of dollars. It was just that much worse than the Esch bill. Of course, a man, when he had just two alternatives, when he had just two roads to go in, one leading down the pathway of the Esch bill, the other down the pathway of the Plumb plan, has to make his choice, and I was one of those who accepted the lesser of the two evils and supported the conference report on the Esch bill in preference to accepting the ruinous Plumb plan.

I was paired on it. My opponents, who contested my seat in Texas, asked the question during the campaign: "Where was BLANTON? He ought to have been here. He was paired." Why, I was fighting that very Plumb plan proposition. I went to the State of Massachusetts and made a speech against this very Plumb plan and had a telegram sent from Massachusetts, signed by 100 leading business men of that State, denouncing the Plumb plan. That is where I was on that day, and because I was paired in favor of that conference report my friends in Texas, after my seat, said that I had deserted the Democrats and had gone over to the Republicans in pairing in favor of the conference report.

Now, let us see if I deserted the Democrats and whether I went over to the Republicans. That vote on that conference report came up on February 21, 1920. Let us see who was voting "yea" with me for the conference report, as against the Plumb plan in the way that I was paired. I find the distinguished leader of the minority, the present leader of the Democratic Party in this House, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], voting as I did. I find our late friend, the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Saunders], who was the chairman, when he left us, of the Democratic caucus, voting as I did on the proposition. I find our late colleague, whom we all loved, the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Flood], who succeeded Mr. Saunders as chairman of the Democratic caucus here in the House of Representatives, voting "yea" for the conference report as I did. I find the present chairman of the Democratic caucus [Mr. RAYBURN] voting "yea" as I did. I find voting as I did such distinguished Democrats as our good friend Governor MONTAGUE and another distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] and another distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODS]; and I find voting the same way such distinguished Democrats from North Carolina as Mr. POU and Mr. SMALL, and such other distinguished Democrats as Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee, Mr. BLACK, and the late lamented Lucian Parrish from Texas, our good Democratic friends from Georgia, Mr. CRISP and Mr. UPSHAW, and various others whose Democracy can not be questioned. Yet it was asserted that I had bolted the Democratic Party and gone over to the Republicans.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I was very glad to hear the gentleman a few minutes ago express himself against Government ownership of railroads. I would like to ask him this question.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has three minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. It is just a short question. Do you think it is good policy to have the Government attempt to fix the wages and working conditions of two million men employed in a private industry?

Mr. BLANTON. It is rather strange on this question for me to find myself in accord with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER], but I am with him on the proposition of establishing a proper industrial court for this Nation, such as they have done in the State of Kansas.

It was asserted that when I voted for the conference report on the Esch bill, which stopped that Plumb plan of Government ownership, that I was voting against the railroad laborers of the land. I understand that my good friend from Ohio [Mr. COOPER], than whom there is not in this House or in this land a finer gentleman or a better or more loyal friend to railroad labor and every other kind of labor—I notice that he, too, would not follow Government ownership, Plumb plan, and I find myself voting with him in favor of that conference report and against Government ownership, which meant nothing in the world but bankruptcy for this Nation.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I believe that the gentleman from Texas will realize that there is a vast difference between an industrial law that will cover a State and an industrial law that will cover a nation, making its decisions national in scope.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I would not go back to the old strike conditions. The gentleman spoke of the Board of Conciliation and Mediation. Under that kind of a board, which you had in the Department of Labor during the war period, just during the war, from April 6, 1917, to November 11, 1918, you had 6,000 strikes in this Nation.

I am with the President in his statement the other day that in time of war, if we have the right to take your boy and send him to France to fight the enemy where he may lose his life and not come back, so also we have the right to say to every man who remains, "Go and work for the Government in war time. Go work if you will not fight. Fight or work. You have got to do one of those two things." [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN]. [Applause.]

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I have not said anything since the Congress reassembled in extraordinary session. I have been reflecting on the things that have come to pass. The President of the United States came here and said a few kind words for the farmers and the laboring people of the United States. As I sat back there in one of those seats and listened to him I wondered if it was the same President Harding who advocated the iniquitous measure to take the surtaxes off of the rich. I wondered if it was the same President Harding that encouraged and approved the outrageous Fordney tariff law. I wondered if it was the same President Harding who came before this Congress after such a walloping on the 7th of November as the Republicans had not had in years, asking the American Congress to give a subsidy for ships and to exempt from taxation the wealth invested in ships, to take out of the pockets of the American people $150,000,000 and hand it over into the coffers of the shipowners. I wondered if it was the same President Harding who vetoed the soldiers' bonus or adjusted compensation for the ex-service men who went out and offered themselves as a sacrifice for their country in time of peril. I wondered if it was the same President Harding who appointed the Railway Labor Board that handed down decisions against the poor fellows who operate the trains and repair the cars and locomotives and the tracks. I wondered if it was the same President Harding who appointed a well-known railway lawyer from the State of Minnesota to the vacancy on the Supreme Bench of the United States, a man whose mind is so warped after all these many years' service for the combinations of railroads that he can not see anything for the laboring man or the common pepole of the United States. Yet I thank President Harding for his kind words. I thought maybe he would change his mind and put on the Federal Reserve Board a man who stands for the farmer, a real farmer who would not let the finances of the farmers be juggled for the benefit of the great manipulators of wealth in this country against the actual producers of that wealth. Yet in that same message he met himself coming back. He said we must amend the Constitution of the United States so as to prevent the farmers from securing the money to build consolidated schools and to build good roads over which to haul their products to market. He favored the monstrous proposition of taking away from the States of this Republic the right to control their purse strings.

He proposed an amendment to the Constitution to lay the strong arm of taxation upon the bonds that are issued by the States, the municipalities, and counties and subdivisions thereof. Is it possible for good roads to be built in any farming district of the United States without the sale of bonds? Is it possible for them to build consolidated schools and equip them and employ teachers without the issuance of bonds? Is it possible for the small municipalities, or, for that matter, even for the great cities of this Republic, to make the necessary improvements of modern civilization without the issuance of bonds? Every man understands the law of taxation. Whenever you place a tax upon a bond that is to be issued that tax must be borne by the taxpayers. If that bond now sells on the market for 5 per cent interest, and you allow the taxing power to reach that bond, that same farmer will be bound to pay 8 or 10 per cent interest on the bonds to build his roads and his schools. Every municipality in this Republic will be bound to pay that higher interest rate for its bonds in order to pay for a few municipal and city improvements. Yet that proposition comes after $11,000,000,000 of securities of that kind are already in the vaults of the rich. Those securities could not be touched, because this amendment could not be ex post facto in its effect and reach back to the securities already issued. So the increase in the value of these $11,000,000,000 worth of bonds already issued would amount to $6,000,000,000 in addition. Yet that proposition is brought here in the same breath with the honeyed words for the farmer and the poor laboring people. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] a moment ago seemed to indorse this other man from Kansas, our friend TINCHER, who wants to go out and establish a court to grab the workingmen by the neck and force them to compulsory arbitration or throw them into the hoosegow. It is plain that the administration does not propose to live up to those kind words that we heard fall here, because in the very same message here is this other proposition to cut out from under the farmer his prop and let him do without schools and do without good roads unless in the future he is willing to pay twice as much as he now pays for those wholesome benefits. The President even suggested that freight should be taxed on the good roads, so as not to be a competitor, in fact, with railroads. What did he offer to reduce the transportation charges?

With all that before us we have this same administration marching over to the other end of the Capitol and endeavoring to pass the ship subsidy bill, not by the votes of men who will be in the next House of Representatives and in the next United States Senate after the 4th of March, 1923, but to pass it by votes of gentlemen who were repudiated at the polls by the people who marched up to the ballot box with their majestic tread on the 7th day of November last. [Applause.]

I thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE].

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, at the bottom of page 31 in this appropriation bill there is a provision to appropriate $500,000 for the investigation of war frauds; and beginning at the bottom of page 37 of this bill is another provision appropriating $850,000 for the pay of attorneys in investigating war frauds. We all remember that at the last session of Congress we appropriated $500,000 for the investigation of war frauds. Here comes the Department of Justice, at the instance of the Attorney General, asking for $500,000 more for investigation and $850,000 more for attorneys. When these amounts shall have been appropriated there will have been appropriated in less than one year over $1,850,000 of the people's money for the use of General Daugherty and the Attorney General's Office in order to prosecute war grafters and to recover the money that they stole during the war. And, yet, when anyone makes any criticism of the present Attorney General or his administration he comes back on the one hand with a pitiful denial, and in addition to that an accusation that everybody who criticizes him is undertaking to protect the war grafters who created the frauds during the war. Why, I remember—and so do you—when those investigating committees were appointed, when you came into power in the Sixty-sixth Congress, when you spent hundreds of thousands of dollars of the people's money in investigating the activities of the war under the Democratic administration; and when those investigating committees finally reported the majority members said there was plenty of evidence to send men to the penitentiary, that there was plenty of evidence that millions of dollars had been grafted, but that the then Attorney General, Mr. Palmer, would not investigate and would not prosecute these war grafters, but just to wait until the administration of President Harding and his great Attorney General, Mr. Daugherty, came into power, and they would send all the grafters to the penitentiary and sue them for the millions of money that they had grafted.

You have been in power over two years, and your Attorney General never would have come to Congress last session and asked for a $500,000 appropriation had it not been that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], two Republicans, gave notice on the floor that if he did not prosecute these war grafters and sue these people he would be impeached, and that alone brought him to Congress asking for $500,000 of the people's money. Now here he is asking for $500,000 more for investigation and $850,000 more for attorneys to give more faithful Republicans and lawyers jobs.

Mr. HUSTED. Oh, the gentleman is in error about that; that is not so. There is absolutely no increase for the attorneys.

Mr. KINCHELOE. What is this proposition on page 37?

For assistants to the Attorney General and to the United States district attorneys employed by the Attorney General to aid in special cases—

And so forth—

Eight hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

What is he going to do with that? You already have 30 Assistant Attorneys General on the pay roll under the $500,000 last year. You have 9 attorneys drawing $10,000 a year.

Mr. HUSTED. These men are used in other cases.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I will refer the gentleman to page 128 of the hearings, where it says that 9 attorneys are drawing $10,000 each, 1 attorney at $7,500, 2 attorneys $7,200 each, 1 attorney $7,000, 2 attorneys at $6,000, 3 attorneys at $5,000 each, 4 attorneys at $4,000 each, 1 attorney at $3,500, 1 attorney at $3,250, 5 attorneys at $3,000 each, and 1 attorney at $2,500; a total of $186,150. You are paying that amount for special attorneys out of the $500,000 appropriation passed last session of Congress.

Mr. HUSTED. I think the gentleman is laboring under an error.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I know I am not.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I was saying, the Attorney General would not have come to Congress asking for a dollar if he had not been threatened with impeachment. The representatives of the Department of Justice appeared before the Appropriations Committee May 14, 1921, two months after Daugherty went into power and advised that the investigation of the cantonments was still going on with only 30 men engaged in the work. It says: "They figure that it is now drawing to a close." That was two months after Daugherty had gone in. His representatives came before the Appropriations Committee and said that the investigation of the cantonments was drawing to a close. Of course, the Attorney General was fixing to quit. I do not say this because the Attorney General is a Republican. I say it because there are grafters in the country that made millions during the war when our boys were baring their breasts to the bayonets, and they were robbing this Government, and I do not care whether the grafter was a Republican or a Democrat he ought to be punished to the fullest extent of the law. [Applause.] But you know as well as I do that the Attorney General is not doing it, but he is expending $500,000 of the people's money and he has put but one man in the penitentiary, and collected practically nothing, if anything, from any war grafter.

They make the complaint that Palmer did not do it. I bear no brief for Palmer, but I am going to show what he did do, and he did more than his duty. Up to May 10, 1919, he, with the intelligence division of the War Department, investigated 10,058 cases. Five hundred and seven were arrested and 196 were convicted, and up to June 16, 1919, he collected $600,000 from war grafters. According to the Attorney General's report in 1920, 6,032 cases were investigated. There were 435 convictions in that year. In 1921, with eight months of Palmer and four months of Daugherty, there were 146 men convicted and $63,548 recovered.

Under Palmer, since the war and until he went out, there were 777 men convicted. Now, how many under the two years of Daugherty? As I say, if you criticize him you are either a liar or in collusion with the war grafters. That is what Daugherty says in his feeble answer to the charge of impeachment. Crime is running rampant all over the country now and he does not enforce the law.

The point I am making, the pathetic thing about it, is that the man at the head of this great Department of Justice of the United States of America, having under his control United States district attorneys, having 30 special assistant attorneys drawing $186,150 a year salaries, asks for $1,800,000 of the hard cash out of the Treasury in order to help him investigate, and he has sat around for two long years and has not recovered a dollar from the war grafters and has put only one man in the penitentiary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOODYKOONTZ].

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, the joint resolution which I have introduced providing that arrangement shall be made for a bugler to sound taps in the American military cemeteries in France reads thus:

Joint resolution authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to detail buglers to American military cemeteries in France in which are buried American soldiers who died in the service during the late war with Germany.

Whereas during the late war with Germany many thousands of American soldiers lost their lives in defense of their country; and

Whereas thousands of these soldiers are buried in what are known as American cemeteries in France; and

Whereas the memory and service of these fallen heroes for the Government of the United States should for all time be perpetuated: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to detail from the musicians in the Regular Army of the United States, through military channels, such buglers as may be required to perform the duties usually performed by such musicians at Regular Army posts, to serve at each American military cemetery in France. It shall be the duty of such buglers so detailed at evening of each day in the year to sound the call of taps over the graves of American soldiers in the cemeteries aforesaid. The said buglers shall receive pay for foreign service.

In the press recently it was stated that an American firm had constructed a candle 6 feet in circumference at the base, and of a considerable height which, it was intended, would be placed in a certain church in Italy in order to perpetuate the memory of Enrico Caruso. It was purposed that the candle should be lighted and burned on All Souls Day for 24 hours in each year, and it was estimated that so burned the candle would last for 1,800 years.

Caruso possessed the greatest tenor voice known to history, and therefore the reason for keeping his memory alive, as also in addition the religious significance of the ceremonial act.

In a few American military cemeteries in France lie sleeping 60,000—a mighty host—of our illustrious dead. Far from home and native land, these gallant soldiers who laid down their lives for their country await the resurrection morning. They are widely separated from friends and relatives. Only a few of the latter—and these at great intervals of time—will ever be privileged to visit their resting place.

It has seemed to me fitting that our Government, acting through the Department of War, at evening of every day that is to follow, in each of the great military cemeteries where these soldiers lie buried, should provide a bugler, whose duty it would be to sound "Taps."

In the joy of spring when the vernal breezes are blowing over their graves, in the gladness of summer when they are carpeted in living green, in the sadness of autumn when the turf upon them is dying, and in the gloom of winter when they are mantled with the deep snow, let the clear, beautiful, and hopeful notes of the bugle at evening be sent out over the great dead, just to relieve their loneliness and to remind them that they are not forgotten.

An author has said that there are few musical compositions held in deeper reverence than the bugle call known as the sounding of taps, when the day's work is done. The words written for the music are full of tenderness and sweetness. Allow me to repeat them:

Blow, bugles, blow—soft, and sweet and low,
Blow a "lights out" call for those who bravely faced the foe;
Taps will tell of truce to pain,
When they sleep nor wake again,
'Neath the sunshine or the rain,
Blow softly, bugles blow!

[Applause.]

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Did I understand the gentleman to say that there were 100,000 dead remaining in France? I think he must be mistaken, as a vast number have been brought back.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. There were 125,000 or 130,000 deaths; how many have been brought back I do not know.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. There are only about 60,000 dead left over there now.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to enter into the discussion of the merits or demerits of the proposed constitutional amendment on this question of exemption from taxation. It is a question that is being agitated a great deal, and I think it is a good thing always to have the real proposal considered by the public and not some imaginary proposal. Those who are insisting upon cutting out what they claim is an abuse of tax exemption, both by the States, municipalities, and by the Federal Government, at the time center their drive and use as their chief illustration two issues—one of United States bonds and the other of bonds of the Federal land bank system. Now, the press has carried to the country an intimation that this administration, through the President, has recommended, and that the Ways and Means Committee of the House has reported, a resolution that will cure the evils of which complaint is made, will give the relief desired and which these advocates want. I say I shall not discuss the merits of the amendment but point out what the proposed amendment does, whether it be wise or unwise. I have before me House Joint Resolution 314, introduced by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], and it reads:

SECTION 1. The United States shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of any State, but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of the United States or any other State.

SEC. 2. Each State shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived by its residents from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of the United States; but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of such State.

Gentlemen, even if the amendment be ratified by the requisite number of States, and I doubt it will be, it will not touch the alleged evil of which a great many of those advocating it are now complaining. The thing that these people are complaining of, if it is an evil as they allege—understand, I am not discussing the merits—does not require any constitutional amendment to remedy it.

For illustration: The issuance of securities by the United States Government now can be regulated by Congress, and in some instances the income is made subject to taxation. This Congress, if it thinks it wise and wants to do it, can take away from bonds issued at the time it provides for the issue an exemption from taxation. It can do that. Congress at the time it authorized the issuance of joint-stock land bank bonds and Federal land bank bonds could, if it wished, have made them subject to taxation. The thing that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] complained of—and that is the reason I take the floor—is that, as he was saying, you did not propose to correct the evil that is complained of, but all on earth that you propose to do, as intimated by the President's message, is to do that which I do not believe you can get a majority of the Republican side of the House to vote for when they understand it, and even if you submitted it you could not get a dozen States of the Union to ratify it, and that is to give to the Congress of the United States the power to tax out of existence the States, cities, and school districts of this Nation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. KLINE] a few minutes ago asked unanimous consent to revise the RECORD of to-day's proceedings by eliminating his name from a certain document read into the RECORD. No point of order was made when the Chair put the unanimous-consent request, which was granted. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from New York that these proceedings are a part of the proceedings of the House, and that the House alone has control over its RECORDS and Journals, and if it is to be effective it will have to be repeated when the House is in session. It is likely, and more than likely, that the consent of this committee would not be sufficient.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that we read the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE I—DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

Salaries: For Secretary of State, $12,000; Undersecretary of State, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, $7,500; Assistant Secretary, $5,000; Second and Third Assistant Secretaries, at $4,500 each; Director of the Consular Service, $4,500; officers to aid in important drafting work—8 at $4,500 each, 5 at $4,000 each, 15 at $3,500 each, 15 at $3,000 each, 17 at $2,500 each, to be appointed by the Secretary, any one of whom may be employed as chief or assistant chief of division or as chief of bureau, or upon other work in connection with the foreign relations; assistant solicitors of the department, to be appointed by the Secretary—1 $4,500 (who shall also represent the interests of the United States in all matters or investigations before the International Joint Commission created by the treaty of January 11, 1909, between the United States and Great Britain), 5 at $3,000 each, 2 at $2,500 each; chief clerk, who shall sign such official papers and documents as the Secretary may direct, $3,000; law clerks—1 $2,500, 2 at $2,250 each, 3 at $2,000 each; law clerk and assistant, to be selected by the Secretary to edit the laws of Congress and perform such other duties as may be required of them, at $2,500 and $1,500, respectively; 2 translators, at $2,100 each; private secretary to the Secretary, $2,500; private secretary to the Undersecretary, $2,000; clerk to the Secretary, $1,800; clerks—27 of class 4, 30 of class 3, 40 of class 2, 63 of class 1 (3 of whom shall be telegraph operators), 40 at $1,000 each, 10 at $900 each; lithographer, $1,400; chief messenger, $1,000; 8 messengers at $840 each; 27 assistant messengers at $720 each, 4 messenger boys at $420 each; packer, $720; 7 laborers at $660 each; 4 telephone switchboard operators at $720 each; chauffeur, $1,080; in all, $605,740.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on all of the paragraph, and I now make a point of order on that portion of the paragraph beginning on line 3 of page 2 and ending on line 5 which provides for an Undersecretary of State, to be appointed by the President, carrying a salary of $7,500 a year. I make the point of order that that is legislation on an appropriation bill that is unauthorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas reserves a point of order on the matter indicated.

Mr. HUSTED. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I make it as to the Undersecretary—the salary.

Mr. HUSTED. The paragraph is unauthorized by law, but I think it is a great mistake to make the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman think that the time has come when we must cease creating new offices, and rather than do that, is it not better that we take out some of those whom we have here who are surplus? I think the position referred to is surplus.

Mr. HUSTED. I think the salaries provided in the bill are reasonable. You will find that the estimates of the Secretary of State are the closest of any of the departments. That is the opinion of General Lord. They have been cut down. I do not think they have asked for anything unreasonable.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to call attention to the fact that we are giving the Secretary of State an Assistant Secretary at $5,000, and a Second and Third Assistant Secretary at $4,500 each, and then we are proposing to create this new Undersecretary.

Mr. HUSTED. That was carried in the bill last year.

Mr. BLANTON. I know; but it was a provision which I objected to at that time, and others objected to it. But it was brought in under a rule, if I remember correctly.

Mr. HUSTED. No; it was carried in the bill, and the gentleman from Texas made no objection to it.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, I did, and——

Mr. HUSTED. If the gentleman did, he withdrew it.

Mr. BLANTON. I think it ought to be stopped, Mr. Chairman, and I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas insists on his point of order as to the Undersecretary of State, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. BLANTON. Further, Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the gentleman from New York, under the reservation of the point of order, how many new positions are there among the solicitors of this department provided for in this bill? I direct the attention of the Chairman to lines 14 and 15. How many new assistant solicitors are allowed under this bill that are not authorized by law?

Mr. HUSTED. None.

Mr. BLANTON. None?

Mr. HUSTED. No.

Mr. BLANTON. All of these are allowed by law?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the reservation, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order, to conclude what I was discussing a moment ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to continue the discussion I was making on House Joint Resolution 314, on the question of exemption from taxation. I repeat I am not discussing the merits of the complaint against tax-exempt bonds, but I said this resolution will not meet the demands of the people who are back of this clamor to stop the issuance of tax-exempt securities.

Congress now has the power, if it deems it wise, to-day to provide taxation of these securities in every manner they wish except one. What is that? The issuance by the States themselves of their securities and exempting them from taxation. I repeat the statement I made awhile ago: Whether it be wise or unwise, I venture the assertion that when you face the bald proposition that you will amend the Constitution of the United States so that Congress can tax the bonds issued by the sovereign State of Illinois or the sovereign State of New York—that is, the income from these bonds—or that the Congress of the United States can tax the income on bonds issued for the erection of a schoolhouse in Iowa by a school district, those bonds to be retired by taxes levied by the people themselves on their own property in their districts; I say when you face that proposition I do not believe you will get a dozen thoughtful, level-headed Republicans, much less Democrats, to invade the local rights to that extent. And if you did do it, gentlemen, do you think you are going to get the requisite number of States to permit the Congress of the United States, the tax-levying agency of the Federal Government, to have unlimited exercise of the taxing power, which, as has been well said time and time again, is the power to destroy? I say, do you believe you are going to get the legislatures of the requisite number of States to make that step in surrendering the rights of States and municipalities to a centrally organized power at the seat of the Federal Government?

Now, my object in calling attention to that is this: If it be wise to stop the issuance of so many tax-exempt securities, do not meet that demand with an evasive proposition like this. If this administration and this Congress think it is wise to stop the issuance of tax-free securities, then the example for us to set, when we authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue United States bonds, is to say that we will make the income from them subject to taxation. But, gentlemen, you are not going to do that. So why try to deceive anybody? Why try to deceive these people who are advocating this? You have not advocated that. Of course, the advocacy of it by some people indicates that they are either totally ignorant of the philosophy of our dual system of Government, or else that they have a perfect contempt for our institutions and wish to overthrow them and set up instead a Government totally different from that which was founded by the fathers. If you want to start correcting this alleged evil, why did this Congress during its life in some instances grant tax exemption to private corporations when engaged in foreign business? If you are sincere in saying to the country through your President and through your support of this that you are going to stop this great evil, why did you the other day, when you passed the ship subsidy bill, grant as one of the special privileges of that bill exemption from taxation to the shipowners? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WINGO. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. That is the trouble with the country at this hour and that is the trouble with its viewpoint of Congress. You may give different reasons for the conduct of the electorate in the last two elections, apparently contradictory. I will tell you the one thing that is deeply rooted in the minds of the electorate of this country is the fear that we are planning in this body for the success of one side or the other in this House, that we are not thinking about the philosophy of government but thinking about the expediency of political campaign issues and what is going to get votes and what is not. So I insist that the Ways and Means Committee, a committee that has borne a reputation for considering public matters carefully and sincerely, shall bring in a bill which will repeal some of the Federal exemptions you have already granted and authorized for the future, if you are going to try to stop the issuance of tax-free securities, instead of coming in here saying that you are going to meet that difficulty by giving Congress the power to levy a tax upon States and municipalities and school districts that, as the President said, are improvident. I am sorry he said it. I am sorry he said that he thought the Federal Government could thereby check what he believes to be improvident expenditure by the States and municipalities. Have not Congress and the Federal Government all they can do in handling the problems of the Federal Government without attempting to be a supergovernment and to tell the States and municipalities and counties and school districts when and how they shall raise their revenues to be spent for their own local improvements? I am sorry the President of the United States ever gave such a reason for this kind of legislation in his utterances here the other day. If it is right, let us right it along the lines along which the greatest abuses are complained of and of which the Federal Government already has power. If municipalities overissue securities, the fault lies with the people in the community that is going to be taxed, and my observation has been that the taxpayers of every municipality, county, and State are pretty jealous of the proposition of issuing bonds; and I believe the reaction has started the other way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUSTED: Page 2, line 3, after the amount, "$12,000," insert: "Counselor for the Department, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, $7,500."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that the amendment is legislation on an appropriation bill that is unauthorized by law. I will state to the Chair that all of these positions in paragraph 1 are statutory positions. They are positions which have been created by substantive law; and to attempt to place in this paragraph any position that is not authorized in the statute is in effect substantive legislation. The chairman will not deny that. He knows that to be the fact.

Mr. HUSTED. The gentleman is incorrect, simply because he is not advised as to the facts. The point of order which the gentleman made at an earlier stage of the proceedings was good as against the change of title from counselor to Undersecretary. The State Department for some reason preferred to have the office called Undersecretary of State instead of having it called counselor for the department, as being a little more in conformity with diplomatic usage. But the legislative act of March 4, 1915, has this provision:

SEC. 6. The officers and employees of the United States whose salaries are herein appropriated are hereby established and shall continue from year to year to the extent they shall be appropriated for by Congress.

And then in the Department of State appropriation bill is the provision for the counselor for the department, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, $7,500.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I happened to be on the conference committee at the time the title was changed from counselor to Undersecretary of State. It was done by a Senate amendment and agreed to by the House, and my impression was that that change was made permanent law. Has the gentleman looked that up on the appropriation bill?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I was under the impression that it was permanent law.

Mr. HUSTED. The title was not made permanent law.

Mr. BLANTON. The point I was trying to get the gentleman to see was this: That one of the solicitors provided for in this paragraph takes the place of this counselor. In other words, you have a man filling the position of counselor under this bill.

Mr. HUSTED. No; the gentleman is quite mistaken. The office of Undersecretary of State is exactly the same office formerly held by the counselor for the State Department, and the counselor for the State Department was really the first man under the Secretary of State.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman hold that if this bill contains this appropriation for this Undersecretary, it does not contain more offices than are provided for by the act of 1915?

Mr. HUSTED. No more; no.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I admit that there is law for this position.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, there is statute law for the position of counselor for the State Department. When the war came on counselors got to hobnobbing with European diplomats, and because the European functionaries who performed duties similar to those of counselor under our system were called Undersecretaries of State they came around to the committees of Congress and insisted on the importance of the title being changed from counselor to Undersecretary of State. I made a point of order against the change in the title, but when the bill got over to the Senate the provision always went back in as "Undersecretary." But the duties of Undersecretary of State and that of the counselor are supposed to be identical. The Undersecretary has a little more entrée to the afternoon teas, and he has another ribbon on his shirt front after dinner when he goes to the reception, and in view of the importance of such things it has been futile to oppose the change of title. The duties are exactly the same, except that the Undersecretary is announced in a little louder tone of voice by the taxi callers when they call the carriages after the reception. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas withdraw his point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For temporary employees in the Department of State, $260,000: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $2,500 per annum and not more than eight persons shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the gentleman from New York a question. Are these lump-sum appropriations going to be continued with reference to the State Department?

Mr. HUSTED. I think they are very likely to be continued for some time.

Mr. GARNER. Why does not the Appropriations Committee take up the matter and appropriate as they do in other parts of the bill? It looks to me as if you could classify these clerks, give them the salary that the Appropriations Committee deems they ought to have, but instead of that you give them a lump sum and then limit them in the amount of the salary.

Mr. HUSTED. The object of retaining it in the present form is this: We hope to be able to get it down a little further before we make a general classification. We think it is a little better for Congress to know how many of these clerks are in the so-called temporary employment and how much they are paid.

Mr. GARNER. I call attention to it because there are so many lump-sum appropriations, and we hear the statement made in reference to every bill that the committee hopes to do away with it at the next session of Congress. It seems to me that the committee ought to attempt to figure out the number necessary and make the appropriations.

Mr. HUSTED. We have reduced them this year.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. It does not appear that there is any reduction in the bill. Two hundred and sixty thousand dollars—is not that the sum we appropriated last year?

Mr. HUSTED. There is a reduction in the total number of temporary employees, but perhaps not in this particular item.

Mr. GARNER. Wherever the salaries are the largest we make no reduction; if you have small salaries, then we make a reduction.

Mr. HUSTED. In this item we provide that not more than eight persons shall be paid in excess of $1,800, and none shall be paid at a rate of compensation greater than $2,500. So you can not pay any big salaries out of that appropriation.

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. SEARS. If I understand the gentleman, he stated that the appropriations might be made in this way among the employees—confessing my ignorance, may I ask the chairman of the subcommittee how many clerks are employed?

Mr. HUSTED. There are 5 clerks employed at a salary of $2,000, 187 at a salary ranging from $900 to $1,800, and 216 at a salary of $300 to $400.

Mr. SEARS. That statement is in the hearings and not in the bill. Members would have to go to the hearings to settle that.

Mr. HUSTED. As a matter of fact, the lump sum was imposed by the Appropriations Committee. They wanted it kept that way because they thought they could watch it better and be more apt to get some reduction.

Mr. GARNER. That is one more mistake that Congress made, probably.

Mr. HUSTED. It may be so.

The Clerk read as follows:

PASSPORT BUREAUS.

For salaries and expenses of maintenance, including rent outside the District of Columbia, of passport bureaus at New York City, N. Y.; San Francisco, Calif.; Chicago, Ill.; Seattle, Wash.; and New Orleans, La., $54,250.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Did the committee examine into the necessity for maintaining this bureau at Chicago, or did they have any hearings on that or go into it in any way? As I recall, that was added in the Senate.

Mr. HUSTED. We carried it here.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. What is the necessity for maintaining it? Is travel so heavy to Canada that it is necessary to keep a passport bureau there?

Mr. HUSTED. I remember last year when the department officials came before us they did not so strongly advocate the maintenance of separate passport bureaus, but now they say it would be a great mistake to abolish them, that it would cost the Government more money, and that they are needed for the convenience of the public. They say that it makes for actual reduction in expense.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Because they do it?

Mr. HUSTED. Because it is good administration.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I was anxious to know whether or not conditions had changed so as to make it possible to do away with these bureaus. It seems to me they are very expensive.

Mr. HUSTED. They are not expensive. The total amount of the appropriation is $54,450.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I suppose it reduces the work here on the local bureau.

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. When were these passport bureaus first established?

Mr. HUSTED. Either two or three years ago.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I suppose it was when the practice of issuing passports became general?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. So far as the gentleman knows, has the matter of curtailing that practice been given any consideration?

Mr. HUSTED. It has been given consideration, and I think that the Government hopes that the time will come in the not distant future when the practice may be given up. Apparently it can not be given up very well at the present time, and as a matter of fact the visé business is very profitable to the Government.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I understand that. My reason for asking the question is that there has been a very interesting discussion of the matter before a committee of which I happen to be a member. I had thought that very soon perhaps we might get rid of maintaining these bureaus by doing away with the work which they perform.

Mr. HUSTED. I think the Secretary of State told the subcommittee that was his personal view, but that it is impracticable to accomplish it at the present time.

The Clerk read as follows:

DIPLOMATIC SERVICE.

AMBASSADORS AND MINISTERS.

Ambassadors extraordinary and plenipotentiary to Argentina, Belgium, Brazil, Chile, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Peru, Spain, and Turkey, at $17,500 each, $227,500.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONNALLY of Texas: Page 4, line 20, strike out the word "Mexico."

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in order to effect a very substantial saving in this appropriation bill. Of course, this money will never be utilized if it is appropriated. It may be used to pay the ambassador, but it will never be utilized to avail the Government of the services of an ambassador to the Republic of Mexico. I very much regretted that I happened to be for the moment out of the Chamber when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] this afternoon, according to my information, explained the triumphs of American diplomacy in Mexico, Asia, and in Europe. I think it due to the gentleman to say that I was not absent in anticipation of his speaking, because I did not know that he was going to speak. I would have been delighted to hear him, as I always am. If the chairman of the committee has any information with reference to how soon this money will be utilized, I should be very glad to have him advise me.

Mr. HUSTED. It is entirely possible, of course, that it will not be utilized during the next fiscal year, but I think everyone hopes that it will be. Everyone hopes that the relations will be adjusted to such a basis as will permit us to appoint an ambassador. I think it would be unwise to strike it out, because if such a situation does arise it would be desirable to act at once, and it costs the Government no money to leave it in there.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Let me say in this connection that the Department of State two or three weeks ago handed out a rather elaborate statement to the newspapers in explanation of an incident that occurred in the Mexican Congress a short time ago. It seems that the American chargé in Mexico City, Mr. Summerlin, had been carrying on conversations with the minister of foreign affairs rather informally in such a way as to arouse resentment on the part of Mexican officials, and an incident occurred in the Mexican Congress expressing that resentment, and intimating that this Government, through its diplomatic officers, had been unduly concerned in the particular verbiage, the particular form, of a proposed act of the Mexican Congress relating to the subject of petroleum in Mexico.

The Department of State handed out a statement, and I shall ask permission to include it within my remarks, in which the department explained that it had not been unduly concerned, and yet admitted that it had been given to understand that its views with respect to the particular form of legislation which would be acceptable to this Government would not be unwelcome, and significantly added that the Mexican authorities wanted recognition. The inference was entirely plain that this Government would influence the action of Mexico by dangling before Mexico the alluring prospect of recognition if the Mexican Congress would enact specifically the kind of legislation referred to concerning oil concessions in the Republic of Mexico which would be satisfactory to the Department of State. I might suggest in this connection, and I understand the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] adverted to it in a general way, that the constitution of Mexico of 1917, in article 27, against which all of this assault has been made, refers in general terms to property of that character. It does not in terms appear to apply retroactively, but through an abundance of caution the Department of State and those oil concerns interested have feared that it would be construed retroactively. The President of Mexico, under his own hand, has given assurance that the Government of Mexico never intended it should be construed retroactively.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. But through the State Department the United States Government says, "But that is not in the form of a treaty," and this Government laid down the proposition that if that construction was to obtain this Government desired that that kind of a covenant should be placed in a treaty between the United States and Mexico. Of course, Mexico declined, not because of any lack of good faith but because it would create a political situation in the Republic of Mexico that would imperil the prestige and standing of the present administration. It is always a powerful irritant in Mexico to raise the issue of anti-Americanism, just as it was raised in the Congress over the incident which I mentioned a little while ago. Of course, President Obregon refused to execute a treaty, because at the least excuse a revolution breaks out in Mexico with almost as much frequency as insurgency does on the Republican side of this Chamber. The Supreme Court of Mexico, having similar functions to those of our own Supreme Court, has decided time and again in cases involving the construction of article 27 properly brought before it that article 27 of the constitution is not retroactive, and in no way endangers concessions of American citizens or other nationals in property granted before the adoption of the constitution of 1917. But after all of that the administration still withholds recognition; and that is the only question upon which this Government predicates its refusal to recognize the Republic of Mexico. That there is now in Mexico an existing Government that is capable of maintaining a fair degree of order and law and respect for property goes without question.

And yet, because the Republic of Mexico will not come up and take the formula, because it does not relish the prescription written by the Department of State here in Washington, recognition is withheld. Now, we have in our city a conference of the Central American powers. The Secretary of State invited them here for the purpose of cultivating good feeling among the Central American and South American Republics. The conduct of this Government toward the Government of Mexico will nullify anything that possibly could be gained in that respect. Mexico is the largest country of that particular group. It is not here, it is not represented around the council table, and you should not forget that each one of those countries has been well aware of that situation. Mexico is not recognized, and I do not believe it will be recognized irrespective of the kind of government in power, until it takes the formula to be prescribed by the Secretary of State, and that is to give an iron-clad assurance about the oil concessions in the Republic of Mexico.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will be very glad to yield.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman would not want the Government of the United States to recognize the Government of Mexico until Mexico is willing to protect American rights in Mexico?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Certainly not. If the gentleman had been paying as close attention to this as he does to the appropriation bills usually—and I commend him highly in that regard—he would have known from what I have already said that the President of Mexico has given solemn assurances over his signature that those rights would be respected and that the Supreme Court of Mexico not once or twice or thrice, not four times, but more than five times has decided that those rights are safe and that there is no danger whatever of confiscation under the constitution of 1917, provided the rights asserted were acquired before the adoption of that instrument.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I assumed that the gentleman would ask unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment because apparently the effect would be exactly what he does not desire.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Agent and consul general at Tangier, $7,500: Provided, That no salary herein appropriated shall be paid to any official receiving any other salary from the United States Government.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee in regard to this proviso. This proviso appears to be to the effect that no salary herein appropriated shall be paid to any official receiving any other salary from the United States Government. Do any of these officers receive any salary from any other Government as representatives of business concerns engaged in business in the countries to which they are accredited?

Mr. HUSTED. I am sure they do not.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It was considered that the provision was sufficient to limit their activities exclusively to the services of the Government?

Mr. HUSTED. I am quite sure of that.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHARGÉS D'AFFAIRES AD INTERIM.

For salaries for chargés d'affaires ad interim, $50,000.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section. Let me ask the chairman this: This item of $50,000 is for the purpose of paying secretaries and others who temporarily act as chargés d'affaires. Is that right?

Mr. HUSTED. Quite right.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Why can not they perform such duties without extra compensation? It is a part of their duties to act in the absence of the ambassador. Why is it necessary, because the ambassador may be absent, that they should have their salaries increased?

Mr. HUSTED. That has been the practice for many years. They are acting on the basis of ambassadorial or ministerial salaries for the time during which they perform that service.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The secretaries generally perform the duties of the ambassador when he is there as well as when he is absent, and I really do not think it is the part of economy to pay them an increase in salary——

Mr. HUSTED. The law authorizes it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Do I understand the gentleman to say these secretaries receive the same rate of pay when the ambassador is absent as the ambassador receives when he is present?

Mr. HUSTED. Fifty per cent of what the ambassador or minister would receive if present.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. In addition to his pay as secretary?

Mr. HUSTED. No; I think not.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I would rather know.

Mr. HUSTED. The law is, "for such time as any secretary of embassy or legation shall be lawfully authorized to act as chargé d'affaires ad interim, at the post to which he shall have been appointed or assigned, he shall be entitled to receive, in addition to his salary as secretary to embassy or legation, compensation equal to the difference between such salary and 50 per cent of the salary provided by law for the ambassador or minister at such post."

So you see he could not receive more than 50 per cent of the salary paid to the ambassador or minister, and the difference between the salary of the secretary and the salary of the minister or ambassador is not so great that 50 per cent would be a very considerable sum. It would not be a very large amount of money. You see it is only $50,000 for the entire service throughout the world.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Of course, that is the only item carried here. I offer the amendment; I do not care to argue it because it is useless. Here is a chance to make a real 100 per cent saving if anybody wants to do so. Now, if there is anybody on the Republican side, or the chairman over there, who really wants to make a saving and not increase anybody's duties, but only to increase the prestige temporarily of an official like this while his chief is away, here is a way and here is the time to save $50,000.

Mr. HUSTED. There is another argument that enters into that. Of course, when these men are acting as ambassadors or as ministers they are under greater expense than they are when they are merely acting as secretaries, and I think this allowance is only to provide for that additional expense. Of course, they will have to do things, socially and otherwise, that they would not be called upon to do if they were not in charge. If you strike that out, you would be doing a very great injury to the service. These men are appointed with the idea that they will receive this compensation in the event they are designated to act.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I do so in order to ask the gentleman a question. They are appointed, are they not, under the statute that you referred to?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. And would it not be the breaking of a contract and would it not be bad faith to deny them what they are entitled to by statute when they are appointed?

Mr. HUSTED. It would provide less compensation for them than they are justly entitled to receive.

Mr. DEMPSEY. They are entitled to it by statute, by the contract under which they are appointed, and you could not strike it out and still conform to the law. You would be legislating by striking it out?

Mr. HUSTED. Absolutely.

Mr. DEMPSEY. You are appropriating now strictly in accordance with the statute?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes. I think it would be an unwise thing to strike it out.

Mr. DEMPSEY. And if you struck it out without repealing the statute you would deny them what they are entitled to receive?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes. They could put in a claim.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. This is for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. This will not go into effect until July 1 of next year. If we see fit to reduce the salaries for the fiscal year 1924, we would not be interfering with the contracts. They could withdraw from the service.

Mr. HUSTED. They are pursuing a career in the service covering a series of years.

Mr. BLANTON. But only at the pleasure of the President.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. TILSON. We should not waste time in doing a perfectly futile thing. If we proceed to strike out this item without changing the law, these gentlemen will get the salary just the same, because they are entitled to it under the law. Of course, we can change the law here. An amendment will be in order under the Holman rule by which we can change the law. If, however, we simply strike out the appropriation and leave the law as it is, we have done a futile thing.

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman's idea is that they have a vested right to it in the absence of their chief?

Mr. TILSON. They have a statutory right to the money, because they will have earned it under the law in cases where the chief is absent.

I have no doubt in my own mind that they are entitled to it equitably, because, as has been said already, in the absence of their chiefs they are frequently called upon to entertain Americans and others who come there, and who must be shown some attention. It seems to me that it would be an unwise, an unfortunate, thing to strike it out at all, but to do it without repealing the law would be a useless performance.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendments are withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Turkish assistant secretary of embassy to Turkey, $4,000; Total, $415,875.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I notice that on page 8 there is a total sum of $730,000 appropriated for clerical and various and sundry other things, and on page 10 there is another allowance of $1,400,000 for allowance for clerk hire at consulates and things of that kind, and on page 12 there is another allowance of similar character of $300,000—making a total of about $3,000,000 for clerical help. I do not know what the situation may be; I have not read the hearings; but I recall when I happened to be a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and the appropriations were made for this service that the total appropriation was about $6,000,000. I notice now it is something like $14,000,000, although you have about the same number of ambassadors, and ministers, and the same number of consular representatives in foreign countries. It seems to me strange that in the course of 10 years, say, without increasing our representation in the way of ambassadors, and ministers, and consuls, you have increased the total appropriation almost 100 per cent. These items that I speak of are lump-sum appropriations. You can go and hire a dragoman, or a guard, or 40 guards, whatever you want, at any price you desire, and pay them out of these lump-sum appropriations. These items look to me as though they were too large, although I am not familiar with details. I mention it only because this is the first paragraph that carries items of this character for clerical offices.

Mr. TILSON. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] thinks the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] is correct, I take issue with the gentleman from New York. The gentleman from Texas is not correct. This has not been a growing appropriation.

Mr. HUSTED. The gentleman from New York did not say he was correct. He thought he was incorrect.

Mr. TILSON. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I am now sure that the gentleman from New York is correct. The gentleman from Texas does not take into account the fact that these appropriations carry a treaty payment of $5,000,000 for Colombia. If you take that out, and if you take out the $250,000 payment to Panama, for which we are under treaty obligations, you have the aggregate reduced to less than $10,000,000.

It seems to me that in view of the fact that we are required to send representatives to all of the small countries that were created by the treaty of Versailles and set up in different parts of the world, the increase has been very small indeed. The fact that it has been reduced below $10,000,000 is most creditable to the State Department.

Mr. GARNER. What increase has there been in the number of ministers and ambassadors in the last three years?

Mr. TILSON. I do not say "in the last three years," because three years ago these new countries had been set up.

Mr. GARNER. The treaty of Versailles is more than three years old.

Mr. HUSTED. There are quite a good many of them.

Mr. GARNER. How many?

Mr. TILSON. Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Albania, Egypt, Esthonia, Latvia—

Mr. SNYDER. Lithuania.

Mr. TILSON. Yes; Lithuania and a number of others that I can not call offhand without referring to some of the jawbreaking names.

Mr. HUSTED. I can give the gentleman the names.

Mr. TILSON. We have considerably increased the number.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLERKS AT EMBASSIES AND LEGATIONS.

For the employment of necessary clerks at the embassies and legations, who, whenever hereafter appointed, shall be citizens of the United States, $350,000; and so far as practicable shall be appointed under civil-service rules and regulations.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the necessity for the language "whenever hereafter appointed" in line 16. Why should they not be citizens of the United States whether appointed hereafter or now?

I move to strike out the language "whenever hereafter appointed."

Mr. HUSTED. I do not think there will be the slightest objection to that at the present time. It was put in there because it would have been manifestly unjust, at the time the language was originally inserted, to cover certain people already appointed and who were doing good work; but at this time I see no reason why it can not be done without injury.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. They have had 10 years' notice.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Have we not a number of clerks in Japan and China?

Mr. HUSTED. We have a number, but I think they have already been provided for.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I think they come under the other section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas offer an amendment?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I offer an amendment to strike out the language "whenever hereafter appointed," in line 16, page 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONNALLY of Texas: Page 6, line 16, strike out the words "whenever hereafter appointed."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For 15 student interpreters at the legation to China and the embassies to Japan and Turkey, who shall be citizens of the United States and whose duty it shall be to study the language of the country to which assigned with a view to supplying interpreters to the legation or embassy and consulates in such country, at $1,500 each, $22,500: Provided, That the method of selecting said student interpreters shall be nonpartisan: And provided further, That upon receiving such appointment each student interpreter shall sign an agreement to continue in the service as an interpreter at the legation, embassy, or consulate in the country to which assigned so long as his services may be required within a period of five years.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: On page 7, strike out lines 1 to 13, inclusive.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, each one of these $17,500-a-year ambassadors to China, Japan, and Turkey gets his proportion for secretarial hire out of the appropriation of $386,875. Then the ambassador to Japan is allowed a Japanese secretary at $5,500 a year. He is an interpreter. Then he is allowed an assistant Japanese secretary at $4,000 a year, who is an interpreter. So the ambassador to Turkey is allowed a Turkish secretary at $5,500 and an extra Turkish assistant at $4,000 a year. Then out of the appropriation of $350,000 there will be clerks in various proportions to each of these ambassadors. Again, we provide in this bill, as has been done for nearly 20 years, for 15 student interpreters, whom we pick up here and send to Japan and Turkey, where they are sent to school for three years. We pay them $1,500 apiece, and then we pay $350 a year for their tuition, and then in Japan we pay $1,200 a year for quarters. And what do we get out of them? If every young man in the United States had an equal chance at these positions I would not object; but these are partisan political appointments, and there is no duty connected with them if they do not want to give it afterwards. They go to school for three years, receive $1,500 a year salary, get this $350 for tuition, and this $1,200 for quarters. They are educated, and although they sign up an agreement when they begin that they will act as interpreters for at least five years, there is nothing in the contract that would hold them to it if they wanted to leave. They could break the contract at will. There is no penalty attached to it. If they all stayed in the service, we would have more than we need, because we have been providing for these same 15 student interpreters every single year for nearly 20 years. How long are we going to keep it up? It is just the same thing over and over again. When you get an item in an appropriation bill for one of these departments you are going to find that same item reappearing every year in every single estimate that comes in, whether it is needed or not. I maintain that we certainly ought to have interpreters by this time.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman from Texas yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. DEMPSEY. As I understand the gentleman, he says he would not object to this if it was nonpartisan.

Mr. BLANTON. I would not object to it so much, although I think it ought to be stopped.

Mr. DEMPSEY. What is the meaning of this provision in lines 7 and 8—that the method of selecting said student interpreters shall be nonpartisan.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the gentleman what does the English language mean?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Does it not mean just what it says?

Mr. BLANTON. Suppose the administration wanted to be nonpartisan by appointing no one except friendly Republican boys, it would be nonpartisan nevertheless.

Mr. DEMPSEY. No; that is assuming that they do not carry out in good faith the direction contained in this paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. Give me the name of one single Democrat who was appointed last year.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think you will find that during Woodrow Wilson's time——

Mr. BLANTON. Give me the name of one single Democrat among the 15 appointed last year. If the gentleman can do that I will withdraw my statement.

Mr. DEMPSEY. There were eight years of Democratic administration.

Mr. BLANTON. I am talking about the last year under the Harding administration. Name one Democrat.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman give me the name of one Republican who was appointed under the Wilson administration?

Mr. BLANTON. I doubt it. But my argument is just that much stronger, because they do not pay any attention to it. If there was a provision in here that they must be selected under the civil service it would be all right, but those words that the selection shall be nonpartisan mean nothing.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word simply to say that the gentleman's statement is made without any knowledge of the facts whatever, because he could not give the name of one Republican that was appointed.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. Our foreign service would be badly crippled if the provision for student interpreters were taken out. It is manifestly necessary to have men as clerks in our consulates and in our embassies who understand the foreign languages, the language of Japan and of Turkey and of China. The object of this provision is to educate men so that they will understand these languages. They are needed, they are useful; they probably never acquire a complete mastery of the language, but they do acquire enough to be helpful to the Government. They eventually find their way into the consular grades.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. KING. Why is it that only rich men's sons are appointed to these positions? It is not a question of policy; it is business.

Mr. HUSTED. So far as this provision is concerned, I think the gentleman is in error; but there are many rich men's sons appointed in the diplomatic grades for the reason that the Government does not pay enough money to permit a poor man's son to take the positions.

Mr. KING. They appoint these rich men's sons who want to have a good time.

Mr. HUSTED. They go out to serve the Government and not to have a good time; but we do not pay money enough to permit the son of a poor man to accept the position of diplomatic secretary. It is an outrage that it is not possible for a poor man's son to take up a diplomatic career. It ought to be possible, and I hope the Rogers bill, which is now pending before the Committee on Foreign Affairs, will become a law, so that it will be possible.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. How many young men have received the benefit of this provision?

Mr. BLANTON. Fifteen every year.

Mr. HUSTED. No; not as many as that. There are no more than needed in the service.

Mr. LONDON. How old is the law providing for the appointment of 15?

Mr. HUSTED. It is several years old; it has been carried for a good many years.

Mr. LONDON. For 10 years or more?

Mr. HUSTED. I should say so.

Mr. LONDON. Have we 100 or 150 men that have been benefited by the law?

Mr. HUSTED. I can not say how many; we have a lot of them in the consulates.

Mr. LONDON. This provision is designed to develop experienced men?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes; the men usually pass into the consular grades.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to read from the hearings a very brief statement for the benefit of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] as to whether his constituents, or anyone else who wishes, can get a chance under this provision. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] in the hearings asked Mr. Carr as follows:

Mr. HUSTED. What I wanted to get at was this: Have you more student interpreters than you really need to draw upon?

Mr. CARR. No; our difficulty is in getting enough. We have difficulty in getting men to come into this service and there are constantly requests from our missions in Japan and China and from all of our consulates out there for more students. A telegram came in about a week ago from the minister in Peking, asking for more student interpreters and stating that there was urgent need for more language-trained men.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. In answer to the gentleman from Connecticut I want to refer him to the gentleman from Illinois and to get the gentleman from Illinois to tell the gentleman from Connecticut the success he had when he tried to get an appointment for a poor boy from Illinois who happened to live in his district. He did not get the appointment because he was a poor boy and did not have the political pull. If the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, a Member of the House and of the present administration, could not get the position for this poor boy in his district, what chance would a Democrat in the South have with a Republican administration?

Mr. TILSON. Probably there were other reasons why the candidate did not succeed.

Mr. HUSTED. He was not denied an appointment because he was a poor boy.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES, FOREIGN MISSIONS.

To enable the President to provide, at the public expense, all such stationery, blanks, records, and other books, seals, presses, flags, and signs as he shall think necessary for the several embassies and legations in the transaction of their business, and also for rent, repairs, postage, telegrams, furniture, typewriters, including exchange of same, messenger service, compensation of kavasses, guards, dragomans, and porters, including compensation of interpreters, translators, and the compensation of and rent for dispatch agents at London, New York, San Francisco, and New Orleans, and for traveling and miscellaneous expenses of embassies and legations, and for loss on bills of exchange to and from embassies and legations, including such loss on bills of exchange to officers of the United States Court for China and payment in advance of subscriptions for newspapers (foreign and domestic) under this appropriation is hereby authorized: Provided, That no part of this sum appropriated for contingent expenses, foreign missions, shall be expended for salaries or wages of persons not American citizens performing clerical services, whether officially designated as clerks or not, in any foreign mission, $730,000.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice in the hearings that there was an estimate for a steam launch, $1,800, at Constantinople. It was not used last year nor the year before, and the witness was not sure whether it would be used this year or not. Is that appropriation continued in the bill?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes; it is. But it costs the Government nothing unless the launch is used.

Mr. JONES of Texas. They do not divert the appropriation to anything else?

Mr. HUSTED. No.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXPENSES OF CONSULAR INSPECTORS.

For the actual and necessary traveling and subsistence expenses of consular inspectors while traveling and inspecting under instructions from the Secretary of State, $25,000: Provided, That inspectors shall not be allowed actual and necessary expenses for subsistence, itemized, exceeding an average of $8 per day.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice in the phraseology of the proviso just read that the average is $8 per day. In two other items of the bill where we allow a per diem it is not an average, but it is $8 a day. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the subcommittee is the actual allowance for these men and subsistence an average of $8 a day? Can it, under this phraseology, amount to more than $8 for a single day?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes. It might amount to a great deal more, but it can not amount to more than an average of $8 a day. That is necessary because of the long distances these inspectors have to travel in visiting the consulates. It is absolutely necessary. They might run up a bill of $100 or $150 in two days for traveling expenses alone.

Mr. STAFFORD. But it can not exceed in any one year more than an average of $8 per day.

Mr. HUSTED. No.

The Clerk read as follows:

For allowance for clerk hire at consulates, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, $1,400,000. Clerks, whenever hereafter appointed, shall, so far as practicable, be appointed under civil-service rules and regulations.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the committee why the words "so far as practicable" are inserted in the bill. If the Consular Service is to be under the civil service, I do not understand why it should not be under it instead of "so far as practicable."

Mr. HUSTED. The consular agents, as the gentleman knows, are not usually Americans. As a matter of fact, it is not possible to get our citizens in some of these small places where we need a representative to render some consular service of a slight character.

Mr. DENISON. I am referring now to clerks, page 10, line 8.

Mr. HUSTED. I may not know all the reasons why that language was inserted, but apparently it is not always practicable to have that done.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman think it is practicable to have a civil-service examination for a clerk to assist a deputy consul in Patagonia or in the Fiji Islands?

Mr. DENISON. It is either practicable or it is not practicable. If it is not, we ought to take out the language and not make it apply to some and not to others.

Mr. HUSTED. There may be and evidently are some situations in which it is not practicable to hold an examination.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Might not this situation arise, from time to time, where temporary help is needed, and where it would be utterly impracticable to have an examination for temporary help?

Mr. DENISON. I am not able to state about that.

Mr. HUSTED. I think the gentleman's question is pertinent. I do not think I can give him an entirely satisfactory answer. I know no more about it than what the language would suggest to me, and that is that there are some situations where it is not practicable, and they ask that that language be included to permit them to dispense with the examination in certain cases.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I do not know that I can add any information, but having lived for about 8 or 10 years in Latin American countries, I know that, as the chairman of the committee says, there are many out-of-the-way places, where the salary is very small and the duties not at all onerous, and I think there would be certain places where it would be highly advisable to dispense with the civil-service requirements.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. If the gentleman from Illinois will turn to page 43 of the hearings, he will find the following:

> The visēing work, since the 3 per cent law has gone into operation, has not occupied all of the time of the men in some of the consulates, in perhaps the majority of the consulates, so that it has seemed to us better to reduce that visēing fund gradually and take the part-time men onto the regular clerk fund as clerks in the consulates and put the whole-time men onto the visēing fund.

In other words, what I suggested to the gentleman from Illinois is obviously the case, that they have part-time men as well as full-time men, and it would not be practicable to have a civil-service examination for the men who work only part of the time.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I think that is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES, UNITED STATES CONSULATES.

For expenses of providing all such stationery, blanks, record and other books, seals, presses, flags, signs, rent (so much as may be necessary), repairs to consular buildings owned by the United States, postage, furniture, including typewriters and exchange of same, statistics, newspapers, freight (foreign and domestic), telegrams, advertising, messenger service, traveling expenses of consular officers and consular assistants, compensation of Chinese writers, loss by exchange, and such other miscellaneous expenses as the President may think necessary for the several consulates and consular agencies in the transaction of their business and payment in advance of subscriptions for newspapers (foreign and domestic) under this appropriation is hereby authorized, $969,500.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question of the chairman. Has his subcommittee or the full committee ever had presented to it, or has it considered, the desirability of making an appropriation for our foreign offices, consular and ministerial, to take care of American citizens who happen to be stranded at the ports? I had a case presented to me in which some American citizens were quite unfortunate. They had their grips stolen from them in one of the foreign ports and in the grips were their railroad tickets and money, and they had nothing left and could not get any assistance from our representatives there, the consulate or the embassy. On the other hand, some other countries I might mention have in a way provided for that situation. Has that matter ever been considered by the committee?

Mr. HUSTED. Oh, yes, it has, and the very next item in the bill provides $200,000 for that purpose.

Mr. DENISON. But that is for stranded seamen.

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. I am speaking of American citizens, business men or tourists, who happen to be there and who are left in an unfortunate situation by accident or other matters over which they have no control.

Mr. HUSTED. There is nothing for them.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Has the gentleman considered the language on page 10—> and such other miscellaneous expenses as the President may think necessary.

Does not the gentleman think that would perhaps be available for meal tickets and return tickets and things of that kind?

Mr. DENISON. I have taken the matter up with the State Department and they have advised me that they have no funds provided for that purpose. I am only inquiring whether the committee has ever considered the advisability or the desirability of making provision for a situation of that kind.

Mr. HUSTED. Of course, that would be a legislative question and could not probably be taken up by our committee, but I take it the policy of the Government is only to extend relief to shipwrecked seamen and not to provide it for individuals. Of course, anybody might go over there and spend their money and then go to the Governemnt and apply for funds to get home. I do not think the Government ought to go into the business of relieving people of that kind.

Mr. DENISON. Of course, the statement of the gentleman from New York that the matter is a legislative question and not one properly for his committee does not just exactly coincide with the facts, because the Appropriations Committee is constantly bringing in legislative propositions in its bills.

Mr. HUSTED. Oh, we are not. The gentleman will not find a legislative proposition in this bill, nor in the bill of last year.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I compliment the gentleman from New York for that splendid showing, and only wish other appropriation subcommittees could show as much.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST ALLOWANCES TO DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR OFFICERS.

To enable the President, in his discretion and in accordance with such regulations as he may prescribe, to make special allowances by way of additional compensation to diplomatic and consular officers and consular assistants and officers of the United States Court for China in order to adjust their official income to the ascertained cost of living at the posts to which they may be assigned, $150,000.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York to what officers accredited to particular countries were these allowances made the last year?

Mr. HUSTED. Is the gentleman referring to post allowances?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUSTED. I think they were made in China; in fact, I know they were made there, and in some of the Balkan countries, and I think some places in South America.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this is a very reprehensible practice of legislating in this way and of making appropriations in such a manner as to authorize the Department of State to absolutely vary the amounts of money fixed by Congress as compensation of diplomatic and consular officers throughout the world. Now, of course, I know the plea upon which justification is sought is that it is the desire of the Government to adjust the compensation to the cost of living. The cost of living is the basis of the plea of anybody who wants his salary raised. Every clerk who comes and wants his salary raised bases it on the plea of the increase in the high cost of living. The United States officers in China, of course, have made the argument for getting this post allowance, which is an addition to their salaries, on the ground that it costs more in China to live than anywhere else. But it is also based upon the claim that they lose in exchange. You will find in this bill the committee has provided that the Department of State has the privilege of giving to the officers of the United States Court in China what they call "loss in exchange."

They say silver is the basis of the money in China and that Chinese silver, on account of the war and all that kind of business, is so much higher than the United States standard of value that they lose by reason of exchange, and so the bill provides that the Department of State, whenever the diplomatic officers in China or officers of the United States Court in China make complaint about the rate of exchange, the Department of State may reach over into the Treasury and hand out a largess. But that is not enough. In this item of the bill the Government of the United States is appropriating $150,000 a year out of which the Department of State can increase the compensation of any diplomatic officer of this Government or that of any minister or consul at its own pleasure and the Congress can not help itself.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman will find a statement, so far as there is a statement regarding allowances made last year, on pages 54 and 55. The statements are quite incomplete, because they do not show anything like the disbursements.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Why not?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I am stating simply the fact that they do not show anything like the disbursements of the appropriation, but they do show a certain number of disbursements, as, for instance, South Africa and China are among the places. The gentleman, I think, will find quite interesting reading here, so far as it goes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I have not read that particular hearing, but I have been in touch with this situation for some years because the committee of which I am a member formerly made these appropriations. They made complaint on account of the war. Now the war is four years away from us, and in most of the foreign countries, on account of the exchange situation, living is cheaper than in the United States, and yet we continue to make a $150,000 appropriation each year, and I submit it is not sound, I submit it is not good legislation, I submit it is contrary to established rules against lump-sum appropriations so eloquently enunciated on the floor of this House by gentlemen on both sides of the aisle. It simply gives the Secretary of State and those under him power to handle these sums of money in such a way as to discriminate even between employees of the department and more especially discriminate against the Treasury of the United States. If salaries are not sufficient they ought to be increased.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation has been run down from a total of $700,000 in 1919 to $200,000 for the current fiscal year, and we have made a further reduction of $50,000, so it has been brought down from $700,000 to $150,000. I agree with the gentleman from Texas absolutely under normal conditions that it would be bad practice to allow these salaries to be increased at the will of the Secretary of State, but I think it would be a great mistake if we cut out this entire appropriation at the present time, because the gentleman from Texas must know and everybody else in the committee must know that there are conditions actually existing in certain parts of the world which would make the statutory salary grossly inadequate, and simple justice requires that they shall be increased in this or some other way. In some cases the cost of living has increased fully 100 per cent.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. And the director of consulates makes these statements as showing the necessity for it. He says:

> I think the full allowance is very necessary. For my own comfort I wish it had never existed.

Mr. HUSTED. Of course.

Mr. DEMPSEY. He says it does not increase the salaries in the cases where allowances are made to an amount to offset the increased cost of living, and he says the allowances are made in almost all cases to men with small salaries. There have been only a very few instances where they have been made to men with large salaries.

Mr. HUSTED. Yes; and the average amount paid from this fund to any one individual has been very small.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes; from $1,200 to $1,500 at the outside.

Mr. HUSTED. That is the largest one; the average is about $250.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I will oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. HUSTED. I yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I notice there is an item on page 13 of $3,000 to purchase land at Mukden, China, for consular purposes. I wish the chairman of the committee might give to the House the benefit of such information as he has about that item, so that the House may know whether it is voting intelligently on this subject or not. Tell us what is the purpose, and whether the land has any buildings or not, and whether it is proposed to erect a building.

Mr. HUSTED. That land is sought to be acquired for consular purposes.

Mr. DENISON. I suppose that is true, of course, from the language used.

Mr. HUSTED. I want to explain it to you. Here is what Mr. Carr has to say about it, on page 52 of the hearings:

> I would like to explain that purchase of land at Mukden. Several years ago the Chinese authorities set apart a certain section in the new part of Mukden for consular quarters of the different governments, and they offered to us an option on a plot of ground there. We had, of course, no money with which to buy it. We recommended an appropriation by Congress for a building there a number of years ago; Congress did not see fit at that time to appropriate the money; and the matter ran along and was practically lost sight of.
> And then there was a likelihood that the option would be canceled; and our consul, desiring not to have that done, conferred with the representative of a business concern there about it. That gentleman put up the money to acquire the property. Now, we can get title to that property for the United States for within $3,000 gold. The property is probably worth $25,000 or $50,000, according to my best information; it is a very excellent site for a consular building, and it would be a great pity not to acquire it. It is an excellent business investment, and apparently it is the general policy of Congress to erect buildings for our diplomatic and consular offices so far as is consistent with our financial resources.

Mr. DENISON. Well, Mr. Chairman, I hope the reading of this statement of Doctor Carr into the RECORD will bring to the attention of the Members of the House and the Congress and the country the condition that exists, which I think has too long been neglected by our Government, and which, I think, is a disgrace to our Government; a condition under which the Government is unable or unwilling to buy a little office for our consulate, and an American citizen, who happens to be in business there, has to come forward and advance the money for the acquisition of a consular building which is badly needed.

I think, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the Committee on Appropriations ought to get busy on this question of securing proper buildings and quarters for our consular officers and for our embassies in foreign countries, so that the representatives of this great Government will have some place in which to live and some place in which to transact the Government's business in foreign ports. That matter has been too long neglected. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL BOUNDARY COMMISSION, UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

To enable the President to perform the obligations of the United States under the treaties of 1884, 1889, 1905, and 1906 between the United States and Mexico, including not to exceed $900 for rent, $30,713.50.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I would like to state to the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of this bill that I am pleased to see an item here of $30,713 for the United States-Mexico Boundary Commission. This is very essential and timely. As I recall under a Democratic administration we provided the sum of $50,000 for this commission, and I believe this amount to be needed at the present time. However, I am glad to know that the Secretary of State, after considerable importuning from myself and the people of my home city of El Paso, has appointed a boundary commissioner to represent this country in all landed disputes with Mexico and other questions affecting the boundary between the two countries. Certainly at the present time and until Mexico is recognized no definite agreement can be reached by the commissioners of the two countries, but in case of a change in the river, which might change the boundary, our commissioner could be on the ground, and have surveys made, and get data that would avail our country at such time when Mexico should be recognized.

Now, gentlemen, relative to the recognition of Mexico, which has been so loudly demanded by certain gentlemen on this floor, and one especially, who preceded only a few minutes ago, and who from time to time for the past year in speeches here has demanded the unconditional recognition of Mexico by this Government, permit me to state that as a citizen of this country I would welcome a recognition of Mexico to-morrow if it were brought about in the proper manner. If that country would give sufficient guaranties of protection to the lives and properties of Americans residing there and rescind its confiscatory laws. Has she done it? No. Will she do it? That is to be seen. So much has been said about that stable government down there, and her splendid constitution, and its great guaranties of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness to its citizens, and all within her gates. Well, I happen to hold in my hand this remarkable document, the constitution of 1917, formulated and ordained by Venustiano Carranza, and by its side in deadly parallel, the constitution of 1857, which I believe was adopted under the able administration of that patriotic statesman and patron saint of Mexico, Benito Juarez.

In the very first preamble of the constitution of 1857 we find these significant words, "In the name of God and by the authority of the Mexican people." Not the slightest reference to God in the Carranza-Obregon constitution of 1917; and the failure was not unintentional, as I will show later. I believe in the Christian religion; so do you, I trust. In Article III, clause 2, of the Carranza-Obregon constitution of 1917 I quote as follows: "No religious corporation nor minister of any religious creed shall establish or direct schools of primary instruction." Does it stop there? Oh, no! In Article XXIV, clause 2, Carranza-Obregon constitution of 1917, I quote the following: "Every religious act of public worship shall be performed strictly within the places of public worship, which shall be at all times under governmental supervision." If I interpret correctly, it means that no religious service can be conducted outside of a church, no religious service in the home or on the street, and the Mexican Government will demand and direct the kind to be conducted. And is that all? Oh, no! We read on page 19, clause 2 of the latter part of Article XXVII, as follows:

II. The religious institutions known as churches, irrespective of creed, shall in no case have legal capacity to acquire, hold, or administer real property or loans made on such real property; all such real property or loans as may be at present held by the said religious institutions, either on their own behalf or through third parties, shall vest in the nation, and anyone shall have the right to denounce property so held. Presumptive proof shall be sufficient to declare the denunciation well-founded. Places of public worship are the property of the nation, as represented by the Federal Government, which shall determine which of them may continue to be devoted to their present purposes. Episcopal residences, rectories, seminaries, orphan asylums, or collegiate establishments of religious institutions, convents, or any other buildings built or designed for the administration, propaganda, or teaching of the tenets of any religious creed shall forthwith vest, as of full right, directly in the nation, to be used exclusively for the public services of the Federation or of the States, within their respective jurisdictions. All places of public worship which shall later be erected shall be the property of the nation.

III. Public and private charitable institutions for the sick and needy, for scientific research, or for the diffusion of knowledge, mutual aid societies or organizations formed for any other lawful purpose shall in no case acquire, hold, or administer loans made on real property, unless the mortgage terms do not exceed 10 years. In no case shall institutions of this character be under the patronage, direction, administration, charge, or supervision of religious corporations or institutions, nor of ministers of any religious creed or of their dependents, even though either the former or the latter shall not be in active service.

You will see that all places of religious worship are declared the property of the nation, likewise all charitable institutions for the sick and destitute, scientific research, and of learning are prohibited from acquiring or holding property for a period exceeding 10 years, and in no case can these latter institutions be under or directed by religious institutions. Now, it would seem that this would be "out-Leninning" Lenin, in blotting out religious freedom, for we find as a part of article 130 of this Magna Charta of Mexican liberties the following:

The law recognizes no juridical personality in the religious institutions known as churches.

Ministers of religious creeds shall be considered as persons exercising a profession and shall be directly subject to the laws enacted on the matter.

The State legislatures shall have the exclusive power of determining the maximum number of ministers of religious creeds, according to the needs of each locality. Only a Mexican by birth may be a minister of any religious creed in Mexico.

No ministers of religious creeds shall, either in public or private meetings or in acts of worship or religious propaganda, criticize the fundamental laws of the country, the authorities in particular, or the Government in general; they shall have no vote, nor be eligible to office, nor shall they be entitled to assemble for political purposes.

And in pursuance of this clause in this constitution, in the State of Oaca, in the southern part of the Republic, the number of ministers of religion has been curtailed to six in the entire State, having a population of at least a half million. The humblest citizen of our country can criticize its laws and its rulers without let or hindrance, but a minister of the gospel can not do so in Mexico. If he does, he goes to jail. And you will find in other parts of this remarkable document that only a Mexican by birth can be a minister of any religious creed in Mexico, nor can any minister vote, hold office, or assemble for any political purpose.

Now, I am a Democrat, but I trust I am not a partisan to the extent of being unfair to those of the opposite party. Secretary Hughes has been criticized repeatedly by gentlemen on this floor for failure to recognize Mexico. Well, let me say to all such gentlemen that the able Secretary of State has not originated any new policy; he is simply walking in the same path trodden by his predecessor, Mr. Colby, and reaffirming the doctrine laid down by Mr. Norman H. Davis, the Acting Secretary of State during the latter part of Wilson's administration; and, let me further add, one of the ablest men that ever held that position, and as bright and scintillating a mind as I ever walked into the presence of. He stated to me in person once when I called to discuss the Mexican situation with him that if his policy was carried out, and he had so informed the Mexican authorities, that Mexico would be recognized when she agreed in writing to protect American lives and property, and repeal her confiscatory laws as to American property, and modify the iniquitous section 27 of the constitution of 1917.

Now, if I understand the position of Mr. Hughes correctly, this is exactly what he requires. I say more power to the strong arm of the present Secretary of State. [Applause.] Let us not have any namby-pamby, dillydallying, note-writing, equivocating policy this time. Let them understand that Americans must be treated as well on that side of the Rio Grande as Mexicans are treated on this side. There are 475,000 Mexicans residing in the United States and 10,000 Americans in Mexico. There were 75,000 Americans in Mexico when Carranza became President, but they have been driven out and murdered until there are 10,000 left, and still we are told that the present Government of Mexico, as far as Americans are concerned, is a shield and an anchor, "a pillow of cloud by day and a Kansas prairie fire by night," to lead them on and protect them in their lives and property.

Now, my friends, a certain gentleman, who probably never wet his feet in the Rio Grande in all the days of his life, will get on this floor almost daily and assume to tell you all about conditions in Mexico, and describe all the characteristics of the Mexican people, and hollo his head off for immediate recognition, and criticize and give the present administration "unshirted hades" because it has not embraced Mexico and swallowed article 27 and its socialistic constitution, head, hide, and hair, not omitting the tail. Now, my friends, I do not hesitate to criticize a Republican, or a Republican administration, if I think he or it deserves it.

I do not know all about Mexico by any means, but I feel I have some little personal knowledge. I have traveled over the country. I have dealt with the Mexican commercially; I have broken bread with him; I have practiced in the courts a little; I have ridden the range with him; I have conversed with him upon various topics in his own tongue; I have mingled with the men in all walks of life, and in other days, when these silver locks were more of the auburn tint, I have tripped the "light fantastic" and whirled the dark, dreamy-eyed señoritas to the south of the Rio Grande through the giddy-glide waltz to the soul-stirring and heart-soothing strains of "Aboja la Solas" and "La Paloma," and I tell you, gentlemen, it is my experience that in order to insure absolute compliance with all contracts with the Dons, the Juans, and the señors beyond the shining Rio Grande you must have him where he can not squirm, twist, nor shiver.

Now, a great deal has been said by gentlemen advocating immediate recognition that article 27 does not confiscate American property. Well, I am going to read it to you here and let you pass judgment.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman from Texas insert it in his remarks?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will.

And it was further claimed by a gentleman a few minutes ago that the supreme court of Mexico has held that this article was not retroactive. It is true it did hold that in the Texas Company case, as applying to its lands and its rights, but, unfortunately, a supreme court decision in Mexico in a certain case only extends to that particular case and is not like our Supreme Court decisions—a precedent for all similar questions and cases. It might, and probably would, reverse itself in the very next case that comes up involving retroactive legislation and confiscation of property under this article. Can they confiscate? Well, they have done it in many instances. Recently an American citizen, Marion C. Dyer, suffered confiscation of all his lands in the State of Durango. The Corralitos Cattle Co., owned by Americans having large landed interests in the State of Chihuahua, about a year ago had their lands lying along the watercourses confiscated by the State government—squatters got upon them—their cattle driven away, and many perished for water and sustenance. "Oh," the Mexican Government replies, "we will pay you for the land we take in agrarian bonds—in other words, State bonds." Well, no one has ever seen one of those bonds up to this good hour, and in my judgment no one ever will; but if they were issued and delivered they would not be worth the paper they were printed upon.

Now, in pursuance of this article 27, they have passed in many States what is known as the "Idle land law," which operates as follows: Say my friend, Congressmen HADLEY, there, an American, was farming in Mexico; he has 80 acres in wheat and 10 acres in a meadow for his milch cows and work horses to graze upon. Along comes a Mexican citizen, probably a goat herder, and he says to a municipal authority, or a justice of the peace, as provided herein: "Señor HADLEY is not cultivating all that land; he has 10 acres of idle land." "All right," says the judge, "You take HADLEY'S land and cultivate it." No bond required for protection of property. The Mexican goes on HADLEY'S land, he gathers the wheat and sells and appropriates the proceeds. He pays HADLEY 5 per cent of the crop, unless HADLEY furnishes him a home to live in, cows to milk, and teams and implements to work and harvest the crop, then he pays HADLEY the magnificent sum of 10 per cent. After harvesting and disposing of the crop, he turns the land back to HADLEY, if HADLEY has not been run across the Rio Grande, in the meantime, and goes back to his goats. Do you men want to immediately rush pell mell into a recognition of that kind of a government? Many of you shake your heads, and many more of you will shake them, when I get through reading and expostulating upon this remarkable document.

Again, my friends, let me remind you, as you well know, the President of the United States can not expel a foreigner from this country without said foreigner has been decreed to be an undesirable citizen, a dangerous person, a menace to society and to this Government by some tribunal of competent jurisdiction. If he attempted to do so, every Federal court from the Rio Grande to the Canadian boundary would be resorted to to prevent it. The president of Mexico, upon his mere ipsi dixit, can expel a foreigner without any court procedure whatsoever when he may deem the presence of said foreigner inexpedient, and I read the latter part of article 33 of the constitution of 1917:

> The executive shall have the right to expel from the Republic forthwith, and without judicial process, any foreigner whose presence he may deem inexpedient.

If an American goes into Mexico to acquire land, what does he have to do? First, say that he is a Mexican with respect to such property, and agree before the department of foreign affairs that he will not invoke the protection of his government with respect to same, and in case of breach, a penalty of forfeiture of said property. And in a certain zone, within 100 kilometers—about 75 miles—from the frontiers, and 50 kilometers—about 40 miles—from the sea, no foreigner can, under any conditions, acquire land.

Now, my friends, is this all there is in this remarkable constitution? No; let us see about religious institutions and churches owning and acquiring property in Mexico. I say this, that the property of churches and religious institutions is under this constitution confiscated and declared the property of the nation. Some of my colleagues look a little skeptical at this unusual and astounding statement. Well, I will read you the exact language, and let you draw your own conclusion. But before I do, let me state that it is my understanding that this constitution of 1917 was patterned largely after the Bolshevik constitution of Russia. I do not know that to be a fact, but I do know that the true theory of Bolshevism is diametrically opposed to all religion and all religious exercises. Now, read this constitution as to ministers of religion, as to religious meetings, as to schools under religious institutions and as to churches acquiring property, and draw your own conclusions.

Now I am going to insert all of article 27, and I call your especial attention to title 2, relative to confiscation of church property and vesting title in the nation. And no supreme court, or decision of one in Mexico, has ever declared this section unconstitutional or that it was not retroactive in its provisions. And right under it I will insert article 27 of the constitution of 1857 for comparison—one promulgated by a statesman, the other by a socialist:

(Constitution of 1917, art. 27—Carranza-Obregon.)

ART. 27. The ownership of lands and waters comprised within the limits of the national territory is vested originally in the nation, which has had and has the right to transmit title thereof to private persons, thereby constituting private property.

Private property shall not be expropriated, except for reasons of public utility and by means of indemnification.

The nation shall have at all times the right to impose on private property such limitations as the public interest may demand, as well as the right to regulate the development of natural resources, which are susceptible of appropriation, in order to conserve them and equitably to distribute the public wealth. For this purpose necessary measures shall be taken to divide large landed estates; to develop small landed holdings; to establish new centers of rural population with such lands and waters as may be indispensable to them; to encourage agriculture and to prevent the destruction of natural resources; and to protect property from damage detrimental to society. Settlements, hamlets situated on private property, and communes which lack lands or water or do not possess them in sufficient quantities for their needs shall have the right to be provided with them from the adjoining properties, always having due regard for small landed holdings. Wherefore all grants of lands made up to the present time under the decree of January 6, 1915, are confirmed. Private property acquired for the said purposes shall be considered as taken for public utility.

In the nation is vested direct ownership of all minerals or substances which in veins, layers, masses, or beds constitute deposits whose nature is different from the components of the land, such as minerals from which metals and metalloids used for industrial purposes are extracted; beds of precious stones, rock salt, and salt lakes formed directly by marine waters; products derived from the decomposition of rocks when their exploitation requires underground work; phosphates which may be used for fertilizers; solid mineral fuels; petroleum and all hydrocarbons—solid, liquid, or gaseous.

In the nation is likewise vested the ownership of the waters of territorial seas to the extent and in the terms fixed by the law of nations; those of lakes and inlets of bays; those of interior lakes of natural formation which are directly connected with flowing waters; those of principal rivers or tributaries from the points at which there is a permanent current of water in their beds to their mouths, whether they flow to the sea or cross two or more States; those of intermittent streams which traverse two or more States in their main body; the waters of rivers, streams, or ravines when they bound the national territory or that of the States; waters extracted from mines; and the beds and banks of the lakes and streams hereinbefore mentioned, to the extent fixed by law. Any other stream of water not comprised within the foregoing enumeration shall be considered as an integral part of the private property through which it flows; but the development of the waters when they pass from one landed property to another shall be considered of public utility and shall be subject to the provisions prescribed by the States.

In the cases to which the two foregoing paragraphs refer the ownership of the nation is inalienable and may not be lost by prescription. Concessions shall be granted by the Federal Government to private parties or civil or commercial corporations organized under the laws of Mexico only on condition that said resources be regularly developed and on the further condition that the legal provisions be observed.

Legal capacity to acquire ownership of lands and waters of the nation shall be governed by the following provisions:

I. Only Mexicans by birth or naturalization and Mexican companies have the right to acquire ownership in lands, waters, and their appurtenances or to obtain concessions to develop mines, waters, or mineral fuels in the Republic of Mexico. The nation may grant the same right to foreigners, provided they agree before the department of foreign affairs to be considered Mexicans in respect to such property, and accordingly not to invoke the protection of their governments in respect to the same, under penalty in case of breach of forfeiture to the nation of property so acquired. Within a zone of 100 kilometers from the frontiers and of 50 kilometers from the seacoast no foreigner shall under any conditions acquire direct ownership of lands and waters.

"II. The religious institutions known as churches, irrespective of creed, shall in no case have legal capacity to acquire, hold, or administer real property or loans made on such real property; all such real property or loans as may be at present held by the said religious institutions, either on their own behalf or through third parties, shall vest in the Nation, and anyone shall have the right to denounce property so held. Presumptive proof shall be sufficient to declare the denunciation well founded. Places of public worship are the property of the Nation, as represented by the Federal Government, which shall determine which of them may continue to be devoted to their present purposes. Episcopal residences, rectories, seminaries, orphan asylums, or collegiate establishments of religious institutions, convents, or any other buildings built or designed for the administration, propaganda, or teaching of the tenets of any religious creed shall forthwith vest, as of full right, directly in the Nation, to be used exclusively for the public services of the federation or of the States within their respective jurisdictions. All places of public worship which shall later be erected shall be the property of the nation.

"III. Public and private charitable institutions for the sick and needy, for scientific research, or for the diffusion of knowledge, mutual-aid societies, or organizations formed for any other lawful purpose shall in no case acquire, hold, or administer loans made on real property, unless the mortgage terms do not exceed 10 years. In no case shall institutions of this character be under the patronage, direction, administration, charge, or supervision of religious corporations or institutions, nor of ministers of any religious creed, or of their dependents, even though either the former or the latter shall not be in active service.

"IV. Commercial stock companies shall not acquire, hold, or administer rural properties. Companies of this nature which may be organized to develop any manufacturing, mining, petroleum, or other industry, excepting only agricultural industries, may acquire, hold, or administer lands only in an area absolutely necessary for their establishments or adequate to serve the purposes indicated, which the executive of the union or of the respective State in each case shall determine.

"V. Banks duly organized under the laws governing institutions of credit may make mortgage loans on rural and urban property in accordance with the provisions of the said laws, but they may not own nor administer more real property than that absolutely necessary for their direct purposes; and they may, furthermore, hold temporarily for the brief term fixed by law such real property as may be judicially adjudicated to them in execution proceedings.

"VI. Properties held in common by coowners, hamlets situated on private property, pueblos, tribal congregations, and other settlements which, as a matter of fact or law, conserve their communal character, shall have legal capacity to enjoy in common the waters, woods, and lands belonging to them, or which may have been or shall be restored to them according to the law of January 6, 1915, until such time as the manner of making the division of the lands shall be determined by law.

"VII. Excepting the corporations to which Clauses III, IV, V, and VI hereof refer, no other civil corporation may hold or administer on its own behalf real estate or mortgage loans derived therefrom, with the single exception of buildings designed directly and immediately for the purposes of the institution. The States, the Federal district, and the Territories, as well as the municipalities throughout the Republic, shall enjoy full legal capacity to acquire and hold all real estate necessary for public services."

The Federal and State laws shall determine within their respective jurisdiction those cases in which the occupation of private property shall be considered of public utility; and in accordance with the said laws the administrative authorities shall make the corresponding declaration. The amount fixed as compensation for the expropriated property shall be based on the sum at which the said property shall be valued for fiscal purposes in the catastral or revenue offices, whether this value be that manifested by the owner or merely impliedly accepted by reason of the payment of his taxes on such a basis, to which there shall be added 10 per cent. The increased value which the property in question may have acquired through improvements made subsequent to the date of the fixing of the fiscal value shall be the only matter subject to expert opinion and to judicial determination. The same procedure shall be observed in respect to objects whose value is not recorded in the revenue offices.

All proceedings, findings, decisions, and all operations of demarcation, concession, composition, judgment, compromise, alienation, or auction which may have deprived properties held in common by co-owners, hamlets situated on private property, settlements, congregations, tribes, and other settlement organizations still existing since the law of June 25, 1856, of the whole or a part of their lands, woods, and waters, are declared null and void; all findings, resolutions, and operations which may subsequently take place and produce the same effects shall likewise be null and void. Consequently all lands, forests, and waters of which the above-mentioned settlements may have been deprived shall be restored to them according to the decree of January 6, 1915, which shall remain in force as a constitutional law. In case the adjudication of lands, by way of restitution, be not legal in the terms of the said decree, which adjudication have been requested by any of the above entities, those lands shall nevertheless be given to them by way of grant, and they shall in no event fail to receive such as they may need. Only such lands, title to which may have been acquired in the divisions made by virtue of the said law of June 25, 1856, or such as may be held in undisputed ownership for more than 10 years, are excepted from the provision of nullity, provided their area does not exceed 50 hectares.

Any excess over this area shall be returned to the commune and the owner shall be indemnified. All laws of restitution enacted by virtue of this provision shall be immediately carried into effect by the administrative authorities. Only members of the commune shall have the right to the lands destined to be divided, and the rights to these lands shall be inalienable so long as they remain undivided; the same provision shall govern the right of ownership after the division has been made. The exercise of the rights pertaining to the nation by virtue of this article shall follow judicial process; but as a part of this process and by order of the proper tribunals, which order shall be issued within the maximum period of one month, the administrative authorities shall proceed without delay to the occupation, administration, auction, or sale of the lands and waters in question, together with all their appurtenances, and in no case may the acts of the said authorities be set aside until final sentence is handed down.

During the next constitutional term the Congress and the State legislatures shall enact laws, within their respective jurisdictions, for the purpose of carrying out the division of large landed estates, subject to the following conditions:

"(a) In each State and Territory there shall be fixed the maximum area of land which any one individual or legally organized corporation may own.

"(b) The excess of the area thus fixed shall be subdivided by the owner within the period set by the laws of the respective locality, and these subdivisions shall be offered for sale on such conditions as the respective governments shall approve, in accordance with the said laws.

"(c) If the owner shall refuse to make the subdivision, this shall be carried out by the local government by means of expropriation proceedings.

"(d) The value of the subdivisions shall be paid in annual amounts sufficient to amortise the principal and interest within a period of not less than 20 years, during which the person acquiring them may not alienate them. The rate of interest shall not exceed 5 per cent per annum.

"(e) The owner shall be bound to receive bonds of a special issue to guarantee the payment of the property expropriated. With this end in view, the Congress shall issue a law authorizing the States to issue bonds to meet with agrarian obligations.

"(f) The local laws shall govern the extent of the family patrimony, and determine what property shall constitute the same on the basis of its inalienability; it shall not be subject to attachment nor to any charge whatever."

All contracts and concessions made by former governments from and after the year 1876, which shall have resulted in the monopoly of lands, waters, and natural resources of the nation by a single individual or corporation are declared subject to revision, and the Executive is authorized to declare those null and void which seriously prejudice the public interest.

Constitution of 1857, article 27, I think, under Benito Juárez, and patterned after ours:

ART. 27. Private property shall not be taken without the consent of the owner, except for reasons of public utility, indemnification having been made. The law shall determine the authority to make the expropriation and the conditions on which it shall be carried out.

No religious corporations and institutions of whatever character, denomination, duration, or object, nor civil corporations, when under the patronage, direction, or administration of the former, or of ministers of any creed shall have legal capacity to acquire title to or administer real property other than the buildings immediately and directly destined to the services or purposes of the said corporations and institutions. Nor shall they have legal capacity to acquire or administer loans made on such real property.

Civil corporations and institutions not comprised within the above provision may acquire and administer, in addition to the buildings mentioned, real property and loans made on such real property required for their maintenance and purposes, subject to the requisites and limitations to be established by the Federal law to be enacted by the Congress on the subject. (As amended May 14, 1901.)

Now, let me refer you in this same constitution to some rare specimens of socialistic declarations. First, if you employ a person over there you must pay him in legal currency. No checks, even though certified, go under this remarkable document. Now let me show you the absurdity and hazard of this foolish provision. The Mexican Northwestern Railroad, that enters Mexico at Juarez and runs into Madero, has its head offices in El Paso; some of its officers stay there and its accounts are kept there. Under this constitution you have to pay, if exacted, once a week. Now, the paymaster, or treasurer, at El Paso has to load a man on the train once a week, give him, we will say, $20,000 in currency, and send him to Madero to pay off its employees. Well, Mr. Mexican Bandit gets onto the exact time of pay day. He meets the messenger with the $20,000 each week, and takes his tariff. Ah, well, what does this measly (?) sum amount to, anyway? The "poor bandit" needs the money—but I should not think it would tend to encourage investment of foreign money in Mexico or strengthen a protection of American investments already there. Now I am going to quote you the exact language embraced in Title X, of article 123, of this "remarkable constitution": "Title X. All wages shall be paid in legal currency, and shall not be paid in merchandise, orders, counters, or any other representative token with which it is sought to substitute money." Nor is this all the socialist declarations of this remarkable constitution of the Government we are asked by certain gentlemen here to dive in and swim the murky waters of the Rio Grande, without even removing our "hickory shirt" and "jean pantaloons," to embrace. You have to pay your employee in his place of business or his home. You can't pay him in a church or a schoolhouse or a city hall or a courthouse, but you must take the puro plata, the old peso, to his place of business or his home and put it in his very fist. Furthermore, if you desire to discharge an employee you have to give him three months' notice prior to time of discharge. Well, no, you do not have to do that, exactly; you have the option of paying him three months in advance and letting him go at any time. Do you think that would displease Trotsky and his other Bolsheviks? If you have a stenographer in your office who is the sole support of a widowed mother, and you desire to pay her overtime, eight hours being all she can work for you, you can not do so, for this article 123, Title XI, says no woman can engage in overtime work. Now, personally, I don't believe a woman should be compelled to work over eight hours, but if she wants to do so in order to make a few extra dollars for herself and dependents, I certainly think she should be permitted.

Now, there are some provisions in this constitution compelling employers to provide sanitary quarters for their employees that I indorse, and also forcing said employers to guard against accidents in machinery and tools of employment. Such laws we have in this country, and I helped to enact many of them as a member of the legislature of my State. But there are so many unreasonable, socialistic, and anarchistic, unworkable provisions that no person calling himself a Democrat or a good American could indorse. I would like to incorporate this entire constitution as a part of my remarks, but there is so much of it that I do not wish to impose upon the generosity of this House and encumber the RECORD. I simply was astounded when I read it. I believe it would even jar the socialistic nerves of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

Now, the general trend of all this propaganda for immediate recognition of Mexico is to the effect that there will be no confiscation and no retroactive laws, but the constitution and laws of Mexico by express and very clear terms both are confiscatory and retroactive. In reply to this propaganda Secretary Hughes wrote on June 7 of this year: "If Mexico does not contemplate a confiscatory policy the Government can conceive of no possible objection to the treaty." And again I agree with the Secretary of State when he says: "The fundamental question under consideration is the safeguarding of property rights against confiscation. Mexico is free to adopt any policy which she pleases with respect to her public lands, but she is not free to destroy, without compensation, valid titles which may have been obtained by Americans under Mexican laws." Oh, you say, "What business is it of ours what kind of a constitution Mexico has—let it be socialistic or anarchistic." Well, we have not recognized the Bolshevik government of Russia, and still there has been no confiscation of American property there. We did not recognize the government of Victoriana Huerta, founded upon assassination, pillage, and murder, although it was not alleged that American property was being confiscated. I am not so greatly concerned personally as to how Mexico governs her own people, although I do not indorse a socialistic government anywhere on this earth; but, gentlemen, I am deeply concerned, and every red-blooded American ought to be, as to the treatment she accords Americans over there that the government invited in there and are still extending invitations to come, and the extent of protection she accords their person and property. [Applause.]

Now, let me state to some of my friends who are hollowing so loudly for immediate and unconditional recognition; that if the Mexican Government, operating under this constitution, is recognized, the effect will be to release Mexico from every article of the existing treaty between that country and the United States binding Mexico to respect the private property lawfully acquired, or the liberty of American citizens in that Republic. Ah, you say, "the Supreme Court will safeguard their rights. They can resort to that tribunal to guard against confiscation." Well, you could sue out in the supreme court of that country what is called the writ of amparo; this writ combines the essential elements of the writ of habeas corpus, certiorari, and mandamus. It gives redress to a specific person or entity, and never makes any general statement of law. It can never declare a law unconstitutional. Now, Mexico says, and it has been repeated here on the floor by some of my friends, that she can not sign the treaty; it would be humiliating to her national pride. Now, she did sign a declaration acknowledging the independence of Texas on the battle field of San Jacinto. I do not know whether she saved her national pride, but Santa Ana saved his hide. And again, this utterance may seem strange indeed, for after the war of 1848, when the Mexican nation was prostrate before victorious American armies and the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo was signed at the point of the bayonet, the United States Government dictated just what should be the status of an American citizen in Mexico, and that these provisions were binding upon both Governments. The United States Government said, in effect, "You shall treat Americans in Mexico exactly thus and so, and their rights shall be just so. But the rights of Mexicans in the United States shall be exactly the same. Now, that is all the United States is contending for to-day. Who is it on this floor or elsewhere that will deny but that a Mexican has the same rights before the courts in this country as an American, and the same judicial mantle of protection is thrown over his property? Now, let us exact this from Mexico, and while I desire diplomatic and friendly relations to be resumed between the two countries, and probably recognition would greatly advance the commercial interests of my home city and along the border in my district, which I would greatly desire, still, Mr. Chairman, if that can not be brought about in the proper manner, if Mexico is not both able and willing to guarantee that protection over her own signature, nothing humiliating, and nothing unreasonable, as one Representative I would be willing to defer recognition till the crack of doom. With the cold, naked, horribly mutilated bodies of 18 good Americans murdered at Santa Isabelle a few short years past staring me in the face and fresh in my memory and many other horrible instances of splendid Americans yielding their lives in Mexico without even "a dog's show," and the virtue of American women sacrificed to Mexican lust, too numerous to mention here, I would not forego one American life or endanger the virtue of one American woman for all the gold in Mexico. [Applause.]

Ah, you say, several States along the border have already recognized Mexico and that many of the representative citizens on the border are advocating recognition, and it is shouted in my face that my own State has recognized Mexico. Now, let me say to you, gentlemen, what in the Hades can Texas do toward recognizing Mexico? [Laughter.]

It is true her governor was invited down to the inauguration, was met at the border by a special train sent by Obregon, went down to the capital, wined and dined—anyway dined—I have heard somewhere he does not "wine" [laughter], came back and issued a proclamation or made a declaration recognizing Mexico, but still Hughes failed to take cognizance of it, and this country has never sent an ambassador down there; and if Texas has either an ambassador, minister plenipotentiary, or even a chargé d'affaires down there, I have never heard of it.

Now, my friends, I did not intend to impose myself on this House. I live on the border. I was raised there. The Mexican question is not Pancho Villa. It did not end when Pancho, in recognition of his "valiant services to his country," was presented by the Government of Mexico with a small farm of 800,000 acres in Chihuahua and retired to lead the life of a "country gentleman," but the fundamental question that confronts our country in considering its relations with Mexico is the protection of American lives and the safeguarding of their property rights against confiscation. If Mexico would effectively bind herself to do this, gentlemen, I would be in favor of our country recognizing her to-morrow, and vote to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to loan her, upon her national bonds, such a sum of money to properly enable her to rehabilitate and place upon a stable and sound financial basis her devastated country and her depleted treasury. [Applause.]

That is all the people in my section want. Of course, there are a few gentlemen in my State who want to sell a few tons of coal or a carload of Mexican blankets down there, and they care nothing about Americans, their lives, and property, and they would not indorse it. I wanted to show you gentlemen the constitution of this Republic and also wanted to show you what Mr. Obregon says he will do; and Secretary Hughes and Secretary Colby knew the nature of the Mexicans, as Norman Davis, the Assistant Secretary of State, once said to me that they will not get recognition until they agree to protect the lives of Americans. [Applause.]

By unanimous consent, Mr. HUDSPETH and Mr. SUMNERS of Texas were given leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, it was my pleasure to-day to introduce a bill in the House providing for the bestowal of a medal of honor upon former Chief Boatswain's Mate William Henry Schmidt, veteran of the World War and one who gave distinguished service under fire.

Mr. Schmidt was commander of the gun crew attached to the armed guard ship Amphion when, on October 12, 1918, a German submarine attacked that vessel in midocean. For 1 hour and 20 minutes a pitched battle followed, in which the submarine fired more than 200 shots and the crew of the Amphion 93.

As a result of the distinguished work of Mr. Schmidt, Lieut. Commander H. H. Norton, United States Navy, acting commander of the Amphion, recommended him for a medal of honor. This award was reduced to the granting of a Navy cross.

The handling of the gun crew and the conditions under which the gun crew operated during the fighting alone would warrant the medal of honor award for Mr. Schmidt. During the battle the deck caught fire. Directly underneath of the fire was located the ammunition magazine. There was danger of the fire spreading into the magazine. Notwithstanding this the gun crew continued action, driving off the submarine.

The action of the board of awards in reducing the award to Mr. Schmidt has been called to the attention of Secretary of the Navy Denby. The board of awards acted under a misapprehension as to the length of the battle and clearly made a gross error in the reduction of the award. Apparently because this was an error of the previous administration, Secretary Denby has not seen fit to consider a review of the award.

I have received the following letter from Secretary Denby concerning the case of Mr. Schmidt:

I have to acknowledge receipt of your letter dated November 18, 1922, with inclosures, relating to the case of Mr. W. H. Schmidt, formerly chief boatswain's mate, United States Navy.

Mr. Schmidt was recommended for a medal of honor by Lieut. Commander H. H. Norton, United States Navy, while acting as commander of the armed guard ship Amphion.

This recommendation was carefully considered by the board of awards and the board recommended the award of a Navy cross in this case.

Many officers and men were recommended for various decorations and awards for their services during the war, and it was the duty of the board of awards to consider all papers placed before it and to recommend in each case that action which was deemed advisable and just after thorough consideration of all cases.

It is not the policy of the department to reconvene the board of awards nor to take any action contrary to the recommendation of the board. This has not been done in the case of any officer or man whose recommendations were considered by the board.

The inclosures forwarded with your letter are returned herewith.

It is a very narrow and shortsighted policy on the part of the Secretary of the Navy not to reconsider cases where awards were granted under misapprehension or on mistaken facts. I feel that Mr. Schmidt should be given the medal of honor recommended for him and hope that consideration will be given the bill I have introduced by the committee in the very near future.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had under consideration the bill H. R. 13232, making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice, and for the judiciary, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MECHANICAL DEVICE FOR COUNTING VOTES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been requested to inform the membership of the House that in the majority room in the House Office Building there is a new device for mechanical voting in the House which will be on exhibition for several days, and they would be very glad to have Members drop in and inspect it.

UNAUTHORIZED SIGNATURES TO PETITION.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have a correction made. I understand that the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER] this morning placed in the RECORD a list of names purporting to be subscribed to a petition to hold memorial services in honor of some Federal prisoner, and that my name was on the petition. I did not know there was such a prisoner living or dead. I did not authorize my name to be put on such a petition; I did not know that it was on there. I ask unanimous consent of the House that my name may not appear in the printed remarks.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to interpose any objection to the gentleman's request, but any responsibility for striking out any of the names or making any change should rest on the House and not upon me. The document I inserted just as it came to me. I have no objection to individual Members seeking to have their names stricken from it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KLINE of New York. Mr. Speaker, my request is of the same nature. I find my name was attached to that communication, but I did not sign it. I have authorized no one to sign it for me, and I ask unanimous consent that my name may be eliminated from the Journal and the RECORD of to-day's proceedings.

The SPEAKER. It will not, of course, appear in the Journal. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Reserving the right to object, I appreciate the very serious, wicked trick that has been played on the gentleman, but I think the perpetrator of the outrage ought to be held up to public scorn. When did the gentleman first know that his name was attached to it?

Mr. KLINE of New York. When I came to the House.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Did he call it to the attention of the man who attached it to the document?

Mr. KLINE of New York. I did not. I did not know it was a man.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Or a woman?

Mr. KLINE of New York. I do not know.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I think anyone who would practice this kind of a trick on Members of Congress ought to be exposed. I hope the gentlemen who are concerned will institute an investigation, because we do not want to have this develop into a practice. It would be embarrassing to have circulars continually floating around here with the names of Members of Congress on them that are not authorized.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I think I can suggest to him probably how the names got onto the petition, so called. A lady called at my office and asked me about how I stood on the question of pardoning the war prisoners. I made to her the answer which I make to the country now, and for which I make no apology, that I had had sufficient experience with criminal trials to think that in all probability many of these men had been convicted because of the inflamed state of the public mind, and if the records were carefully examined, perhaps 50 per cent of them would be and ought to be pardoned. I did not refer, nor did I understand the lady to refer, directly or indirectly, to any memorial service or proceedings to be held over a dead prisoner. What I say to the House I said to her. I presume I am blameworthy for not being more abrupt, for not telling her I would have nothing to do with her nor with any application to pardon the prisoners.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Speaker, having interposed no objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina, it having been granted, of course nothing can be done; but in view of the gentleman's remarks just had, I should have interposed an objection if he had made the remarks before I withdrew the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. KLINE]?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CONNOLLY of Pennsylvania, at the request of Mr. VARE, on account of the death of his mother.

To Mr. SMITH of Michigan, for two weeks, on account of illness, at the request of Mr. MAPES.

To Mr. APPLEBY, for two days, on account of a death.

To Mr. MCFADDEN, an extension of leave of absence for six days, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 12, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 12, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, life without Thy help and inspiration would indeed lack real significance and outlook. We therefore ask that this morning there may be given to us such a consciousness of Thy presence, Thy graciousness, and Thy willingness to help in every situation as to guide in proper deliberation to the highest interest and welfare of the country. Hear us this morning and be very near and gracious. For Christ Jesus' sake. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

OPERATION OF THE PROHIBITION LAW.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD in 8-point type a statement which I have prepared on the progress of prohibition in the United States. I prepared the statement for one of the metropolitan papers and the paper used it partially but not in full.

I desire to add in this connection that prohibition in the United States has come to stay. Gentlemen who are striking at it and complaining of the operation of the Volstead Act and the eighteenth amendment may well reserve their energies for a better purpose. The President of the United States said in his recent message that the most demoralizing feature of American life was the violation of the Volstead Act. I differ from him. I think the most demoralizing factor is the growing difficulty which the average American family experiences in meeting the increasing pressure of economic conditions. Prohibition has helped that situation substantially, but prohibition can not do everything. Prohibition has helped that situation because the savings deposits in the United States have grown more rapidly since the advent of prohibition than in any previous period of similar duration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair feels that it should call attention to the rule of the Senate. This is a statement or communication prepared by the Senator from Texas which he asks to have printed in the RECORD. It is the equivalent of asking leave to print a speech in the RECORD. The Chair will not raise the objection, but desires the Senate to understand that it is a violation of the rule as the Chair understands the rule.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am willing to reserve the request until morning business is closed and then renew it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think the Senator from Texas understood the suggestion of the Chair. The Chair did not make the suggestion that the request is out of order now, but that it is equivalent to printing a speech in the RECORD. It seems to me it is in order to do anything by unanimous consent that is not expressly prohibited from unanimous consent being granted.

I never have seen any reason in the world why the Senate should not have adopted the rule of business prevailing in the House, and let Senators print instead of talking when they want to do so. I think it would be more edifying to the country and to the Senate very often to have speeches printed. It costs less money and takes less time than to make the speech, and I see no reason in the world, so far as I am concerned, for objection if a Senator desires to print a statement in the RECORD instead of taking the time of the Senate to read it to the Senate, as the Senator from Texas can do if he wants to. I have never seen the logic or reason for objecting to such a rule.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is a short statement prepared for a newspaper. I could read it in a few minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; the Senator could occupy the time of the Senate in reading the statement into the RECORD, but if he prefers to print it in the RECORD without reading, I see no reason why he should not do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas? The Chair hears no objection and the statement will be printed in the RECORD as requested.

The statement referred to is as follows:

SENATOR SHEPPARD'S STATEMENT ON PROHIBITION.

Prohibition has registered distinct gains in the country as a whole by virtue of the recent election. Changes in the membership of Congress have been due more largely to the opposition to the Republican Party than to any other single cause. They represent a readjustment of the country along more normal political lines and a strengthening of the sentiment for prohibition, regardless of political divisions.

The best indication of public sentiment on the liquor question is found in those States where referendum votes were had. In Ohio where a beer and wine amendment was submitted to a vote of the people the proposed amendment was defeated by a vote of 188,000. California is one of the largest grape-growing States in the Union, and there was supposed to be a strong sentiment against prohibition in that commonwealth on account of its alleged detrimental effect on this industry, and yet the people of California adopted at the recent election an enforcement code which has the effect of putting into operation the one-half of one per cent definition contained in the Volstead Act. This code was adopted by a majority of more than 80,000. When we recall that in 1920 a similar measure was proposed in California and was defeated by 65,000, the growth of prohibition sentiment in California becomes plainly evident.

A referendum vote on a beer and wine proposal was taken in Illinois under what was known as the public policy act. Under that act the measure would have been inoperative even if adopted and would have been nothing more than an indication of sentiment to the legislature. Owing to the futility of such a vote, and the obvious unconstitutionality of the measure, even if passed by the legislature, the prohibition forces advised their supporters not to vote. Two million votes were cast in the election, the wets polling 800,000 on this question, the drys 200,000. Practically one million people did not vote at all on the beer and wine proposal. The wets failed, therefore, to receive a majority of the votes necessary to constitute an indication of the popular will.

An enforcement code closely resembling the Volstead Act was submitted to the people of Massachusetts and was defeated by a large majority. This does not mean a recession of prohibition sentiment in Massachusetts, because no prohibition code has ever been enacted there since the prohibition amendment came into being. In fact, in the year 1920 the general court of Massachusetts, that is the State legislature, passed an act attempting to legalize the sale of beverages of an alcoholic content exceeding that permitted by the Federal statute. This measure passed both branches of the general court. Governor Coolidge vetoed the act and prevented it from becoming operative on the ground that it was in conflict with the Federal statute which under the Constitution of the United States was supreme.

Later a 2.75 per cent beer proposal was approved by the electors through a referendum.

It will be seen, therefore, that in the last election Massachusetts merely ran true to form so far as prohibition enforcement is concerned. The situation there is due very largely to the foreign element and shows the necessity for the continuation of a campaign of education.

An investigation of changes in the Senate will show that there has been a gain from three to five votes for prohibition. In the House of Representatives the situation is practically unchanged. In many of the districts where wet candidates supplanted dry candidates or where dry candidates supplanted wet candidates, there were local and partisan questions which undoubtedly affected the result, and it is not possible to determine the extent to which the prohibition question weighed with the voters in such districts.

The futility of the so-called light wine and beer movement in Congress becomes evident when it is recognized that Congress can not legalize liquors which are intoxicating in fact. The eighteenth amendment prohibits the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. The courts take judicial notice that wines are intoxicating liquors and the extent to which the alcoholic content may be increased beyond the one-half of 1 per cent now fixed until it becomes in fact intoxicating is a mere matter of conjecture. What will intoxicate one man will not intoxicate another. A definite standard is essential to the effective enforcement of the law, and any standard which does not contemplate the sale of liquors intoxicating in fact will not satisfy the desires of those who wish an alcoholic stimulant and who are crying for light wines and beers. The adoption of any of these so-called light wines and beer proposals would utterly frustrate the eighteenth amendment and it is absolutely certain that no legislation of the character proposed will be adopted. If the sale of such beverages are permitted, some place must be provided where they may be manufactured and sold. This means the restoration of the brewer in the United States or the return of the saloon.

The baneful and degrading effect of the liquor traffic on the political life of America was one of the principal reasons for the adoption of prohibition. The almost entire removal of this result has been one of the beneficient results of prohibition. There can be no compromise on the liquor question. One of our chief difficulties even under the existing law with its present one-half of 1 per cent standard is its violation by the brewers. To liberalize the standard by any way would be but to invite increased complications and difficulties. Suppose it should be possible by any chance for the opponents of prohibition to secure a modification of the existing definition by an act of the Sixty-eighth Congress. This would not legalize the sale of beer and wines in those States that have a State law as strong or stronger than the present Volstead Act. More than three-fourths of the States have adopted laws prohibiting the sale of beverages containing more than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol. These State definitions have been enacted, in most instances, after many years of experience in attempting to enforce prohibitory liquor laws. Several of these States have tried out the light wine and beer proposal as a solution of the prohibition problem but have found it entirely impracticable and have later repudiated it.

Several countries are now attempting to enforce partial prohibition by prohibiting the sale of beverages with the stronger alcoholic content. Liquor interests in these countries fight these partial prohibition measures as completely as they fight complete prohibition in this country. When, therefore, they argue in this country that they are opposed to the saloon and wish to promote temperance by securing the sale of the lighter alcoholic beverages, we should not overlook the position they are taking against the lighter alcoholic beverages in the countries where the light wine and beer policy is being tried out.

The campaign for light wine and beer is a cleverly disguised attack on prohibition in its entirety. It is destined to fail because prohibition is firmly embedded both in the Constitution and in the hearts of an overwhelming majority of the American people. Exceptional instances of Volstead violations are played up in flamboyant headlines by the sensational press. The Volstead Act in the country as a whole is 90 per cent efficient and the masses of the people are saving more money for legitimate purposes than ever before. The volume of liquor consumed in the United States since the advent of prohibition has decreased so enormously as to constitute one of the chief assurances of our continued development and prosperity.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 13180) making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 940) thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. WARREN. Allow me, Mr. President, to give notice that I shall ask the attention of the Senate to the consideration of the bill at the close of morning business.

INSURANCE CLAIMS OF EX-SOLDIERS.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there have been referred to the Committee on Finance eight bills, all of them relating to cases in which the soldier either failed to make application for insurance or had allowed his insurance to lapse. The cases will probably increase very materially in the future, and the question arises whether they should be taken cognizance of by the Committee on Finance. It is the opinion of the Committee on Finance that it should not consider the bills, but that they should be referred to the Committee on Pensions. Some of them involve the question of the rating for disability, and there are no experts connected with the Committee on Finance to investigate that subject. Others relate to the question simply of excuse for the failure to comply with the law either in making the application or in keeping up the insurance payments. In either case, as the insurance is a matter purely of contractual relation between the soldier and the Government, it seems to me very proper that if there is anything given at all it should be awarded by the Committee on Pensions, because they are matters of gratuity in which there is no legal obligation on the part of the Government. Therefore, under instruction of the committee, I report all the bills back with the request that they be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota asks that the Committee on Finance be discharged from the further consideration of the bills, and that they be referred to the Committee on Pensions. Without objection that order will be made.

The bills were referred to the Committee on Pensions as follows:

A bill (S. 935) for the relief of Gill Irwin Wilson;

A bill (S. 2986) for the relief of Angy Anderson;

A bill (S. 3434) directing the Veterans' Bureau to pay Constance Van Brunt Lynch the present value of a term insurance policy;

A bill (H. R. 546) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay war-risk insurance to the foster parents of Edward Short;

A bill (S. 3536) for the relief of the heirs of Nels Rudi;

A bill (S. 3560) to provide for payment of the amount of a war-risk insurance policy to a beneficiary designated by Capt. Clarence Centenial Sichel, deceased;

A bill (S. 3707) for the relief of Hazel E. Simms; and

A bill (S. 4021) for the relief of Edna Mae Baird.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. SIMMONS submitted two amendments, intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

DISTRIBUTION OF SPEECHES BY FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to take from the table, for present consideration, Senate Resolution 351. I do not think there will be any objection to it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I ask what is the Senator's request?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent to take up Senate Resolution 351.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The reading clerk read Senate Resolution 351, submitted by Mr. HEFLIN September 12, 1922, as follows:

Whereas the officials of the 12 Federal reserve banks have admitted that they have had printed and circulated, out of the funds of the banks, thousands of copies of a speech made in the Senate touching a controverted subject, and in which the position of one Senator is assailed and criticized by another Senator; and

Whereas the Senate feels that the Senator who spoke on the other side of the subject involved in the Senator's speech which was printed and circulated by said Federal reserve bank officials, is entitled, in fair play and justice, to have the opportunity of sending copies of his speech to the citizens who have received the speech which assailed and criticized him; and

Whereas the Senate, by resolution, requested and received from the officials of the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta a certain list of citizens to whom they have sent the speech in question; and

Whereas the Senate feels that the officials of the other 11 Federal reserve banks should furnish to the Senate a list of the names and post-office addresses of citizens to whom they sent copies of said speech; Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Federal Reserve Board be, and it is hereby, requested to obtain from said Federal reserve bank officials, and have sent to the Senate, a list of names with post-office addresses of the citizens to whom said speech was sent.

Mr. WARREN. I will ask the Senator if the resolution is on the calendar?

Mr. HEFLIN. It is a resolution which I introduced several weeks ago, but I could not get it considered at that time, so I requested that it remain on the President's table until I called it up at some future time. I do not think there will be any objection to it. There ought not to be any objection.

Mr. SMOOT. There has been objection to it in the past.

Mr. HEFLIN. Not exactly in this form.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not remember the exact words, but the substance seems to be the same.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senate passed a resolution calling on the bank in Atlanta to supply a list of the names to whom they sent the speech in question. This is the same kind of resolution calling on the other 11 banks to send a list of the names to whom they sent the same speech. I discovered later that the other 11 banks had sent out that speech, and that all of the banks together had sent out 142,000 copies of it, and I simply want an opportunity to send my speech to the same people who read the other speech. My speech was a part of the controversy on Governor Harding and deflation.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know just how the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] feels about it, but I believe he objected to it before. Does the Senator care about the adoption of the preamble in the resolution? Is not the information all that the Senator wants?

Mr. HEFLIN. The preamble simply states what the other 11 banks have done, and the resolution would not make complete sense if it did not have some of the preamble, because it sets out that one of the banks has complied with a former resolution. There is not anything in the preamble that ought not to be there. It simply says that the Senate feels that the other Senator—meaning myself—should have the right to send his speech to the parties who read the speech attacking him. I think the Senate feels that way. I think every fair-minded Senator would feel that way about it.

Mr. SMOOT. As I gathered from the reading of the preamble, it makes a statement of what the other 11 banks did. I do not know whether they did it or not.

Mr. HEFLIN. They admit they did it. They sent in reports giving the number of speeches they sent out. We have that information from each one of the banks, and they sent in all about 142,000 copies. Each and every one of them admit they sent out the speech in question.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator want to print 142,000 copies of his speech and send a copy to every one who received a copy of the speech of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]?

Mr. HEFLIN. I would like to send it to all of them, but it would cost me $20 a thousand to print it.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I thought.

Mr. HEFLIN. But I want to take excerpts from it and give the main points of my reply to every one of them. I am willing to do that in order that the truth about the matter may be known.

Mr. WARREN. At the time the Senator received recognition I had addressed the Chair pursuant to the notice I had given that I would undertake to bring up the appropriation bill at the close of morning business.

Mr. HEFLIN. This will only take a moment, if the Senator will allow me to go ahead. I do not think anyone will object.

Mr. WARREN. Has the Senator any objection to my calling up the appropriation bill?

Mr. HEFLIN. I had rather take up the resolution now and press it. I am very much in earnest about the matter involved and feel like employing all tactics at my command to secure the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. WARREN. Is it the idea of the Senator from Alabama to occupy the remainder of the morning in making a speech?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; unless my resolution can be now considered; I do not propose to discuss the resolution if I can have it adopted now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which the Secretary has read. Is there objection?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13180) making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	France	Lenroot	Smith
Ball	Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Smoot
Bayard	George	McKellar	Stanley
Borah	Gooding	McLean	Sterling
Brookhart	Hale	McNary	Sutherland
Cameron	Harreld	Nelson	Swanson
Capper	Harris	New	Townsend
Caraway	Harrison	Nicholson	Underwood
Colt	Heflin	Norris	Wadsworth
Couzens	Johnson	Page	Walsh, Mass.
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Pepper	Walsh, Mont.
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Phipps	Warren
Curtis	Kellogg	Pomerene	Watson
Dial	Kendrick	Reed, Pa.	Williams
Dillingham	Keyes	Robinson	Willis
Fernald	Ladd	Sheppard
Fletcher	La Follette	Simmons

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on the request of the Senator from Wyoming that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 13180.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13180) making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that very few amendments have been reported by the Committee on Appropriations to the bill which is now under consideration, and the changes proposed only increase the total appropriations by a trifle over $400,000. I make the usual request that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with; that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Office of the Secretary," on page 1, line 8, after "$12,000," to insert:

> Undersecretary of the Treasury, to be nominated by the President and appointed by him, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive compensation at the rate of $7,500 per annum and shall perform such duties in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury as may be prescribed by the Secretary or by law, and under the provisions of section 177, Revised Statutes, in case of the death, resignation, absence, or sickness of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall perform the duties of the Secretary until a successor is appointed or such absence or sickness shall cease, $7,500.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee if that amendment does not propose new legislation?

Mr. WARREN. It does not. The amendment is in the exact form in which the item has been incorporated in the law during two preceding years, and in the House of Representatives the item was originally in the bill as reported; but on a point of order in that body the item was stricken out, and the bill came to us in that form. The proposed amendment merely reinstates a provision which has been in the law for two or more years and which was also found in the House bill as originally reported.

Mr. McKELLAR. If it is already in the law, why should it be repeated in the pending bill?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator's question is a pertinent one, but he should bear in mind the difference between the rules of the Senate and the rules of the House. Under the rules of the House an appropriation in any amount for an office that has not at some time preceding been provided for by legislation other than an appropriation bill is subject to a point of order. A similar point of order, however, would throw out probably one-fourth of the employees of the Government. The gentleman who made the point of order in the House of Representatives is perhaps the only one in that body who would have made it. The item, however, in the House went out under that rule.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it not also the rule of the Senate that new legislation shall not be incorporated in an appropriation bill?

Mr. WARREN. The amendment does not propose new legislation. It is the law now.

Mr. McKELLAR. It necessarily proposes new legislation or it would not be here in italics. Is not that true? Upon what foundation, upon what act of Congress is this amendment based? I am opposed to the general policy of creating undersecretaries in any of the departments. I think they are a foolish aping of British customs along that line and wholly unnecessary. If the amendment is subject to a point of order, I do not know but that I should be inclined to make it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think the amendment is subject to a point of order under the rules of the Senate; I think it is general legislation.

Mr. McKELLAR. It seems to me it is general legislation.

Mr. WARREN. I do not consider it to be general legislation.

Mr. McKELLAR. We have had an agreement here about our rules and we ought to stand by them and not permit general legislation to be enacted upon appropriation bills.

Mr. WARREN. Provision for the undersecretary of the Treasury is already in the law and that law is in operation to-day; so the amendment does not propose new legislation.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask the Senator to point out the law to which he refers.

Mr. WARREN. The amendment simply proposes to continue the present law for the coming fiscal year, and the appropriation for the office; that is all.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator can point me to the law, I shall be very glad to see it. If it has already been declared to be the policy of the Government by law of Congress to create undersecretaries and if, therefore, amendment is not subject to a point of order, it would be useless for me to make it; but without such information I should be compelled to make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. A similar provision is in existing law. If the Senator would like to see it, I will hand it to him.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator. I find on the examination that the item to which the Senator refers is contained in an appropriation bill heretofore passed. I doubt very much whether that may be considered a law creating the office. I call the attention of the Chair to the rule as found on page 20 of the Rules of the Senate, which reads as follows:

> The Committee on Appropriations shall not report an appropriation bill containing amendments proposing new or general legislation, and if an appropriations bill is reported to the Senate containing amendments proposing new or general legislation, a point of order may be made against the bill; and if the point of order is sustained, the bill shall be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations.

I have no desire in the world to have this bill recommitted, but I do not believe in the system of undersecretaries; I have opposed it consistently for a number of years, ever since it was undertaken to establish it. Therefore, Mr. President, I make the point of order that the amendment proposes general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator may reach his object in another way by asking that the amendment be disagreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that the amendment does not propose general legislation. The amendment applies only to one officer of the Government.

Mr. McKELLAR. I differ with the Senator about that; I think it does propose general legislation. The creation of undersecretaries for the departments of the Government is surely general legislation, and that is shown on the face of the pending amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator may be right and I may be wrong, but I differ with him; and I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will look up the precedents, I think he will find that an item of this sort is not general legislation. It applies only to one man, and does not apply generally throughout the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. In that event we could just make up our entire laws for the departments as special legislation, which I think equally comes within the rule.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, not at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. But that is the rule that was established when this large authority was vested in the Appropriations Committee to report on all appropriations—that they were not to legislate also. The Senator from Utah will remember that one of the objections raised to vesting the vast authority of making all appropriations in the Appropriations Committee was that it would continue, as it had in the past, to assert the right of legislating as well as appropriating, and it was said that this would not be done. Now we come to a provision which is legislation in its truest and most perfect sense, as I look at it.

Mr. WARREN. Let me ask the Senator if he will not simply make a motion to strike it out? I shall not contend against it if the Senator wishes to strike it out.

Mr. McKELLAR. I can not hear the Senator, there is so much confusion in the Chamber.

Mr. WARREN. I say, let the Senator make his motion, and let the Senate settle it.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator is willing to have it go out in that way——

Mr. WARREN. I am not willing to have it go out, but I am willing that the Senate shall say whether it shall go out or stay in.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know it will go out on the point of order, and I do not know what the result of the motion will be. If my point of order is overruled, then I will make a motion to strike it out.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Tennessee has made a point of order against this item on the ground that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill. This is not general legislation on an appropriation bill, and there is precedent after precedent sustaining my position. This appropriates money for one person, one position, and it is not general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, is it new legislation?

Mr. SMOOT. That is not what the rule says. It says "general legislation upon an appropriation bill."

Mr. McKELLAR. The rule also says "new legislation."

Mr. SMOOT. It is not new legislation.

Mr. McKELLAR. It must be new, or, if it is old legislation, that is just as good as new legislation. If it is old legislation, it is not necessary to reenact it, and if it is new legislation it goes out under the rule. That must be perfectly apparent to anyone.

Mr. SMOOT. Under existing law these very words appear in the last appropriation bill making appropriations for the Treasury Department.

Mr. McKELLAR. If that is the case, may I suggest to the Senator, why repeat it in this bill, in apparent violation of the rules, if not in actual violation of the rules?

Mr. SMOOT. It is not a violation of the rules at all.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the point of order made by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] that this constitutes new legislation or general legislation seems to be well taken. This provision expressly authorizes the creation of a new office, to be designated as that of Undersecretary of the Treasury, the officer to be nominated by the President and appointed by him, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and so forth.

While I have not had an opportunity of examining in detail recently the precedents upon the subject, my memory is that the practice in the body at the other end of the Capitol, where the rules have long held obnoxious new or general legislation, is to the effect that a provision proposing the creation of an office and prescribing the method by which that office shall be filled constitutes general legislation; and the point made by the Senator from Utah, that merely because the legislation relates to one office, and consequently is limited to one person, it can not be held obnoxious to the prohibition against new or general legislation, can not be supported in argument.

This provision is equivalent to saying that hereafter there shall be a new office, to be known as that of Undersecretary of the Treasury, to be filled by appointment——

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator, I suppose, knows that it does not create a new office in its action. The man is already there. It is simply repeating the language of the law as it exists. He is on duty now, and would be, anyway, to the end of the year, and this simply extends his time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; but that is by virtue of a provision limited as to duration in an appropriation bill, and the Senator can not escape the purpose and effect of this rule, which is to segregate the appropriating power from the authorizing power and to vest in one committee the power to create the office and in another committee the power to appropriate for the incumbent of the office. The very purpose of this new rule of the Senate is to require the creation of an office before the Committee on Appropriations shall have authority to provide funds to pay the salary of the officer.

As said by the Senator from Wyoming, it has always been held in the House of Representatives that such a provision is obnoxious to a rule closely analogous to the rule now incorporated in the Senate rules.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield a moment?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield with pleasure to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. While that is true, as I stated, since the time that rule was adopted, and not many years ago, during the time of the chairmanship of Mr. Fitzgerald, it was abrogated in this way: They passed a law reading, as I remember, in substance, that hereafter the salaries made in an appropriation bill which had passed and become the law should afterwards not be subject to the rule which I mentioned and of which the Senator so well knows.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; but that provision is not in the Senate rules. If the Senator were a Member of the House of Representatives and the point of order were made there, the Senator could invoke the rule of the House; but the provision in the Senate rules is analogous to, if not identical with, the old rule of the House, and the House changed its rule to meet the very difficulty which now confronts the Senator from Wyoming upon the point of order made by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. If, as the Senator from Wyoming contends, this office is already created and now established, and we are simply making an appropriation for it, why not just say "Undersecretary," at a certain salary, without putting in the italicized proviso that indicates how he is to be appointed?

Mr. ROBINSON. An intelligent answer to the question asked by the Senator from South Carolina makes a conclusive argument sustaining the point of order made by the Senator from Tennessee. The object of this provision is to create an office for two years and at the same time to provide a salary for the officer. Under the new rule of the Senate that can not be done if a point of order is made.

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator will allow me, I notice, in reading the text, the words "Secretary of the Treasury," so much. If this other office were on all fours with that of the Secretary of the Treasury, it would have been sufficient just to say: "Undersecretary, $7,500."

Mr. McKELLAR. That could not have been done, because there is no legislation providing for an Undersecretary.

Mr. ROBINSON. And it follows from that very declaration, if correct, that this is legislation creating an office, as I stated in the beginning, and providing for the manner in which it shall be filled.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the opposite contention were true it would have been perfectly proper to put in here a first undersecretary, a second undersecretary, a third undersecretary, or as many as they pleased, without warrant of law, and it would be good under this rule. This rule was so amended as to make it impossible for legislation of this character to be put on appropriation bills; and, in order to enforce it, it is provided in the very rule itself that the bill shall go back to the committee if it is found that general legislation is on the bill. I have no desire to send the bill back to the committee. I merely desire to have this provision stricken out, and the reason why I desire to have it stricken out is that I have uniformly opposed such provisions, and I do not believe it is right to have officers named as this proposed officer is named.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let me make this statement, in view of the expression of the Senator from Tennessee: My purpose in supporting the point of order is to preserve what appears to me to be the integrity of the rule. It is true that the Senate in specific cases, by vote of this body, has somewhat arbitrarily construed to be not general legislation a provision which according to the facts and the law actually was general legislation; and the Senate has the power now to abrogate or nullify this new rule by holding that this is not new or general legislation, should the point of order be submitted to it by the Chair.

If, however, the Senate should pursue that course it would destroy the value of the rule. The very object of the Senate in adopting this rule was to prevent the Appropriations Committee from doing what it seeks to do by this provision, namely, authorize appropriations. The object of this rule was to restrict the power and authority of the Appropriations Committee to providing the funds necessary to meet obligations already created. If this does not create a new obligation, why does the committee incorporate here the provisions creating the office and providing for the manner in which it shall be filled? Why does not the committee simply say: "For Undersecretary of the Treasury, $7,500 per annum, $15,000 for two years," or such other provision of appropriation as may be necessary?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is very obvious why it does not do so.

Mr. ROBINSON. The committee, however, has plainly included a legislative provision in its amendment. It says:

> Undersecretary of the Treasury, to be nominated by the President and appointed by him.

It creates an office just as plainly as any language could create an office, and it is legislation according to common sense and according to the rules of both branches of Congress.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. ROBINSON. I have concluded all I have to say upon the subject. I have not investigated the merits of this particular appropriation, but my judgment is that we can not escape the obligation to authorize this office by a separate measure by including the authorization in an appropriation bill from Congress to Congress. That is what the language seeks to do. It creates a new office, provides how that office shall be filled——

Mr. CARAWAY. And provides the duration of the office.

Mr. ROBINSON. And, as suggested by my colleague, it provides the duration of the office, which, of course, is legislation.

As stated before, my only object is to preserve the integrity of this rule, because such a ruling as would be implied in overruling the point of order would nullify the rule and prevent the accomplishment of the purpose which the Senate had in mind when it adopted the rule.

I have concluded.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations has had no intention of committing any infraction of the rules. Heretofore we have been acting under this rule, and no exceptions have been taken. The object sought by the Senator from Tennessee is made very plain by him. He himself objects to this office being filled and also to the title "undersecretary," and hence proposes that it go out. The Senator from Arkansas has repeated a number of times, very forcefully and very convincingly, as he always does, that it is new legislation, when, as a matter of fact, in its action and in its outcome, it is not new, because it is simply the continuance of what has already been provided for and followed in at least two appropriation bills. So it is a factious proposition to make a point of order against it. As I said before, it is merely that one man wants to throw it out. I have nothing further to say, and I submit the matter to the Chair.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I appeal to the Senator from Tennessee to withdraw his point of order. I myself think that the amendment to the rule, as agreed to March 6, 1922, which specifically refers to new legislation, might apply.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I have been trying to get the act of last year, and just have it before me. I want to suggest it as my opinion that it is new legislation; but this identical language being in the act of last year it became legislation, and competent legislation, and if that is so, this is not new legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. I was calling the attention of the Senator to the fact that it is the exact wording of the appropriation act of a year ago. But what I wanted to say to the Senator from Tennessee is that the man holding this position is one eminently qualified for the work he is doing. I do not know just where we could get a man to take his place, and really I think if the Senator from Tennessee has the welfare of our Government at heart—and I know he has—he can make other points of order which would be of very much more advantage to the Government than the point of order he is now making against this particular item. I ask the Senator to take that into consideration, even though the point no doubt will be overruled by the Chair.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand Mr. Gilbert is now the occupant of this position?

Mr. SMOOT. He is.

Mr. McKELLAR. And I understand he is a very excellent man in every sense of the word.

Mr. SMOOT. He is.

Mr. McKELLAR. He was appointed as Assistant Secretary, and would it interfere with his duties or his capacity, or in any other way, not to call him Undersecretary? I think the title "Undersecretary" is very much less dignified than "Assistant Secretary," so far as my own view is concerned. I do not know what his view about it may be, but I imagine he feels the same way about it that I do, that the good old American "Assistant Secretary," which has been in vogue over a hundred years in our Government, is a better title and a more honorable title than the title of "Undersecretary."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I want to ask a question of either the Senator from Utah or the Senator from Wyoming. It may clear up this matter.

Mr. SMOOT. I will yield in just a moment. There are three Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury provided for in this bill. When the law was passed one year ago we felt that it was best to have one designated "Undersecretary," just as we have one Undersecretary of State. There are more responsibilities and there is a higher salary attached to the position. As the Senator knows, the Assistant Secretaries draw $5,000 a year, a mere pittance; it is more of an honor than a financial return. I ask the Senator to withdraw his point of order, although I think the Chair will overrule it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think very highly of Mr. Gilbert. I believe he is a most excellent man in every way, and if he is entitled to $7,500 I will not object to an amendment fixing his salary at $7,500. I myself am of the opinion that his services to the Government are worth $7,500, and I shall not object to an amendment along that line; but I do object to the legislation creating the position of "Undersecretary," which I think is against our American system.

Mr. SMOOT. If this goes out, there will be no appropriation at all for the Undersecretary.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the existing law authorizes this appropriation, why employ the language that is used in the bill, which creates the office? Former appropriation bills, as appears from the acts of previous years, have embraced provisions identical with the one contained in this bill. There must have been some object in the minds of the committee in reporting this legislative provision. The defense against the point of order now is that it is an unnecessary legislative provision and therefore should be retained in the bill. If it is legislation at all, it should go out of an appropriation bill. The point of order apparently would be obviated if the legislation exists authorizing the appropriation, and the purpose of the committee is merely to make an appropriation and not to create an office; but if this language is retained in the bill, I think it would be subversive of a fair construction of the rules to hold that the language is not obnoxious to the provision in the amendment of our rules adopted a year or two ago providing against the reporting by the Committee on Appropriations of new or general legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to the Senator, I think I had better read the law passed in February of last year, and the Senator can plainly see, then, just what the law provided.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is identical with this provision.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. Under the head of "Salaries, office of the Secretary," it provided:

> Undersecretary of the Treasury, to be nominated by the President and appointed by him, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive compensation at the rate of $7,500 per annum, and shall perform such duties in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury as may be prescribed by the Secretary or by law, under the provisions of section 177, Revised Statutes. In case of the death, resignation, absence, or sickness of the Secretary of the Treasury he shall perform the duties of the Secretary until a successor is appointed, or until such absence or sickness shall cease, $7,500.

Mr. ROBINSON. There is not an "i" dotted or a "t" crossed so as to make that different from the language of the new provision. The new language is identical with the old provision, as I said a moment ago.

Mr. McKELLAR. The old provision is repeated.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it has to be repeated, because it is in an appropriation act which will expire June 30, 1923.

Mr. ROBINSON. The law having expired, this is a provision for new and general legislation, just as that was a provision for new and general legislation.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think the Senator from Utah denies that at all; but he has appealed to me to leave in the language on account of the services Mr. Gilbert is rendering. If he would ask unanimous consent to put into the bill provision for a First Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, at $7,500, I should not object to it; but I am unwilling to withdraw my point of order against the amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I am very greatly interested in preserving the integrity of this rule. I am very clear that if the Senator from Utah is right, and the provision in the existing appropriation law will expire on the 1st day of next July, then the point of order is well taken with reference to the pending proposition; because if it does expire, this is clearly new legislation. I am not so clear, however, that the Senator from Utah is right when he says that the existing provision will expire on the 1st day of next July.

Mr. SMOOT. The appropriation, I said.

Mr. LENROOT. No; the Senator said the provision. That is why it will have to be repeated.

Mr. SMOOT. If I said the provision, I meant the appropriation.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, the appropriation expires. The whole question is, is this permanent law in the existing appropriation act? If it is, of course it is not necessary to repeat the language, because it is not new legislation. I am clear that as to a part of this provision it is permanent law, because we have the provision that in case of the death, resignation, absence, or sickness of the Secretary, the Undersecretary shall perform the duties of the Secretary until a successor is appointed, or such absence or sickness shall cease. If on the 29th day of June next the Secretary of the Treasury should become disabled, this provision would apply. The Undersecretary would continue to perform the duties of the Secretary, under this provision, beyond the first day of next July. To that extent certainly it is permanent legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. If I said the provision, I meant the appropriation. If the suggestion made by the Senator from Tennessee as to the First Secretary were carried out, then it would not apply to the law, because the law specifically says he shall be the Undersecretary, and we could not change it at this time. I really think the only safe thing to do is for the Senator from Tennessee to allow this provision to go in this year, and in the meantime, if we want to change it, let us change it by law.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I do not believe we ever passed a law providing for this office, unless it was put on an appropriation bill. The Senator will remember that the office of Undersecretary of State was created in the same way, by an amendment to an appropriation bill, by legislation on an appropriation bill. That is the way it has been done. To say that under our rules you have to repeal temporary legislation of this kind, on appropriation bills, by a general law, seems to me to go far beyond what our rules contemplate when they provide that no new legislation shall go on an appropriation bill.

There is no reason in the world why we can not substitute the words "First Assistant Secretary of the Treasury" for the words "Undersecretary of the Treasury," and leave it just as it is otherwise. I am perfectly willing to have that done. I do not want to be misunderstood. I shall not object to it if "First Assistant Secretary" is put in the place of "Undersecretary."

Mr. LENROOT. If this is permanent legislation, providing for an Undersecretary, the insertion of this language now, providing for a First Assistant Secretary, would leave an Undersecretary and a First Assistant Secretary, would it not?

Mr. McKELLAR. It might. We would then be taking the chances of that. Of course it just shows the impropriety of legislating in this way. To undertake to put a provision of this kind in an appropriation bill shows an utter lack of a legislative program.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I wish to make one more suggestion. If this is not new legislation, there is no occasion for repeating the language, and the appropriation should simply have been made $7,500 for the Undersecretary. Of course, if this language is necessary, it is new legislation. That is all I have to say.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has raised an interesting proposition in connection with the point of order. In my judgment, the question of law to be determined by the Chair is whether the provision is a reenactment from year to year of the authorization of this office. Under the decisions of the House of Representatives the reenactment from year to year of a law intended to apply only during the year of its enactment does not relieve the provision from the point of order.

Evidently the Committee on Appropriations took the view of the matter as first expressed by the Senator from Utah, namely, that the provision in the former appropriation act expired by limitation of law with that appropriation, and that it was necessary to reenact the provision in this bill, because that is the course which the committee pursued. If that is correct, the provision is subject to the point of order. If, however, the existing law permanently created the position of Undersecretary of the Treasury, there is no necessity in the appropriation bill for creating it again. The only step that the committee need have taken was to provide the funds necessary to pay the salary of the office already created and authorized.

Mr. SMITH. May I ask the Senator from Arkansas if he is advised as to the form in which the matter came over from the House?

Mr. ROBINSON. The provision was not in the bill as it came from the House. This is a Senate committee amendment.

The Senator from Wyoming stated—and I assume his statement is correct—that the House committee first incorporated the provision in the bill and it was stricken out on a point of order in the House, the identical point of order that is made here, under a rule so closely analogous to the rule of the Senate that no distinction of value from a legal standpoint can be made. Our rule was enacted to conform to the precedents and practice of the House of Representatives. It was to enable the Senate to protect itself against a practice, which had become quite general here, of placing in appropriation bills authorizations for large expenditures and coupling with those authorizations the appropriation necessary to supply the demand just created. The House struck out the provision under a point of order identical, substantially, with that made by the Senator from Tennessee, under a rule closely analogous to, if not identical with, the Senate rule. The Senate rule was enacted in order to conform its precedents to the practices of the House of Representatives.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it not true that, under the rules of the House, if the amendment is permitted to go in, the House will have to have a yea-and-nay vote separately on the provision when the bill goes back there because of its being new legislation? Under their rules, as I recall, that would be the case, I am quite positive, and they would have to vote separately on the question.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; the House conferees, under the practice of the House that prevails there, would be compelled to request that the matter be submitted to the House of Representatives for a special vote. However, that is not the controlling consideration.

Mr. McKELLAR. It will have this effect, that the House, having stricken it out on a point of order, will then have to vote on the very thing which was stricken out and which ought to have been stricken out under the House rules and under the Senate rules.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think the Senator from Tennessee is right in assuming that the House, having held it obnoxious to a point of order, would require its conferees to invoke the rule of the House that permits the matter to be submitted to the House for a separate vote.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I suggest, on the point raised by the Senator from Wisconsin, that the appropriation is made here for "Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, $7,500." That does not go into effect immediately. The bill covers the period up to June 30, 1924. The salary would really begin July 1, 1923, and the Undersecretary would hold office until June 30, 1924, and then the Assistant Secretary would draw the salary of $7,500 after that time. So we would not be duplicating the service and the pay.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator is right, after July 1, 1923, that would be an Undersecretary created by law, with his duties created by law, with his salary fixed by law, but merely no appropriation made to pay for it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then why should not the amendment simply appropriate $7,500 and let him take his chances on it? I imagine he would not want to take his chances on it, because I do not think it is the law.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, it seems to me that the question revolves around the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], but I am unable to agree to the suggestion that if the item were stricken out of the bill there would be an office of Undersecretary of the Treasury after the 1st of next July. The appropriation bill, which we are now considering, is limited to a duration of one fiscal year, and the law which we enacted a year ago was likewise limited. It seems to me that if the item were stricken out of the bill, after the 30th day of next June there would be no such office in existence as Undersecretary of the Treasury.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I gladly yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator take the position that Congress can not in an appropriation bill create a permanent office?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I do not, but my contention is that the language of the existing appropriation act does not do that. The law which we enacted a year ago used the following language:

That the following sums are appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: For the Treasury Department, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, namely—

Then—

Salaries: Secretary of the Treasury, $12,000; Undersecretary of the Treasury, to be nominated—

And so forth. That is, for one year there is created the office of Undersecretary, and the appropriation is made for that office accordingly. It did not undertake to create generally the office of Undersecretary of the Treasury, and it seems to me, under a fair construction of the language of the act, if there be no new legislation, that on the 30th day of next June there will cease to exist the office of Undersecretary, because the language of the act specifically limits its operation to one year, which shall end on the 30th day of next June, and after that date, if there be no such legislation as that contained in the pending bill, the President of the United States would have no authority, in my judgment, to appoint an Undersecretary. It is consistent with the purpose and general tenor of an appropriation bill that it shall be limited in its operation to a period of one year.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Secretary of the Treasury should die on the 29th day of next June, how long would the Undersecretary continue to perform the duties of Secretary?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. He would go out of office on the 1st day of next July, in my judgment, and there would be no such office in existence on the 1st day of next July.

Mr. LENROOT. Notwithstanding the language expressly says that he shall perform the duties of the Secretary until his successor is appointed and qualified?

Mr. McKELLAR. That would be true, because this is an appropriation bill which expires by its own limitation.

Mr. LENROOT. With reference to that suggestion, the appropriation expires, of course; but there may be, and in every appropriation bill is, as a rule, legislation which goes beyond the year. Simply because it is an appropriation bill has nothing to do with the subject. It is a question as to whether it was the intention of Congress in the legislative provision to make it permanent legislation or not.

Mr. McKELLAR. I call the attention of the Chair and of the Senator from Wisconsin, too, to the fact that this is absolutely a new office created by this particular bill for a limited time, and that is shown in the total appropriation, it seems to me. Under the bill as it came from the House there were three salaries which are provided for by law. There are only three of them, and the House appropriated for those three and the total amount of those and other appropriations, as will be seen in line 15, was $65,760. The addition of the new office which is created by the proposed amendment makes a total of $73,260, showing indisputably that the general law now provides for those salaries and they have all been appropriated for. There are not four Assistant Secretaries; there are only three under the general law, and they have been provided for, and unless the legislation is enacted the Undersecretary will have no place at all. That is the truth of the matter, and if there is to be a position of that kind it ought to be established by law and then appropriated for.

Mr. LENROOT. There has just been called to my attention this precedent. The office of Assistant Secretary of the Senate was created on a deficiency appropriation act several years ago. The paragraph reads:

There shall be employed in the office of the Secretary of the Senate an Assistant Secretary (Henry M. Rose), who shall receive compensation at the rate of $5,000 per annum.

Legislative appropriation bills since have not repeated the words creating the office, but have simply appropriated for the office of Assistant Secretary, naming Mr. Rose, $5,000. It seems to me that this is exactly the same situation.

Mr. WARREN. That is the case with probably three-fourths of all the salaries which are carried here, and in fact nearly all of them outside of the regular civil-service appointees in each department. I agree with the Senator perfectly that it is just as strong in the present case as in the one to which he refers, because the law states that the Assistant Secretary shall perform the duties of Secretary until his successor is appointed or such absence shall cease. I agree with the Senator that the money might not be there, but the service would be rendered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the act of the early part of 1922 created the office of Undersecretary of the Treasury, and that while the present amendment may be entirely unnecessary and useless legislation, it is not new legislation. The point of order is overruled. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WARREN. That is the amendment as stated in the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. McKELLAR. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state the inquiry.

Mr. SMITH. The question is whether or not the amendment proposed by the committee shall remain in the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as proposed by the committee.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, line 15, to increase the total appropriation for the office of the Secretary from $65,760 to $73,260.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Office of chief clerk," on page 2, line 21, after the word "Secretary," to insert the word "Undersecretary," so as to read:

Salaries: Chief clerk, including $300 as superintendent of Treasury Building, who shall be the chief executive officer of the department and who may be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury to sign official papers and documents during the temporary absence of the Secretary, Undersecretary, and Assistant Secretaries of the department, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Customs Service," on page 18, line 18, after the word "revenue," to strike out "$11,950,000" and to insert "$12,250,000," and in line 19, after the word "which," to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$500,000," so as to read:

For collecting the revenue from customs, including not exceeding $300,000 for the detection and prevention of frauds upon the customs revenue, $12,250,000, of which $500,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator from Wyoming why the increase is proposed by this amendment from $11,950,000 to $12,250,000? Is that increase involved in any deficiency bill?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, this amendment simply involves the question of providing sufficient funds for the collection of customs. We have not exceeded the estimate of the Budget. The question is whether even the appropriation asked for in the Budget will enable the department to provide properly for the collection of the customs and fulfill the other duties which officials of the department have to perform. Quite a large amount of money appropriated is made available for the present year. While that method does not meet with my approval, and it had not already been adopted by the other House, in any event, so far as results are concerned, it is as broad as it is long. If we do not increase the appropriation to the amount of $12,250,000 at this point, ultimately the sum will have to be appropriated under another heading. These appropriations are all necessary and are all within the estimates.

Mr. FLETCHER. There will be needed additional help in the District of Columbia to the extent provided by an appropriation of $40,000.

Mr. WARREN. That is correct.

Mr. FLETCHER "In addition to the sums herein and heretofore authorized"?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 18, at the end of line 19, after the word "available," to insert "and $40,000 of the $12,250,000 to be available for expenditure in the District of Columbia in addition to the sums herein and heretofore authorized."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, in connection with the amendments which have just been agreed to, may I ask the chairman of the committee if he has at hand the figures as to the relative cost to the Government for collecting taxes under the Internal Revenue Department compared with the cost a few years ago?

Mr. WARREN. That comes under another head. Does the Senator wish to know how much it costs to collect the taxes?

Mr. HARRISON. I am merely wondering if it costs the Government as much now to collect taxes as it cost heretofore, say, during the last five years.

Mr. WARREN. I think it costs nearly as much, because it is necessary to provide appropriations not only for the collection of the regular taxes but to provide for the examination and auditing of taxes collected as far back as 1917 up to the present time. Additional taxes collected on account of corrections made on reexaminations have amounted to something in the neighborhood of two or three hundred million dollars a year, but at the same time the Government is being obliged to pay back certain refunds on account of taxes illegally collected. The cost, therefore, is large, but the work, I may say, is perhaps more important and fully as exhaustive as heretofore.

Mr. HARRISON. I saw the other day in some newspaper an item to the effect that the cost of collecting taxes had increased greatly.

Mr. SMOOT. That is, the percentage of cost.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; the percentage of cost. I was just wondering about that, and if the Senator has any figures, I should be glad to have him give them.

Mr. WARREN. I may say that the appropriation to pay the expense of collecting the taxes has been reduced some millions of dollars. In reference to the collection of taxes, I think that, with the experience which has been obtained and with the curb which has been placed on the raising of salaries, and so forth, the work is being carried on with the expenditure of less money than heretofore. This very bill contains a clause which prevents increasing salaries paid from lump sums. Employees so paid must have their grades and places and receive compensation accordingly, much the same as in the case of employees in the regular civil service.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I noticed the statement in the newspapers, to which the Senator from Mississippi has referred, to the effect that it was costing more for each dollar collected than it did in years past. That is true. The reason of that is that it takes just as much time for an employee of the Government to examine the return of an institution which made, say, $10,000,000 during each of the years 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920 as it does to-day, when the same institution, perhaps, only makes a profit of $500,000. Therefore the percentage of cost to the amount collected is larger to-day than it was during the years which I have mentioned. The appropriations, however, are less, as the Senator from Wyoming has said.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi is entitled to the figures. The appropriation for the purpose of paying expenditures incident to the collection of taxes last year was $60,628,380; under the pending bill for the same purpose there is proposed to be appropriated $57,360,290. Of course, as the Senator knows, some of the matters included involve even more expense than heretofore; for instance, there is the enforcement of the prohibition act, and the figures stated include the appropriations for that purpose. The Senator knows that the enforcement of that act is being pushed forward more vigorously than heretofore. As I stated before, the collection of back taxes was not kept up because we did not appropriate enough in the earlier years to give them the necessary accountants and examiners. That is now, I believe, being thoroughly done, so that the year 1917, I am informed, has had the last case adjudicated, or it is under adjudication, and they have adjudicated many of the cases arising in the later years, but there is quite a large amount yet requiring attention.

Mr. HARRISON. The reason why I propounded the question was that I thought the American people deserved an explanation of this report. We read of economies that have been effected and savings worked by the Government bureaus, and yet this report states that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue says that it cost $1.07 to collect every $100 of tax for the fiscal year ending 1922. The previous report showed that in 1921 it cost 72 cents to collect each $100. That is a pretty large increase in the cost of collecting that $100. The report in 1920 showed that it cost only 55 cents to collect each $100; in 1919 it cost only 53 cents to collect every $100; and in 1918 it cost only 32 cents to collect every $100. For the last year the cost is given as $1.07, showing that there is an increase of 100 per cent in the cost. So I am glad to hear the statement that it is not due to bad management up there, but that there is a real explanation for the very large increase in the cost of collecting of this money.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to say to the Senator that when I read that statement it was my intention to answer it on the floor of the Senate at the time, but an occasion did not arise when I could do it; but I am sure the Senator sees the reason for the difference. Of course, in 1918, when everybody was making so much money and we collected between seven and eight billion dollars, there was not any more help required to do it than there is to-day, when the amount is falling down to about $3,000,000,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator how far behind they are in the matter of examining these returns? It seems to me rather important that the taxpayer should know where he stands.

Mr. SMOOT. I think they are absolutely through with 1917, and I suppose 80 or 85 per cent of 1918 and 1919 and 1920, and perhaps 1921, is settled. The remaining cases are those where there are disputes in those years, and only those where the Government really has to go into details and have an investigation made; and I hardly think the percentage of unsettled cases is as large as I have stated. I have not heard of late.

Mr. FLETCHER. About 15 per cent for each of the years?

Mr. SMOOT. Taking all of the years of 1918, 1919, 1920, and 1921. That may be a little large, but I am not quite sure. Of course, that means that a great many returns have to be investigated, but it is only where the face of the return shows a discrepancy; and it is very much easier now to arrive at the correct result by comparing the returns with former ones made by the same individual or corporation than it was in the beginning, when there was nothing to compare. So the work from now on is not going to be as difficult as the work was in the past, where we had to take virgin ground and go into nearly every case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriation for suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes, on page 36, line 2, to strike out "$415,000" and insert "$425,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 1, to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$1,500," so as to read:

For wages of workmen and other employees, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, after line 16, to insert:

DEADWOOD, S. DAK., ASSAY OFFICE.

Salaries: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $1,800.
For wages of workmen and other employees, $1,000.
For incidental and contingent expenses, $300.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I move to amend the committee amendment by inserting, after the figures "$1,800," in line 19, the following:

Assistant assayer, $1,200; in all, $3,000.

I hope there will be no objection to that amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I do not know whether we can protect that in the conference, but I am inclined to accept it and let it go to conference. I will say to the Senate that it is within the estimate.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; I think there will be no conflict in conference over that amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice that at the Salt Lake assay office they are only given an assayer at $1,800, the same as at Deadwood, S. Dak.

Mr. STERLING. That is true; but the Senate will also notice that there is appropriated for the salaries of workmen and other employees at Salt Lake $1,200, as well as at Carson City.

Mr. SMOOT. Deadwood has $1,000 and incidental expenses of $300—the same in both cases. I think we have a great deal more assaying to do than at Deadwood.

Mr. STERLING. I do not know; I hardly think so.

Mr. SMOOT. We have that great intermountain country.

Mr. STERLING. Can the Senator state the number of assays a year at Salt Lake?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I have not that information.

Mr. STERLING. I can give the Senator the figures in regard to the Deadwood office.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not the figures with me. I did not know this matter was coming up.

Mr. STERLING. There were 1,330 assays at the Deadwood office in the last year, and with the renewed activity in mining operations out there there will be a great many more. It will be impossible to do without an assistant assayer at the Deadwood office.

Mr. SMOOT. It would not surprise me if there were twice or three times that number at Salt Lake City.

Mr. STERLING. I doubt that very much.

Mr. SMOOT. I say I do not know; I have not the figures.

Mr. STERLING. Deadwood is in the heart of one of the great mining regions of this country, as the Senator, I think, knows.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, is there enough work to keep one man occupied continuously, or only at periods?

Mr. STERLING. There is, certainly. I will say to the Senator that there is an average of about four assays each day of the year. That has been true during the past year; and, as I have just stated to the Senator, there is a great renewal of mining activities now in the hills. Let me say to the Senator from Florida that these assays are for the benefit of the miner and the prospector, those in the community. It is not a great deposit assay office. We grant that. There are comparatively few deposits of bullion there, but it accommodates the people of that vicinity and in all that mining region.

I will say to the Senator that the production of gold in the Black Hills alone is about $7,000,000 a year. One mine produces nearly that amount a year, and then $100,000 worth of silver is produced in that region.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I inquire of the Senator, because I have very little information on the subject, what is involved in the making of an assay? How much time does it take?

Mr. STERLING. I can not state how much time is taken in an assay; but the prospector takes there the product that he has mined, and has it assayed, and a determination made as to the quantity of gold in the material or ore taken by him to the assay office.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator said they made three or four assays a day, and I was just wondering how much time it took. I presume that varies somewhat.

Mr. STERLING. I do not know how much time it takes, but I should think it would take considerable time and skill to make a careful assay of ore taken to the assay office.

Mr. FLETCHER. What is this item for incidental and contingent expenses?

Mr. STERLING. I would not be able to state just what the incidental and contingent expenses are. I suppose probably it may be in the purchase of some material or the making of some necessary repairs.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether the assayer there is a competent assayer, or do they have to have another man to do the work?

Mr. STERLING. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that he is not the most expert assayer, and they have depended hitherto on the expert who is the assistant assayer at that place.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the trouble about it, and the House seems to have realized that in striking it out—that they appoint a man who does not know anything about this business as the head man, and give him an assistant who is an expert. They provide, at most of these places, that the head man shall be an expert in his business. He ought to be. Every one of them ought to be an expert; but they appoint a man there who does not know the business, and he does not do a thing but just sit down there and look on and draw his salary, while the expert does all the work. The Senator knows that that is so.

Mr. STERLING. The assistant assayer is the real expert; but the other man, Mr. Stewart, is a splendid man, a splendid supervisor.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no doubt he is a splendid man, but what work can he do? What can he do to earn his salary?

Mr. STERLING. He has the general charge of the office; he gives directions in regard to assaying, and so on.

Mr. OVERMAN. If he does not know anything about assaying, he can not give any directions about it.

Mr. STERLING. Let me call the attention of the Senator to what he is required to do under the provisions of this amendment:

Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $1,800.

Mr. OVERMAN. And he does not know a thing about it, and wants another assayer to assist him and do all the work, and the chief assayer does not do a thing on earth but draw his salary. The House left it out entirely. It seemed to me we were doing a great deal when we put it back again and put him on a par with a great many others of the same kind, where it is provided that the assayer shall know something about his business and that he shall do his own melting and assaying.

Mr. STERLING. I believe that the chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House will see the justice of retaining the assistant assayer if the Deadwood office is retained, and that there will be no conflict in conference over it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I agree with the Senator that we ought to put it back as to the assayer; but when it comes to giving an assistant assayer the committee thought we ought not to do that, because the chief assayer ought to know his business. This chief assayer does not know his business. He does not know a thing about it.

Mr. STERLING. I think he knows something about it, but, of course, he is not the technical expert that the assistant is in this case.

Mr. OVERMAN. He can not do the work.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the committee amendment on page 44, line 19, by inserting after the numerals "$1,800," and before the period, a semicolon and the words "assistant assayer, $1,200; in all, $3,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 45, line 19, after the figures "$1,800," I move to insert "assistant assayer, $1,200; in all, $3,000."

Mr. OVERMAN. I am not going to object to that, but it shows the evil of this kind of legislation. Of course, the Senator from Utah is entitled to have an assistant included if the Senator from South Dakota is entitled to one, and if the Senator from Montana were here he would say he was entitled to the same thing. I am not going to object to it, and if the House left that out let us put it in for Uah and everywhere else.

Mr. WARREN. These are matters which have been included in the estimates. I notice they took a great deal of testimony before the Budget officer and he estimated these amounts; hence, I do not object to it.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the chairman please, I think he estimated for Salt Lake, but did not estimate for South Dakota.

Mr. WARREN. Fifteen hundred dollars was estimated for Salt Lake, and I said I would consent to $1,200, and the Senator has made his amendment in that amount.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the provision be made for all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 45, line 19, at the end of the line, after the numerals "$1,800" and before the period, insert a semicolon and the words "assistant assayer, $1,200. In all, $3,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, on page 48, line 6, I move to strike out "$375,000" and insert "$700,000." Also to add the paragraph which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 48, line 6, to strike out "$375,000" and in lieu insert "$700,000" and the following proviso:

Provided, That where any appropriation has been made for any authorized post-office building, and a site acquired and the balance of the appropriation after paying for the site is insufficient to construct and furnish the building, in accordance with the plans of the Supervising Architect, such appropriation may be supplemented in a sum not to exceed $20,000 from this appropriation.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I admire the Senator and I sympathize with him most sincerely about these public buildings. We have one hundred and thirty-odd of them in the same fix. There are three of them in my State, and some of them date back to 1912. But the Senator's proposition is a matter of legislation and has no place here. Therefore I object to it and make a point of order against it as being legislation.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I was in hopes I could get help from the Senator from Wyoming. He says there are three of these buildings in his State. No doubt they need them badly. What I am trying to do is not to establish new propositions but to carry out those where the land has already been purchased. Of course, I understand this matter should come from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds if it were a new proposition, but it has passed that committee now, and is a question of appropriation. So it seems to me it is proper, and that this amendment is in order. If we do not do something like this, probably we will have to pass a general building bill to erect post offices in some places in the country where we need them and need them badly, and I think this would answer the purpose temporarily. I trust the Senator will not object to it. We have one in my State, and the Secretary of the Treasury informs me that the appropriation is not quite sufficient to build the appropriate building. The land has already been bought, and it seems to me this would be a very appropriate time to start to erect those buildings. I know other places where they need them and need them very badly.

Mr. WARREN. It hardly matters about the terms of the bill, because the whole subject is one which has to be handled, as the Senator has indicated, and probably there will have to be an omnibus bill. I hope that during this session we may have one to complete these buildings, some of the appropriations for which have already been made under the law. As to a hundred and thirty of the buildings, the appropriations have been made in full, but the legislation locating public buildings provides for less than the amount of any bids they can receive under which construction can be instituted which would be satisfactory to the representatives from the States. All this could be handled if the Senators and Members of the House would reduce the cost of the buildings to the amount which has been appropriated. But we have never in all my experience in the Senate varied from the rule that any enlargement of those public buildings must be provided for, so far as the authority is concerned, in a regular legislative way, before they can be considered by the Appropriations Committee or inserted in their bills. Hence I make the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

The next amendment of the committee was, under the item "General expenses," on page 52, line 24, after the word "postage," to insert the following words:

incident to shipments of drawings, superintendent's furniture and supplies, testing instruments, etc., including articles and supplies not usually payable from other appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item "Operating supplies," on page 56, line 17, to strike out "$2,800,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,900,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. RANSDELL. I move to strike out, on page 42, line 23, "$3,720" and insert in lieu thereof "$4,900." I understand that amount was recommended by the Budget Bureau.

Mr. WARREN. That is true; but there was a time when the product at New Orleans was confined to only a few items, and this assay office was stricken out entirely on one or two occasions. But I have been informed that there is now a very large business done in New Orleans, and, so far as I may, as the Senator in charge of the bill, I accept the amendment so that it may go to conference, and we will do the best we can for it. It was estimated for.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am very much obliged to the Senator. I have been informed that there is a considerable increase in the work of that office.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, for the purpose of getting some information, I move to strike out lines 6, 7, and 8, on page 28, in the following words:

No part of the appropriations made herein for the Internal Revenue Service shall be used to increase the compensation of any class or grade of officers or employees.

I offer this amendment in order to get a statement of the facts from the chairman of the committee. A great deal of complaint has come to me from various quarters relative to the effect of this language. I do not know whether the language ought to be stricken out altogether or not; perhaps something ought to be substituted for it, but this is the situation which has developed in at least one of the offices in Ohio. As a result of this language, which was in a preceding law, and which is proposed to be readopted here, the old, higher salaried employees are going out of office gradually. Those in charge of the office find it impossible, under the operation of this clause, to increase salaries, and as a result they are losing their most competent and efficient employees.

There ought to be some remedy for this condition. We all want the Government service efficient, and we want to keep in it men who are qualified. I know in the case of at least two offices in Ohio, of which I have personal information, that they are being very seriously crippled and handicapped in their work owing to the fact that their best men are leaving them. Perhaps the chairman could suggest an explanation or offer a substitute. I yield to him.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, this is no new matter. It is quite old, and we had before us the representative of the particular department under which this comes, and very close attention was given to him.

This is the condition: The Appropriations Committee has constant demands made on it for larger salaries, and so many people have so many ideas about salaries that we have gotten nowhere as to a final settlement, which we expect to reach very soon under the reclassification scheme, which will probably be just as effective in this particular branch of the Government as in any other. But these payments are from a lump sum, and the constant pounding, if I may use that word, of employees for larger salaries has sometimes heretofore carried many of these lump sums all the way from the grass roots to the clouds, and it has been necessary to halt them in such language as we are using here.

This applies to probably seven or eight thousand people, and when the law was passed it was made so as to be operative several months after the passage of the bill, giving the department that much notice that it would be the rule after that date. They had time to make their salaries and grades and classes accordingly. They made their grades and adopted their salaries in view of this provision, and during the year or two past, when certainly the salaries were and ought to have been as high as now, usually higher, they have proceeded without serious trouble.

It is true that every now and then a man in the Government service finds that he can get a great deal more out of a lump sum, and I will cite one particular instance to the Senator. We had in the Committee on Appropriations a junior clerk who was getting $1,440. He was taken away by an offer of $3,600, and immediately he left our service, and I presume he was worth what he got in the service to which he went. But if we are to have any control whatever over these lump sums we must have some kind of restraint, and in this case we open the door, as I understand it, as the legislation shows, for them to fix the salaries within the appropriation. We asked them to fix those salaries, and they did so. But, of course, complaints come, and they beg us to remove the restraint so that they can raise a salary, which I do not believe we should do.

Mr. WILLIS. Of course, the Senator sees the difficulty of the situation. An employee who goes out of office has been receiving $1,800 or $2,000 a year, perhaps, and the man who comes in and takes his place receives only $1,200. Now, that can have but one inevitable result. The more experienced men are certainly going to leave the service.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, that is a strained construction. Not a man goes out to a higher place but that the man next to him can take his place. But they make the rule that a newcomer must begin at the bottom, $1,200, and he goes to the foot of the list and then goes up with the others, very much in the same way as civil-service employees, who have their class numbers 1, 2, 3, 4, and so forth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the indications are that we shall soon dispose of the appropriation bill now before the Senate. So I ask that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, just another word on the amendment I have offered. Attention was drawn to it in the hearings. One speaking for the head of the department that is involved in this matter made this comment in response to the following question:

> The CHAIRMAN. Your next item is on page 90. It is proposed in connection with this item to eliminate this language:
> "No part of the appropriation made herein for the Internal Revenue Service shall be used to increase the compensation of any class or grade of officers or employees."
> That was put in advisedly; it was not put in because we did not want to enforce it. Why do you want it stricken out, because you want unlimited authority to increase compensation?
> Mr. NASH. If we are not permitted to make promotions in meritorious cases our entire service will suffer. The reaction among the field officers has been such that we have been embarrassed by that clause.
> The CHAIRMAN. I guess we will have to continue to embarrass you by it, because we do not propose to allow unlimited authority to increase compensation out of lump-sum appropriations.

To find out more in detail about this matter I wrote to one of the officers in the State I have the honor to represent in part, and I wish to read one paragraph from his letter. I wrote for information about the effect of the provision. He said:

> Previous to this rider being placed in the bill we were permitted to make promotions semiannually and to use money saved from the salaries of employees who resigned or were removed from the service, i. e., if an employee resigned or was removed who was receiving $1,800 and the new employee coming in was started at $1,600, we could give the $200 to some deserving employee. Under the new ruling, however, this $200 reverts back to the bureau. We were also allowed an additional appropriation semiannually for promotions. It is also my understanding that we can make no more general promotions.
> As explained to you, practically all of our field men are getting around $1,700 per annum, as they were compelled to start at the minimum salary, while the outgoing force was getting around $1,900 or $2,000.

I do not know whether it will be safe to strike out this language without having some substitute for it, but it does seem to me there ought to be some arrangement whereby we can retain in the service men of ability and experience. I am certainly in favor of economy, but if we cut the salaries so low that efficient men will not stay in the service, the Government will suffer thereby.

Mr. WARREN. That always has been the case and always will be the case, that some must leave the Government service. I shall be glad to join with the Senator in taking up the matter when we get to the reclassification measure. I am trying to do justice to them all. I do not wish to introduce politics into the question at all, but the fact is if a lump sum were placed at their disposal for salaries there might be favoritism from time to time, and funds used for different purposes than those for which they were appropriated. Some restraint is necessary and we have adopted this as being the least obnoxious of any measure. Of course there is always the case that some employees will implore us to act differently. So far as the evidence taken before the House committee is concerned, while the matter did not come up in that case, yet there was a plea for larger salaries all the way through. We had before the committee a man who was a very excellent witness, and he presented the case before us with all the strength that there is in the problem, but I think he was rather contented when he left that the best we could do would be to let them go on under this arrangement until we can bring about reclassification.

Mr. WILLIS. May we have a vote on the amendment?

Mr. WARREN. This is not an amendment as I understand it. It is a question of agreeing to the language of the bill as it came from the House. I did not understand that the Senator moved to strike it out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio moved to strike out lines 6, 7, and 8, on page 28, and the question is on his motion.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I have just entered the Chamber, and I am glad I did so at this time. I notice that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] has proposed to strike out lines 6, 7, and 8, on page 28, reading as follows:

> No part of the appropriations made herein for the Internal Revenue Service shall be used to increase the compensation of any class or grade of officers or employees.

I do not know the purpose of the motion, but it seems to me that the prohibition-enforcement department has been organized long enough for the Senate in its wisdom to take advantage of past experience and fix by statute certain limitations as to the compensation of enforcement officers.

I rose in order to call the attention of the Senate to a few things that were said in the city of New Orleans on December 4, the present month. It appears that the law-enforcement conference of the Anti-Saloon League of America was held at the Grunewald Hotel, New Orleans, La. In view of the many statements made on the floor of the Senate and in the House and generally on the part of those who have imposed upon the Nation the prohibition amendment to the Constitution, as well as the Volstead law, and in view of their professions of respect for the law and its enforcement and the fact that they denounce certain people who favor modification as being against law enforcement, and in view particularly of the fact that the President has seen fit to single out this law and to declare that this particular law must be enforced, I desire to compare the attitude of those who have stood in this Chamber and in this Nation for modification with reference to law enforcement and respect of law with the statements which are being circulated widely at this time by those who favor an absolute bone-dry enforcement of the eighteenth amendment.

The pending bill carries an appropriation of $9,000,000 for the prohibition-enforcement department. I have no objection to the $9,000,000 being appropriated, although when the Nation has laws such, for instance, as the Mann Act, laws to prevent the rifling of the mails, to prevent burglarizing banks, and the many statutes against such crimes as rape in certain jurisdictions, I do protest against singling out the Volstead law and expending $9,000,000 to enforce that law, whereas other very serious and detestable crimes, which are denounced by the moral laws, and have ever been denounced by the moral laws, as well as by statutes, are almost absolutely ignored and nothing said about them. Crimes that are wrong per se are left to be enforced by the ordinary peace officers, but millions must be spent to invade private homes and property and spy upon our people.

It must be that those who are responsible for the Volstead law and for the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution at this late day realize that when they attempted overnight to make a crime of something which was not a crime in its day, to convert what once was legalized and from which revenues were derived into a crime within 24 hours—that they realize now that, having embedded that proposition in the Constitution, the people generally are losing respect for the law.

Those of us who have been opposed to the Volstead law; those of us who have fought against the subjection of the industries of the Nation to the domination of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue without appeal to any court; those of us who opposed placing in the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the absolute discretion, without review, of limiting the quantity of alcohol to be used in a great many manufacturing industries of the country; those of us who opposed the limitations which have been placed upon the physicians contrary to the eighteenth amendment; those of us who have opposed all these nefarious schemes which are in effect in contradiction of the eighteenth amendment have been charged with being against law enforcement.

Mr. President, what I am about to read I think has not been printed generally throughout the United States, and I wish to place it in the RECORD, so as to show exactly who are for law enforcement in the Nation. At this gathering to which I have referred, held on December 4 in the city of New Orleans, we find such statements as I am about to read in order that they may appear in the RECORD, and I wish that the press of the Nation might carry them. I read from the Times-Picayune and the Daily States of December 4, 1922. For instance, Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler said:

> The average prohibition agent is patriotic and loyal, and the percentage of prohibition agents slain on duty is higher than the percentage of soldiers of the American Army slain during the World War. It is a shame that when these honored and hard-working men are shot down Federal judges often condone with the bootleggers instead of going after them.

Now, Mr. President, to the average reader this might appear to be a very light charge, but what say those who claim that people who advocate modification of the Volstead law are not for law enforcement when they themselves in public speech denounce the Federal judges as being, one might say, particeps criminis with those who kill the enforcement officers, and when they charge the Federal judges with condoning and pardoning and being too easy with murderers. That is a very serious charge, but that is only one of many statements made. I read another one:

> I want to reiterate what I said Sunday, said Dr. Purley A. Baker, general superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of America, at the opening of the second day of the law enforcement conference at the Grunewald Hotel, Monday: Twenty per cent of the Nation's Federal judges ought to be in the penitentiary at hard labor, or impeached.

Do those gentlemen stand for law enforcement? Are those men trying to uphold the judiciary of the Nation or are they trying to tear it down and create more disrespect for law? Law-abiding citizens are being denounced merely because they stand upon this floor and say they would like to see a modification of the Volstead law, not through any wrongdoing on the part of any judge or wrongdoing on the part of any Member of the Congress of the United States but merely, Mr. President, because the eighteenth amendment provides that "no intoxicating liquor," instead of "no alcoholic liquor" shall be manufactured, transported, and so forth, and we believe that under that amendment it was never intended to exclude alcohol altogether, otherwise the amendment would not have recited "no intoxicating liquor," and therefore we claim that within the purview and the intent of that amendment to the Constitution the Volstead law may be modified and liberalized.

But there are other statements which I want to bring to your attention. For instance, Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler made this statement, and I think it is a pretty serious charge to make.

> We have no fear of Congress nullifying the dry legislation, said Wayne B. Wheeler, national counsel for the league. The Anti-Saloon League controls Congress.

I think that many people in the United States have that opinion, that many people in the United States quite agree with Mr. Wheeler; but that statement does not make for law enforcement and respect for the law, Mr. President. Whether it be true or not is immaterial, so far as I view the question, but the charge puts every Member of Congress in disrepute and makes for less respect of the law. We find in this instance a man who claims that an organization controls the Congress of the United States, and therefore he helped to make people respect the law by proclaiming it, while those of us who believe that the constitutional amendment never was intended to justify the Volstead law but was intended to permit a more liberal interpretation than that law allows are denounced as people who create disrespect for the law.

However, Mr. Wheeler goes to New Orleans and claims that he and his organization are not worried at all. Why? Because the Anti-Saloon League controls Congress. Is there anybody here who will defend that statement?

As I said before, whether it is true or not, it makes for disrespect for the law, and these gentlemen are largely responsible for the condition prevailing throughout this Nation to-day. Those of us who opposed the eighteenth amendment predicted before it was adopted this very situation. For that reason we said, "if you wish to embark upon an experiment of that kind, for God's sake do not put it in the Constitution, but make it an act of Congress so that the people in case they disagree with it later may repeal it." These gentlemen claim that they are being impeded in their efforts to enforce the prohibition laws, but they get upon the rostrum and charge that 20 per cent of the Federal judges of the Nation ought to be impeached and be in the penitentiary and that they are not afraid of a modification of the law because the Anti-Saloon League controls the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, I want to quote again from Doctor Baker. I think that he makes a very severe arraignment. As a matter of fact, I have frequently thought since I read his remarks that Doctor Baker should be haled before the Federal courts for contempt. I do not think any Senator will take the floor and deny that this statement, for instance, should be taken cognizance of by the courts. Here is what Doctor Baker said:

> "These scoundrels"—
> "who sit on the bench, and I use the term advisedly," said Doctor Baker, referring to the 20 per cent of the Federal judges who he said were obstructing enforcement of the prohibition law, "are drunkards themselves. I hold them responsible for the shooting down of 300 splendid law-enforcement officers during the last year."

Mr. President, as I said before, it seems to me that no man holding a responsible position has a right to arraign 20 per cent of the Federal judges of the United States and to call them scoundrels and drunkards. If that be assisting in creating respect for the law and in securing cooperation for the enforcement of the Volstead law, then I am very much mistaken.

I think when Doctor Baker made that statement he knew of course that there was not a particle of truth in his charges against the Federal judges. In addition Doctor Baker said:

> Senator BROUSSARD of Louisiana, along with REED of Missouri, STANLEY of Kentucky, and EDWARDS of New Jersey, he said were representatives of neither Republican nor Democratic Parties, but representatives "of whisky."

Mr. President, I think I was the first candidate for the United States Senate who offered on a liberal platform. I was opposed by two gentlemen who were prohibitionists. There was not a single individual in the State of Louisiana but who knew absolutely my attitude. So when I went into a Democratic primary and was made the choice of the Democratic Party I think there is no doubt of the fact that the voters knew my position as to prohibition, because it was the first plank in the platform on which I stood. Doctor Baker also knew that Senator REED of Missouri had just been reelected, and that one of the issues of his campaign was his attitude in favor of a modification of the Volstead law. Doctor Baker knew, furthermore, that Governor Edwards for the last eight years has been pronounced in his opposition to the prohibition law and in favor of its modification, and that he had made his position an issue in his campaign. Everybody knows how the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] stands upon the issue. I merely mention this, Mr. President, not that there is any particular reason for mentioning it except in connection with the fact that the gentlemen who meet for the purpose of holding a national convention to discuss questions involving law enforcement think it proper to go out of their way to denounce Federal judges and Senators, and I suppose in other States where Members of Congress have disagreed with them they also make similar charges against them.

We have heretofore been slandered by the agents of the Anti-Saloon League, but all of us were elected despite the slanders and the libels which were printed against us, and we stand here now—certainly I for one stand here—irrespective of whatever charges are made against me, to redeem the preelection pledges which I made to my people. I have not experienced any change of heart on the subject; I am still against the present Volstead law, and I am for modification. I deny the right of any organization to go throughout the country and to spread such charges against Federal judges and against Members of the United States Senate as those to which I have referred.

Mr. President, I shall not oppose the appropriation of $9,000,000 for enforcing the Volstead law. Mr. Wheeler, however, claims that his organization controls the Congress, and I wish to give this piece of advice: The $9,000,000 proposed to be appropriated in this bill will never make effective the Volstead law.

If Mr. Wheeler and Doctor Baker will see that the $9,000,000 are used, first, to prosecute members of the Anti-Saloon League, the subscribers to that league, the members of the various State legislatures and the Congress who passed dry legislation, various officials throughout the several States of the Union, and the officials of the Federal Government who violate the Volstead law, $9,000,000 will not be sufficient to go around, leaving out of consideration others who are of moderate and liberal views. If the Anti-Saloon League should take this $9,000,000 and expend it, it would be impossible to enforce the law in the case of those who have thrust this measure upon this Nation. If Doctor Baker and his colleagues are sincere in their efforts, I challenge them to do what I have suggested. They say they control both branches of Congress. I would not vote for such a measure, but I challenge them to have incorporated in this bill $100,000,000 for enforcement of the prohibition act. They have the votes to get it through, and if they want to enforce the law let them vote the money necessary to do it. They know they can not do it with $9,000,000; but they want the $9,000,000 appropriation because they desire the Anti-Saloon League to continue this work and to be paid for it, and to have their agents receive their salaries. That is why they want this appropriation of $9,000,000, although, I repeat, that sum could not make the individuals responsible by their votes for the submission and ratification of the eighteenth amendment and then for the passage of the Volstead law observe that law, and they know it.

Mr. President, I do not intend to vote against the $9,000,000 appropriation. I am not against law enforcement. My attitude is quite the contrary; but I merely wanted to suggest that while these gentlemen are spending the taxpayers' money they go about denouncing those who do not agree with them.

I want further, Mr. President, to remind the Senate that when the bill to create 18 additional Federal judges in this country was before this body the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] made the charge that the officials of the Anti-Saloon League had made appeals to Members of the Senate to create the additional judges and to give some one the power to send a Federal judge from any district of the United States to any other district in the United States. It was stated that the purpose was to enable the selection of certain judges who would send men to jail, possibly, for having taken a drink with a friend or for having otherwise violated the Volstead law. They were defeated in that, but the charge was made and never refuted by anyone that there was an attempt to reach down into and tamper with the judiciary of the country, which should be at all times above reproach, which should at all times have the entire support and respect of every good, loyal citizen of the United States. When they failed in that and that feature of the bill was eliminated, then we find them going out in the various sections of the United States denouncing 20 per cent of the Federal judges of this country as scoundrels and drunkards and claiming that 20 per cent of them should be in the penitentiary.

I merely wanted the country to know, in other words, that we are proposing to spend $9,000,000 to help these fellows get along and continue to abuse the men who go into their pockets and put up the taxes which meet these payments.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he intends to offer an amendment on page 41 on behalf of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE], who is ill?

Mr. WARREN. I have the amendment before me ready to present, but there is now a motion pending to strike out three lines on page 28, which I hope will not prevail.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have one more amendment which I wish to offer. I may say that it has been considered by the members of the committee and has met with their approval. I offer the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 41, line 24, after the numerals "$1,800," it is proposed to insert "assistant assayer, $1,200; in all, $3,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE], who is ill, I ask that the letter which I send to the desk may be printed in the RECORD in connection with the amendment just adopted.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF DIRECTOR OF THE MINT,
Washington, December 12, 1922.

DEAR SENATOR ODDIE: Responding to your telephone communication of to-day relative to the appropriation for the support of the mint at Carson, I beg to submit the following:

The salary appropriation for the mint at Carson for the current year provides for one person, the assayer in charge, who is now required to do the work of the chief clerk, cashier, melter, and assayer. The wages fund provides $1,500, which is paid to one man, who is required to do the work of helper, janitor, and watchman.

The estimates as submitted by this bureau and approved by the Budget Bureau included a request for an assistant assayer at $1,500 and for wages, $1,000, to pay a watchman, who could also be employed to do janitor work, care for the grounds, and help wherever possible.

The bill as reported omits the technical assistant and reduces the amount of the appropriation for wages from $1,500 to $1,000.

With but two employees at the Carson Mint, as at present, it is necessary for the assayer in charge to not only do all of the technical and clerical work but to take the watchman's place at night if he has to be absent for a single hour from the building. The situation is obviously impossible and an assistant assayer should be allowed at this mint. As the bill stands we would be expected to induce a reliable man to work at the mint all day as helper and janitor and be watchman at night for the munificent sum of $1,000 a year; that is, he would spend every day in the year, 24 hours a day, at the mint without any relief, and with no one to relieve him even for temporary absence of the briefest period, except the assayer in charge.

It is physically impossible for one person to do unassisted the melting and assaying of metal, bookkeeping, cashier's work, and be responsible for the gold bullion belonging to the Government which is treated at that institution. At least one technical assistant should be allowed in addition to the assayer in charge, together with one watchman.

The estimate as submitted was the lowest possible for safety at this mint and called for the employment of but three persons:

Assayer in charge	$1,800
Assistant assayer	1,500
Watchman-janitor	1,000

This institution can not safely be maintained with less service and protection.

Very truly yours,
F. E. SCOBEY,
Director of the Mint.

HON. TASKER L. ODDIE,
United States Senate.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, that completes the bill so far as the committee is concerned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment. On page 20, after line 25, and before line 26, as a new subdivision, I move to insert the matter which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 20, after line 25, it is proposed to insert a new paragraph to read as follows:

That when used in this act the term "Federal farm loan act" means the Federal farm loan act approved July 17, 1916, as amended——

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, unless the chairman of the committee wants it read I will state that this is quite a long amendment——

Mr. WARREN. I shall be as well satisfied, perhaps, if the Senator will make a brief statement as to its provisions.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I do not care to take up the time of the Senate unnecessarily.

The bill that I have offered as an amendment is an agricultural credits bill, and it comes very properly under this part of the appropriation bill, the Federal Farm Loan Bureau, because this is the bill which a great many Senators are advocating, and which the President of the United States in his message to Congress a few days ago practically indorsed. It is what is known as the Lenroot bill, providing for agricultural credits through the creation in the Federal farm loan system of a separate bureau to make possible agricultural credits along more ambitious lines, with enlarged opportunities, than is now provided by law.

There are many details of the bill which of course in the discussion, unless a point of order is made to it, we can consider and discuss quite fully. I am explaining it now because I am sure the Senator from Wyoming understands the necessity for this legislation just as much as I do, or any other Senator. He knows the condition of the farmers of the country; that they have seen the prices of their products decline while the cost of the things that it was necessary for them to buy in order to produce their crops have gone up; that the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar has constantly depreciated. The Senator is quite aware of the fact that as far back as November 21 of this year the President of the United States, in addressing the Congress on the American merchant marine, employed not a great deal of language respecting agriculture, but what he did employ was quite forceful, and here is what he said:

> At the present moment the American farmer is the chief sufferer from the cruel readjustments which follow war's inflations, and befitting Government aid to our farmers is highly essential to our national welfare. No people may safely boast a good fortune which the farmer does not share.

Further, he says:

> To this problem, and such others of pressing importance as reasonably may be dealt with in the short session, I shall invite your attention at an early date.

In other words, away back a month ago he said that one of the first propositions coming before the regular session of Congress was to be agricultural credits.

Then, the other day, on December 8, in appearing before a joint meeting of the two Houses, the President again called the attention of the country and of Congress to the necessity of the prompt enactment at the present session of an agricultural credits bill; and he said in passing:

> The Farm Loan Bureau, which already has proven its usefulness through the Federal land banks, may well have its powers enlarged to provide ample farm production credits as well as enlarged land credits.

Mr. President, in addition to that message and the sentiment of the country for agricultural credits legislation and the fact that a year ago the joint commission of the two Houses on agricultural inquiry unanimously agreed to a report recommending the passage of legislation along the lines embodied in this amendment, a subcommittee of the farm bloc has been at work trying to agree on some kind of a plan to present to the other Members of the Senate in order that all the various elements in Congress may get behind the movement and obtain legislation for the farmer's relief during this session of the Congress.

The Lenroot provision does not in all of its details meet my approval; it does not meet the approval as a whole of any particular individual, perhaps; but it embodies so many good features and has been indorsed by so many elements in the Congress, including the President, that its passage would be insured at this session of Congress. There can not be a more opportune time for the Senate to take up the question and consider it than now; and the amendment that I have presented is the Lenroot bill, which was the bill recommended by the Joint Commission on Agricultural Inquiry and which has been indorsed by the subcommittee of the farm bloc, with some changes.

For instance, there are to be created 12 districts, 12 Federal farm land banks, and the amount specified for each one in this amendment is $10,000,000 instead of the $5,000,000 that is carried in the Lenroot proposal.

Another amendment to this proposal over the Lenroot provision is that in each agricultural or live-stock State an agency or branch shall be established to make these loans to the various interests and banks and cooperative associations. The proposal here allows agricultural paper to be rediscounted in the Federal reserve banks for nine months instead of the present limit of three or six months. It strikes out the provision that a State bank's indorsement will prevent the member banks of the Federal reserve system from discounting the paper. It is a splendid beginning. There may be other amendments that it would be wise to adopt, but it can be done in the consideration of this proposition. If a majority of the Senators should not agree to this amendment, but desire to offer a substitute, we can get a vote upon it; but the proposition that I wish to advance and urge upon the chairman of the committee and the Senate is to begin at this time on the floor of the Senate the consideration of agricultural credits legislation.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, a point of order would strike out the amendment. I will yield to the Senator in one second. A point of order would strike it out; but if the point is not made, we can consider this proposition, make amendments if necessary, and send it over to the House, and it will insure agricultural credit legislation at this time. If it is not done, the time of the Senate will be consumed in passing this ship subsidy bill, which is in charge of the distinguished Senator from Washington (Mr. JONES), who is sitting here ready to begin immediately after this bill is out of the way to consider this subsidy for the shipping interests of the country. Instead of relieving the wants of the farmers it will add to their burdens and enrich the coffers of the Shipping Trust. So I submit that if we who welcomed the message of the President to that extent and who believe in the speedy enactment of agricultural legislation really desire to procure it we shall have to begin now; and if under this provision of the appropriation bill making appropriations for the operation of the Federal Farm Loan Bureau we can consider this amendment, we will adopt some measure before the ship subsidy bill shall have been taken up and we will be moving along with a better program than the one you have presented in this short session of Congress.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator now yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield now to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. As the Senator knows, a point of order cuts off all debate?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. But I was too much interested in the subject to make it until we have listened to the very able presentation of the matter by the Senator. I have read the bill very carefully. I understand it. I expect to vote for it when the Senator brings it up; but, of course, I must now make the point of order, because this is legislation and can not go on an appropriation bill under our rules.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator to withhold that point for a moment? I know that if the point of order is made the amendment will go out.

Mr. WARREN. May I appeal to the Senator? I am getting hungry.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; and I am, too. We will eat together in a moment. When we get this agricultural credit provision up and out of a committee, does the Senator know whether or not the program of the steering committee is that the ship subsidy bill may be laid aside and that this most-needed legislation may be put ahead, so that the farmers will get some relief at the very earliest moment?

Mr. WARREN. In answer to that conundrum, I have not looked up the matter with my colleagues, but I very much hope that we may pass this bill, or some other one that may suit the Senator better, without regard to what other matters may be up. When it is presented again, in a proper way, I believe it will receive such unanimous support that it will not take a great deal of time. I do not want to base my approval of the bill or my expectation in regard to it upon any condition except that we want to pass the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. But the view of the Senator, as I understand, is that he believes that the Congress will be united for some legislation along this line, and that the sentiment is so strong that no matter what other legislation is up we can pass it so speedily, in such a short time, that we will really enact rural-credit legislation during this Congress.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator probably has observed that we have pending somewhere in the neighborhood of a dozen bills bearing upon this question. There has been a universal acceptance of the War Finance Corporation operations, which have to some extent helped to sustain the farmers, and it seems to be conceded that a further measure is needed because of the approaching expiration of the life of that measure; and that, added to all the other reasons that have been given, is a very strong factor.

If the Senator wishes to have his amendment printed, I have no objection.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I desire to have it printed.

Mr. HARRISON's amendment was to insert the following on page 20, after line 25:

> That when used in this act, the term "Federal farm loan act" means the Federal farm loan act approved July 17, 1916, as amended, and the "Federal reserve act" means the Federal reserve act approved December 23, 1913, as amended.
> SEC. 2. That section 1 of the Federal farm loan act is amended to read as follows:
> "TITLE I.
> "SECTION 1. That this act may be cited as the 'Federal farm loan act.' Its administration shall be under the direction and control of the Federal farm loan board hereinafter created."
> SEC. 3. That the Federal farm loan act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new title, to read as follows:
> "TITLE II.
> "SEC. 201. That in addition to the powers granted by Title I, each Federal land bank shall have power—
> "(a) Subject solely to such restrictions, limitations, and conditions as may be imposed by the Federal Farm Loan Board (1) to discount for, or purchase from, any national bank, State bank, trust company, rural credit corporation, incorporated live-stock loan or farm credit company, savings institution, cooperative bank, or cooperative credit or marketing association of agricultural producers organized under the laws of any State, or for any other Federal land bank, with its indorsement, any note, draft, bill of exchange, debenture, or other such obligation the proceeds of which have been advanced or used in the first instance for an agricultural purpose or for the raising, breeding, fattening, or marketing of live stock; (2) to buy or sell, with or without recourse, debentures issued by any other Federal land banks and (3) to make loans or advances direct to any cooperative association organized under the laws of any State and composed of persons engaged in producing, or producing and marketing, staple agricultural products, or live stock if the notes or other such obligations representing such loans are secured by warehouse receipts, and/or shipping documents covering such products, and/or by mortgages on live stock: Provided, That no Federal land bank shall discount paper for any national bank, State bank, or trust company which already has bills rediscounted equal to or exceeding the amount permitted by such bank or trust company under the laws of the jurisdiction creating the same: And provided further, That no paper shall be discounted for any incorporated live-stock loan company which has rediscounted paper equal to or exceeding ten times the paid-up capital stock and surplus of such company: And provided further, That if the laws of any jurisdiction under which any bank or trust company receiving demand deposits is created do not impose a limit upon the rediscount privilege of such bank or trust company, then no paper shall be rediscounted for such bank or trust company which has already rediscounted paper equal to or exceeding five times its paid-up capital stock and surplus. Such loans or discounts must have a maturity at the time they are made or discounted by the Federal land bank of not less than six months nor more than three years. Any Federal land bank may in its discretion sell loans or discounts made under this subdivision, with or without its indorsement. Rates of interest or discount charged by the Federal land banks upon such loans and discounts shall be subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board.

"(b) Subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board to issue and to sell collateral trust bonds or other such obligations with a maturity at the time of issue of not more than five years, which shall be secured by at least a like face amount of cash, or notes or other such obligations discounted or purchased or representing loans made under subdivision (a): Provided, That no Federal land bank shall have power to issue or obligate itself for debentures or other obligations under the provisions of this section in excess of ten times the amount of the paid-up capital and surplus of the farms credits department of such bank. The provisions of Title I relating to the preparation and issue of farm loan bonds shall, so far as applicable, govern the preparation and issue of bonds or other such obligations issued under this subdivision; but the Federal Farm Loan Board shall prescribe rules and regulations governing the receipt, custody, substitution, and release of collateral instruments securing such bonds or other obligations. Such collateral shall be held separate and distinct from the collateral securing farm loan bonds and may be classified in such manner as the Federal Farm Loan Board shall approve and bonds issued upon the basis of such classes of paper. Rates of interest upon bonds and other such obligations issued under this subdivision shall, subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, be fixed by the Federal land bank making the issue.

"SEC. 202. That before making any discounts under the provisions of this act, each Federal land bank shall establish and promulgate a rate of discount to be approved by the Federal Farm Loan Board. Any Federal land bank which has made an issue of debentures under the provisions of this act may thereafter establish, with the approval of the Farm Loan Board, a rate of discount not exceeding by more than 1 per cent the rate borne by its last preceding issue of debentures.

"No bank, trust company, live-stock company, or other agencies entitled to the privileges of this act, shall, without the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, be allowed to discount any note or other obligation, upon which the original borrower has been charged a rate of interest exceeding by more than 1½ per cent the discount rate of the Federal land bank at the time such loan was made.

"A Federal land bank may, subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, buy in the open market upon its own account and retire at or before maturity any such bonds or obligations issued by it.

"SEC. 203. That for the purpose of exercising the powers conferred by this title, each Federal land bank shall establish an agency or branch in each agricultural or live-stock State and operate under the supervision of its temporary directors and, after the establishment of the permanent organization, under the supervision of its district directors, a separate department to be designated as the farm credits department, for which $10,000,000 in capital shall be subscribed before any of the powers so conferred may be exercised. Capital stock of such amount shall be divided into shares of $5 each and shall be subscribed, held, and paid by the Government of the United States. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to subscribe to such capital stock on behalf of the United States, such subscription to be subject to call in whole or in part by the temporary or district directors of the Federal land bank upon 30 days' notice to the Secretary of the Treasury and with the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to take out shares as called and to pay for the same out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. Capital so allocated to a farm credits department and the surplus of such department shall be applied solely to meet obligations and losses, if any, incurred in the operation of that department; and the capital subscribed, together with the reserve under Title I shall not be applied to meeting obligations or losses, if any, incurred in the operation of any farm credits department.

"SEC. 204. That the Federal Farm Loan Board shall equitably apportion the joint expenses incurred by the farm loan department operating under Title I of this act and the farm credits department operating under Title II of this act in each Federal land bank, and shall assess against the farm credits department of each Federal land bank in proportion to the capital and reserve of such department its proportionate share of the expenses of any additional personnel in the Farm Loan Bureau made necessary in connection with the operation of this provision. After all expenses of the farm credit department have been met out of earnings the capital stock held by the Government of the United States shall be entitled to a dividend of 4 per cent per annum, which dividend shall be cumulative. After the aforesaid claims have been fully met the remaining earnings shall be paid into a surplus fund until such fund shall equal $2,000,000, and thereafter 25 per cent of the annual net earnings shall be paid to the Government of the United States in retirement of the stock owned by it until the stock of any farm credits department shall be reduced to $1,000,000.

"SEC. 205. That the farm credits department of any Federal land bank issuing bonds or other such obligations under section 201 shall be primarily liable therefor, and shall also be liable, upon presentation of the coupons for interest payments due upon any such bonds or obligations issued by the farm credits department of any other Federal land bank and remaining unpaid in consequence of the default of the farm credits department of such other Federal land bank. The farm credits department of any Federal land bank shall likewise be liable for such portion of the principal of bonds or obligations so issued as are not paid after the assets of the farm credits department of such other Federal land bank have been liquidated and distributed. Such losses, if any, either of interest or of principal, shall be assessed by the Federal Farm Loan Board against solvent farm credits departments of Federal land banks liable therefor in proportion to the amount of bonds or other such obligations which each may have outstanding at the time of such assessment. Every Federal land bank shall, by appropriate action of its board of directors duly recorded in its minutes, obligate itself to become liable on bonds and other such obligations as provided in this section.

"SEC. 206. That in order to enable each Federal land bank to carry out the purpose of this act, the Comptroller of the Currency is hereby authorized and directed, upon the request of any Federal land bank, (a) to furnish for the confidential use of such bank such reports, records, and other information as he may have available relating to the financial condition of national banks and rural credit corporations through or for which the Federal land bank has made or contemplates making discounts, and (b) to make, through his examiners, for the confidential use of the Federal land bank, examinations of State banks, trust companies, or savings institutions, rural credit corporations through or for which the Federal land bank has made or contemplates making discounts or loans: Provided, That no such examination shall be made without the consent of such State bank, trust company, or savings institution. Land-bank appraisers are authorized, upon the request of any Federal land bank and with the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, to investigate and make a written report upon the products covered by warehouse receipts, shipping documents, and the live stock covered by mortgages which are security for notes or other such obligations representing any loan to any cooperative association, live-stock loan company, or farm credit company, under subdivision (a) of section 201. Land-bank examiners are authorized, upon the request of any Federal land bank and with the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, to examine and make a written report upon the condition of any cooperative association, live-stock loan company, or farm credit company to which the Federal land bank contemplates making any such loan.

"SEC. 207. That the Federal Farm Loan Board is authorized to make such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with law, as it deems necessary for the efficient execution of the provisions of this title.

"SEC. 208. The penalties provided for in section 31 of Title I of this act shall apply to all false statements, counterfeiting of bonds or credit papers, and other fraudulent acts and misdemeanors against the farm credits department, as well as against the farm mortgage department, and the penalty provided for overvaluation of land as security shall apply to overvaluation of live stock or other farm products for the purpose of securing a loan, advance, or discount from the farm credits department of the Federal land bank.

"SEC. 209. The privileges of tax exemption accorded under Title I, section 26, of this act shall apply also to the farm credits department of each Federal land bank, including its capital, reserve or surplus, and the income derived therefrom, and the bonds issued under Title II of this act shall enjoy the same tax exemptions as are accorded farm loan bonds in said section."

SEC. 4. That the first two lines of section 12 of the Federal farm loan act are amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 12. That no Federal land bank organized under this act shall make loans, other than those authorized by Title II, except upon the following terms and conditions:"

SEC. 5. That section 23 of the Federal farm loan act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

"The provisions of this section shall not apply to the earnings, surplus, and capital stock of the farm credits department of any Federal land bank."

SEC. 6. That section 5202 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

"Eighth. Liabilities incurred under the provisions of subdivision (a) of section 201 of the Federal farm loan act, approved July 17, 1916, as amended."

SEC. 7. That paragraph 1 of section 7 of the Federal reserve act be amended by striking out all of said paragraph and substituting the following:

"After all necessary expenses of a Federal reserve bank have been paid or provided for, the stockholders shall be entitled to receive an annual dividend of 6 per cent on the paid-in capital stock, which dividend shall be cumulative and may be paid out of any surplus in excess of 100 per cent of subscribed capital. Out of any net earnings remaining after the aforesaid dividend claims have been fully met there shall be paid each year to the United States as a franchise tax such an amount as will make the aggregate amount so paid for the year 1922 and subsequent years equal to the aggregate amount of the cumulative dividends paid to the stockholding member banks for such years. After the full amount of the franchise tax shall have been paid to the United States the balance of the net earnings shall be paid into a surplus fund until it shall amount to 100 per cent of subscribed capital, and thereafter when net earnings exceed 12 per cent an extra dividend of not to exceed 3 per cent may be distributed to the stockholders, the remaining net earnings, if any, going to the United States as an additional franchise tax."

SEC. 8. That the ninth paragraph of section 9 of the Federal reserve act be amended to read as follows:

"No applying bank shall be admitted to membership in a Federal reserve bank unless it possesses a paid-up, unimpaired capital sufficient to entitle it to become a national banking association in the place where it is situated under the provisions of the national bank act: Provided, however, That an applying bank organized in a place the population of which does not exceed 6,000 inhabitants may, in the discretion of the Federal Reserve Board, be admitted to membership if it possesses a paid-up, unimpaired capital of at least $50,000, and if the application is accompanied by adequate undertakings of such bank and of its principal stockholders that the capital of such bank will within three years be increased to $50,000: And provided further, That an applying bank, organized in a place the population of which does not exceed 3,000 inhabitants may, in the discretion of the Federal Reserve Board, be admitted to membership if it possesses a paid-up, unimpaired capital of at least $15,000, and if it is accompanied by adequate undertakings of such bank and of its principal stockholders that such capital will within three years be increased to $25,000. If any such undertakings have not been fulfilled within three years the Federal Reserve Board may forbid such bank to enjoy any of the privileges of this act, and may require it to withdraw forthwith from membership in the Federal reserve system."

SEC. 9. That the second paragraph of section 13 of the Federal reserve act, beginning with the words "Provided, That" is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Provided, That notes, drafts, and bills of exchange drawn or issued for agricultural purposes, including the preparation for marketing and the orderly marketing of farm products, by the producers of such products or their cooperative organizations, or based on live stock, and having a maturity at the time of discount of not more than nine months, exclusive of days of grace, may be discounted in an amount to be limited to a percentage of the assets of the Federal reserve bank to be ascertained and fixed by the Federal Reserve Board, and any Federal reserve bank may rediscount such notes, drafts, and bills for any Federal land bank. Any Federal reserve bank may also buy and sell bonds and other such obligations issued by a Federal land bank under Title II of the Federal farm loan act, but only to the same extent as and subject to the same limitations as those upon which it may buy and sell bonds issued under Title I of said act."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, as the Senator having charge of the shipping bill, I simply wish to say to the Senator from Mississippi that when the credit bill comes up if there is any substantial unanimity with reference to it, as I anticipate there will be, I shall be the last one to delay its passage, and I would do everything I could to have the shipping bill temporarily laid aside in order that that legislation may be passed; so that, as far as I am concerned, I do not anticipate any conflict between the rural-credits measure and the ship subsidy bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the Senator from Wyoming raises the point of order.

Mr. WARREN. I make the point of order against the consideration of this amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I shall address myself to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

The matter of farm credits legislation is now pending before the Committee on Banking and Currency. Quite a number of bills have been introduced intended to afford the farmers of the United States a credit system to meet the requirements of their peculiar condition. I shall contend for a real and adequate agricultural credit system and no mere makeshift shall, with my consent, be foisted on us.

There was held last night in this building a meeting of what is called the farm bloc for the purpose of giving consideration to these several bills. The bill which the Senator has offered as an amendment was one of the bills discussed. Other bills were then discussed, and all of these bills are being discussed now in the hearings being held by the Committee on Banking and Currency.

There is no man in this Chamber who is going to exert himself more strenuously than I to enact legislation in the interest of agriculture, but when we do obtain that legislation I wish to see the farmer given an adequate credit and financial opportunity and not a mere sop. One of the troubles we have to-day is that certain occupations are adequately financed, while the farmer is inadequately financed.

We have a banking system which affords all the credit that is needed by our commercial and our industrial activities. The farmer is without the means of obtaining anything like adequate credit with which to prosecute his operations. It is this unbalanced condition of the business of the country to-day that is very largely responsible for the fact that we see certain occupations very prosperous while the farming operations of the country are in a state of depression verging upon bankruptcy.

For one, as a friend of the farming interests, I do not intend to content myself with the passage of any measure which will not afford the farmer adequate relief from the situation in which he finds himself. He is either entitled to full relief or he is entitled to no relief. I shall resent the proposition to give him a mere makeshift as fulfilling the promise made to the farmer by the Chief Executive of the United States. The farmer is not a dog, to be satisfied with a bone. He is entitled to a financial system that will as adequately meet his demands and requirements and conditions as the present system provides for the other classes of the people of the United States. It may be said that we can not pass such a measure during the short session. If we can not pass a measure that will actually meet the agricultural needs, then I say we shall not pass a measure that is a mere pretense of relief. The American farmer shall receive frank and honest treatment at least.

It is said that the Treasury is in trouble, and that it can not afford to expend the money in the establishment of the necessary machinery and make the appropriation of the amount that may be necessary to put that machinery in successful operation. Oh, Mr. President, one-half of the people of this country create the basic wealth of the Republic, add more than 50 per cent of the accretion of wealth to this Nation every year, and can we not afford to do that which will put that half of the people on their feet, which will make them independent, which will relieve them from the commercial servitude in which they now suffer and struggle? It is alleged that the Treasury is in such a condition that adequate help can not be extended to them, although they are on the verge of bankruptcy and about to perish, but there is enough money, it appears, to give to the shipbuilders and the ship operators all that their avarice may demand.

Do you think that the real friends of the farmer can be deceived in that fashion? If so, I declare that they who think so shall have a rude awakening.

I want farm credit legislation, Mr. President, but I do not want any pretense about it. I want agricultural credit legislation which will relieve, which will make the farmer financially as independent a man as the manufacturer or as those of the commercial classes now are. The farmer will never be able to stand upon his feet and be a man until his operations are as well financed and his credit is as good as those of the other classes of people in this country.

The farmer possesses as good security as any. The man with stocks and bonds can get all the money he needs, and yet the farmer, with the wonderful assets of the farm, with the best security and the safest security in the world, stands a beggar at the counters of every bank in the United States as the result of our banking system and our refusal or neglect to supply him with the means that will make him just as independent a man as those who buy his products. Mr. President, I tell you that the farmer of this country will never come into his own until this situation is relieved, and relieved completely. This is no time for popgun or makeship legislation with reference to farm credits. The situation demands that the conditions be met fully and completely and adequately by legislation.

I do not know what bill will come out of the Committee on Banking and Currency, but I want to serve notice now that if it is a bill that is a mere pretense, a mere temporary expedient, to relieve and ameliorate in a slight degree temporarily the distressed condition of agriculture in this country, I for one shall not support it upon the idea that, while it is not much, it is all we can get. I shall stand here and insist that the farmer ought not to be content with any such treatment. He ought to demand now, and I shall demand for him, what he is justly entitled to and not compromise.

I do not know whether the Banking and Currency Committee will bring out a satisfactory measure or not. That is a question I think we shall have to fight out here on the floor of the Senate. I think a vast majority of this body is in favor of giving the farmer what he is entitled to, and I believe he is going to get it in the end, no matter what bill may be reported by that committee; but I think it would be a very bad policy to be adopting an amendment carrying one of these bills, and especially that one which, in my judgment, gives only a mere bagatelle compared with what we ought to do for these fifty-odd million of our fellow citizens who are to-day suffering in the midst of the prosperity of the balance of their countrymen.

Mr. President, I introduced one of these bills, and I am going to offer it not as an amendment to any appropriation bill but as an amendment to the shipping bill. If in the meantime the Banking and Currency Committee reports out a satisfactory bill, I shall withdraw mine and offer the latter bill as an amendment to the shipping bill in place of my own.

I wish to send to the desk two amendments to the shipping bill, which I now propose. Is the shipping bill now before the Senate?

Mr. WARREN. The Treasury Department appropriation bill is before the Senate. The consideration of it is concluded, except for the final vote.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will offer my amendments now instead of when the shipping bill comes up. As I am on my feet, I might as well offer them now. I am going to offer these two amendments to the shipping bill.

Mr. WARREN. Would the Senator object to our finishing with the appropriation bill? It will take but a moment.

Mr. SIMMONS. It will take me but a moment to finish this.

Mr. WARREN. I thought the Senator wished to make some speech or observations.

Mr. SIMMONS. The first amendment I shall propose to the shipping bill is the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill which we passed during the late session of Congress, and which the President of the United States vetoed.

The second amendment I shall propose is the substance of a bill which I introduced in this Chamber April 20, providing an adequate system of rural credits to relieve the agricultural situation of the country.

The shipping bill gives what we call a subsidy to the shipowners and the ship operators. It is, in essence, a bonus. The amendment which I propose embodying the adjusted compensation bill recently vetoed by the President, gives to the boys who followed the flag in the late Great World War a meager bit of adjusted compensation for their services.

The second proposition which I offer would give to the American farmer adequate financial relief, and would be in the nature of a relief measure, so far as he is concerned.

The propositions, therefore, are live propositions. Each of them calls for money. Each of them calls for expenditures by the Federal Government. The first proposition, the major proposition, the proposition to which I propose the amendment, namely, the shipping bill, is a measure which, as has been said in this Chamber in the past day or two, was discussed upon nearly every stump in the country in the last campaign. The second proposition, that with reference to the soldiers' adjusted compensation, is also a subject which was discussed upon every stump in the country in the late campaign. The third proposition, with reference to agriculture, is one which was discussed extensively and entered probably more extensively into the result of the election than either of the other two propositions.

In that contest, Mr. President, the major proposition, the ship subsidy proposition, received an overwhelming rebuke and repudiation. The proposition with reference to the soldiers' adjusted compensation, on the other hand, met with a ready response, and resentment against the action of the Chief Executive in vetoing the measure had very much to do with the result of the elections. With reference to the other proposition, the great agricultural vote of the country gave expression at the ballot box of its deep and abiding resentment against the present administration because of its failure to enact any legislation to relieve the American farmer. So keenly did the President of the United States appreciate this attitude on the part of the farmer, and the extent to which his resentment affected disastrously the Republican Party in the result of the election, that the special session of the Congress had hardly convened before the White House was in conference with Senators, some of whom had never shown any interest in agricultural legislation, in order to see if they could not devise some scheme by which they could quiet the anger and the wrath of the agricultural classes of the United States. We have had this propaganda in the newspapers. We have had this publicity with regard to the great things the administration was going to do for the farmer filling the newspapers ever since, and forming the basis of a large part of the message of the President. And all that has come out of it is the little popgun bill which was offered here this morning as an amendment to the pending appropriation bill.

Now, Mr. President, I offer the two additional propositions to the first proposition. I think they properly connect themselves with it. I want to see a vote upon them. I want to let the soldiers of the country know if those people who have proposed in this very bill to give millions piled upon millions of subsidies and bonuses to a few great wealthy shipbuilders and ship operators are to refuse to do even meager justice to the soldiers of America. I want a vote in this Chamber in connection with the two propositions upon the question of whether the administration forces in this body are going to deal as generously and as fairly with the farmers of the United States as they propose to do with the shipbuilders and the ship operators, and whether they intend to carry out their pledges made after election—and made because of the wrath which had been engendered by their failure to do anything before the election—or whether they are going to pass the ship subsidy bill and continue to close the legislative doors to the crying needs of the soldiers for simple justice and of the farmers for adequate credits.

Mr. President, we shall see what we shall see.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The appropriation bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 32, line 6, after the word "Treasury," insert the words "in his discretion."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask the Secretary to report the whole proposition so that we may intelligently vote on what is to happen, or that the Senator from Wisconsin say something in regard to it so we may know what is proposed.

Mr. LENROOT. The amendment merely makes it discretionary with the Secretary of the Treasury whether he shall use the power presses in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for the printing of the faces of the currency, and the next amendment which I shall offer provides that the force shall be reduced only in case he exercises the power which my amendment gives him discretion to exercise instead of being made mandatory.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is the Senator's intention to make the provision discretionary instead of mandatory?

Mr. LENROOT. It is.

Mr. WARREN. I shall not object to the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. May we have the amendment reported in full?

The READING CLERK. On page 32, line 6, after the word "Treasury," insert the words "in his discretion," so that it will read:

Hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, is authorized to print from plates of more than four subjects each, etc.

Mr. FLETCHER. Is the amendment satisfactory to the committee? Was not a similar amendment voted down in the House?

Mr. LENROOT. I refer the Senator's question to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. WARREN. The amendment is offered to the language of the House text as it came to us.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not care to take the time to discuss the matter. I understand the chairman of the committee does not object to the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. I do not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. I now offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 32, lines 11 and 12, strike out the words "in the exercise of the authority conferred upon him by this paragraph," and insert in lieu thereof "if the power conferred by this paragraph is exercised," so as to read:

And the Secretary shall, if the power conferred by this paragraph is exercised, reduce the number of persons employed in the operation of plate-printing presses by not less than 218.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PUBLICATIONS OF FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

FINANCIAL AFFAIRS OF EUROPEAN STATES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Senate:

In response to Senate Resolution 208 of January 16, 1922, requesting the Secretary of State, if not incompatible with the public interest, to lay before the Senate "such information regarding the revenues, expenditures, and deficits of the European States as may be available to the Department of State, showing for the last and current fiscal years especially the annual cost of land armaments in the several States, as compared with the annual deficits of the several States (including both 'ordinary' and 'extraordinary' expenditures) and the sum of the interest annually due from the several States on account of the loans made to them by the United States," I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State, furnishing the information requested by the resolution.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 12, 1922.

CHANGES IN THE CUSTOMS SERVICE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and ordered to lie on the table:

To the Congress of the United States:

The sundry civil act approved August 1, 1914, contains the following provisions, viz:

"The President is authorized from time to time, as the exigencies of the service may require, to rearrange, by consolidation or otherwise, the several customs collection districts and to continue ports of entry by abolishing the same or establishing others in their stead: Provided, That the whole number of customs collection districts, ports of entry, or either of them, shall at no time be made to exceed those now established and authorized except as the same may hereafter be provided by law: Provided further, That hereafter the collector of customs of each customs-collection district shall be officially designated by the number of the district for which he is appointed and not by the name of the port where the headquarters are situated, and the President is authorized from time to time to change the location of the headquarters in any customs-collection district as the needs of the service may require: And provided further, That the President shall, at the beginning of each regular session, submit to Congress a statement of all acts, if any, done hereunder and the reasons therefor."

Pursuant to the requirements of the third proviso to the said provision, I have to state that the following changes in the organization of the customs service have been made by Executive order:

By Executive order dated January 9, 1922, various ports of entry were abolished and several new ports of entry created in several of the customs-collection districts as follows:

CUSTOMS PORTS OF ENTRY CREATED.

In customs collection district No. 1, of which Portland, Me., is the headquarters port, Jackman, Frenchville, and Robbinston, Me.

In customs collection district No. 23, of which San Antonio, Tex., is the headquarters port, Hidalgo, Tex.

By Executive order, dated November 3, 1922, Seward, in customs collection district No. 31 (Alaska), was created a customs port of entry, with headquarters at Juneau, Alaska.

All of the above changes were dictated by considerations of economy and efficiency in the administration of customs and other statutes with the enforcement of which the Customs Service is charged, as well as the necessities and convenience of commerce generally.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the indications are that the discussion of the pending bill will take a very wide range before it shall be disposed of. Possibly many diverse and varied subjects will be taken up not only with reference to amendments which may be proposed to the bill but in connection with the bill itself. I shall myself endeavor to refrain from discussing matters not connected with the bill, however inviting the field may be.

I shall ask that Senators will not request to interrupt for the purpose of making statements or putting in what might be termed a "speech" in the midst of my remarks, although I shall be glad to yield for questions in connection with the measure or in connection with any point that I am discussing, if Senators should desire to ask any questions with reference to it.

In the consideration of the bill in committee there was no exclusion of the minority, such as takes place in connection with many of the important measures which are considered in the Senate. The full committee met, considered the bill, considered the amendments that were proposed and the amendments that were offered to it. Votes were taken upon proposed amendments where there was a division, and the majority determined the amendments that should go into the bill.

The bill does not come to the Senate with the unanimous support of the committee, nor did the committee divide upon partisan lines. I think in justice to the minority I should also say that there was no attempt to delay the consideration of the bill in the committee. The bill was brought out probably more promptly than we had reason to expect.

It is fair also to say that reservations were made by members of the committee, so that the vote as announced by which the bill was reported may not indicate really the vote in favor of the passage of the bill. Some of the Senators who voted to report the bill favorably expressly stated that they might oppose the passage of the bill; all Senators reserved the right, which of course all Senators have upon a measure, to offer amendments or to vote upon amendments which might be offered as their judgment might dictate. I thought it but fair, in view of the announcement that the bill was reported by a vote of 11 to 5, that this statement should be made.

Mr. President, it was suggested on yesterday by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] that the consideration of this bill ought to be postponed because of the results of the last election, and he stated that the bill had been discussed in all the congressional districts of the States. He also practically stated that it had been made an issue in the various States of the Union. I do not know what the facts are throughout the country generally. I know that this was not an issue in my State in the campaign. It was not discussed one way or the other. I have spoken to quite a number of Senators, and they have stated that it was not an issue in their States; that it was not discussed especially in the campaign.

Be that as it may, a speech by one of the Members of the House was called to my attention yesterday in which he stated that this question was a distinct issue in his campaign, and I want to read just a brief statement from what he said. This is by the Hon. JAMES H. MACLAFFERTY, of California. He said:

> It has been said time and again that the people of the country in the recent election had given overwhelming evidence that they were against this bill. I want to say that I represent a district containing over 400,000 people, and one of the things that I stressed in this campaign was my advocacy of this bill.

Then he states that so far as the returns are known he received a majority of 28,000 to fill a vacancy, and a majority of 40,000 for the full term, and a pencil notation is made on here, "44,000 majority"; so I take it that this Congressman, who made this matter distinctly an issue in his district, was elected by a majority of over 40,000 in a constituency of about 400,000.

But, Mr. President, be that as it may, it seems to me that we can not escape our responsibility and our duty under the Constitution and under our oaths to deal with this question. I was not one of those who were in favor of putting over the consideration of this bill until after the election. I urged as strenuously as I could that the bill be taken up and acted upon in one if not both bodies before the campaign came on. Those in authority did not agree with me. Of course the question may have had more or less influence in the campaign. Of course it is true that the whole policy of the administration was at issue in the campaign; and it seems to me that it might be suggested with just as much reason that the administration abandon its whole policy, and wait until after the 4th of March before endeavoring to carry it out, as to urge it as a legitimate argument against the consideration of this bill at this time, or to suggest that we should put it over until the 4th of March.

This measure ought to be passed upon its merits. If it is a good measure, it ought to be passed. If it is a bad measure, it ought to be defeated. There can be no issue with reference to that. Whether we have a reduced majority in the next Congress or not, it seems to me, has nothing to do with the merits of this proposition. We have a majority in the next House of Representatives; we have a majority in the Senate of the United States; but the fact that it is a reduced majority does not relieve us from our responsibility at this time. Under the Constitution we are the legislators until March 4, and we should discharge our duty as we see it until the term of the next Congress begins. We can not and should not amend the Constitution by stopping work now.

Mr. President, a Senator asked me yesterday if I expected to make an eloquent speech on this bill. I do not. I could not if I would, and I would not if I could. I want to talk about it in just as simple, plain, and concise a way as I can. I want to give the reasons that I think warrant me in supporting the bill. I am not a shipping man. I wish I were. I wish there were shipping men in the Senate. There are not. I have found that men with practical experience in a line of work or business are better able to determine the effect of legislation or the application of general principles upon their business than those who do not have a practical acquaintance with that business; and, while we may all have our general knowledge of the fundamental principles of business, in the framing of legislation it seems to me it is of vital importance that the application of those principles should at least be subjected to the practical experience of men who have been engaged in the business. But we must act upon this legislation, as far as the Senate is concerned, without the benefit of this practical experience and practical knowledge.

I have, however, taken the liberty of asking that a couple of the experts of the Shipping Board come on the floor of the Senate and be here not only that I may ask them for information with reference to the various matters that may come up in connection with this bill but that they may be at the service of any Senator who may desire information from those who are especially qualified to give it. I have asked the chairman of the Committee on Rules for permission to allow that to be done. I did not assume to have it done of my own accord. I hope that no Senator will think that because these men are connected with the Shipping Board, or possibly because they have been connected with the framing of the bill, their information can not be relied upon.

Their judgment, of course, may not be worth as much as it might be if they had not been intimately connected with the framing of the bill; but I think Senators will find that their judgment is pretty reliable, and I know that they will give us the facts as they believe them to be, and I think probably all of us can receive much benefit in connection with the consideration of this bill by conferring with them from time to time.

Mr. President, suggestions are made that it seems to me really question the good faith of those who favor this bill. Suggestions are made that this bill is in the interest of the Shipping Trust; that it is a bill especially for the benefit of special privilege; and that Senators advocating the measure are advocating a measure that they know is not for the best interests of the people of this country. I know that there are many people in the country who have that idea with reference to the measure. I believe that many of the people of this country have a prejudice against the bill because of suggestions that may have been made, either upon this floor or by those in responsible position, with reference to the motives that may animate the supporters of the measure, and with reference to the people that may get the benefit of it.

I have made some quotations from some of the letters that I get with reference to the measure. Here is one who writes me in this way:

> Vote for the ship subsidy bill and the good people of the country will know that you care nothing for their welfare.

Another writes:

> Vote for the ship subsidy bill and show your interest in the Shipping Trust.

Another says:

> Vote for the ship subsidy bill and prove to the farmers and taxpayers of the country that you care nothing for their interest—

And so on.

Mr. President, the people are good, honest, sincere citizens. They mean to do right and to judge rightly, and are really justified in making those statements, because of suggestions made by those who discuss this measure from responsible positions and from positions of trust; and it seems to me that we ought to be careful as to the suggestions or intimations that we put out with reference to those who may be for this bill or those who may be against it. I feel satisfied that there is no Senator on this floor who believes that any other Senator here supports this measure upon any other ground than that which he believes to be for the best interests of the people of this country.

I have no interest in ships or in shipping. I never have had. I never expect to have. The only interest that I have in this measure is the interest of the people of this country, the farmers, the laboring people, the business men, the business interests of the country, and above this the national interest. I believe as sincerely as I believe in anything that there is scarcely a measure that has ever come before the Congress that means more of benefit to the people of this country and more of benefit and safety to the Nation that we love so well than this measure—that is, assuming, of course, that it will accomplish the purposes that we hope and believe it will accomplish.

I do not question the sincerity of any man who opposes this measure. I do not appeal to the prejudices of anybody or any section of this country. I am satisfied that the men who oppose this measure do so because they believe it will not accomplish the purposes that those of us who support it believe it will accomplish; and it seems to me that this is the plane upon which we ought to consider a measure of such transcendent importance as this.

We who support this measure appeal to the business sense and the business judgment and the business needs of the people of this country; we appeal to the patriotism of the people of this country who want to have this Nation prepared in case of emergency; but in doing so we do not question the patriotism or the sincerity of those who may take a different view.

Mr. President, I can fully understand why a Democrat who sincerely believes in the policy or principle that has declared time and again against subsidies should on that ground as a fundamental principle oppose this measure if he feels that the conditions justify the application of that principle; but I can not understand why a Republican, at least upon a question of principle, should oppose this measure. It, in my judgment, embodies clearly and distinctly the policy of protection in which we so firmly believe.

Talk about infant industries and the building up of infant industries! Shipping is clearly an infant industry in this country when we come to compare our shipping with the shipping of the world. We built many ships under the need and stress of war, but that is not enough to make a merchant marine. The ships must be operated. Unless we can get the ships we have to operating we are not much better off than when the war began. Our merchant marine is now, and was then, more nearly an infant industry than any other industry in the country, and the facts and conditions and circumstances warrant the application of the doctrine of protection in this case if it was ever justified in any case.

Mr. President, the American people are confronted with the question: Do we want an American merchant marine? Are we going to do what is necessary to establish permanently an American merchant marine? Are we willing and ready to pay the price? It seems that everybody who has this question put to him says that of course we want an American merchant marine. Political parties have declared time and again in favor of building up an American merchant marine, and it may not be amiss to call attention to these declarations. I suppose that nearly every Senator is thoroughly familiar with them, but I want to refer to them just briefly. The Democratic platform of 1912 said this:

> We believe in fostering, by constitutional regulation of commerce, the growth of a merchant marine which shall develop and strengthen the commercial ties which bind us to our sister Republics of the south, but without imposing additional burdens upon the people and without bounties or subsidies from the Public Treasury.

Here, Mr. President, I note that the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], in his minority views, congratulates the people and the Democratic Party on the fact that through a Democratic administration we had reached the aspirations of many years and secured a large merchant marine. Was it done in accordance with that platform? That declaration says they are in favor of building up an American merchant marine "without imposing additional burdens upon the people and without bounties or subsidies from the Public Treasury." Yet we know that the shipping which we have to-day was built up by taking from the Treasury of the country and from the pockets of the people over $3,000,000,000.

Mr. President, of course the ships we have were brought into existence under the stress and needs of war. It took that in order to get them built.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield for a question.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest that the Senator knows the conditions under which that money was spent and the ships were built.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. It was to meet war needs.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I just stated that; but what I am trying to call attention to is that I do not think the Senator should rejoice in our getting these ships that way and take great credit to the Democratic Party for accomplishing it in that way. That is what I just wanted to suggest.

In 1912 the Republican Party declared:

> We believe that one of the country's most urgent needs is a merchant marine. There should be American ships, and plenty of them, to make use of the great American interoceanic canal now nearing completion.

Mr. President, I want to call attention to a declaration contained in the Republican platform in 1900 which I think states the great fundamental purposes for which a merchant marine should be built and maintained. We said in that platform:

> Our present dependence upon foreign shipping for nine-tenths of our foreign carrying trade is a great loss to the industry of this country. It is also a serious danger to our trade, for its sudden withdrawal in the event of European war would seriously cripple our expanding foreign commerce. The national defense and naval efficiency of this country, moreover, supply a compelling reason for legislation which will enable us to recover our former place among the trade-carrying fleets of the world.

Mr. President, it is the purpose and ultimate object of this bill to attain the fulfillment of that declaration. We have many ships now, it is true, but we have not a permanent merchant marine. One of the fundamental purposes of this bill is to do what we think to be necessary to put our merchant marine upon a permanent basis and put us in a condition where our trade shall not be made subservient to the shipping of foreign countries.

What did a great Democrat say with reference to that plank in this platform when this country was confronted with the very condition the platform declaration pointed out? What did a great Democrat, in a high and responsible position, say about this platform when he was confronted with the very condition that it pointed out? Secretary McAdoo said:

> The man who wrote that had the power of a seer and the vision of a statesman, because what is there advocated is irrefutably sound, and what is there predicted is exactly what has happened. A European war has caused the sudden withdrawal of a large part of the foreign vessels upon which our foreign trade is dependent, and has seriously crippled our expanding foreign commerce.

Mr. President, we want to guard against a repetition of that situation. I could read from the other platforms of the two great political parties from that day until this declaring for an American merchant marine, but I will not do so.

Yes, Mr. President, the people of this country want an American merchant marine; but are they ready to pay the price? Are they ready to do what may be necessary to establish and maintain a permanent merchant marine?

I do not know what Senators think about it; I do not know what conclusion they have reached; but several years ago I came to the conclusion that an American merchant marine was so important that I would be justified in voting for any measure which would give any reasonable assurance of building up an American merchant marine and putting it upon a substantial basis, and that I am prepared to do.

When the Underwood-Simmons bill was pending in this body I made a speech in behalf of a provision placed in that bill in the House of Representatives, and which was ably supported by the great Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I said then substantially what was said in this Republican platform of 1900, that even though we might not get into war, if other countries got into war our industries and our business and our people would suffer tremendous loss because of the taking away of the means of transportation which they furnished to us for the carrying of our own produce. That very thing happened, and that circumstance and the condition which confronted us made me more firmly convinced of my duty toward the people of the country and toward the Nation, as I saw it, to vote for any measure that would give reasonable assurance that it would bring about this result.

Mr. President, we can not be certain of what will come from this legislation. We do not know whether or not it will do what we hope it will do. No man knows whether it will or not. No man knows that it will not do it. The man who opposes this measure takes the chance that may mean so much of injury to the industries of the country and so much of danger to the safety of the Republic. Mr. President, I do not feel that I am justified in taking that chance.

As I said, I am not a shipping man; I do not know so well what the industry needs as the men who are in it; but men of integrity, men of sincerity, men of experience, men of practical knowledge have worked together in the framing of this bill, trying honestly and sincerely, I believe, to draft a measure which will put the merchant marine upon a permanent and lasting basis. Mr. President, I do not feel, with my scanty experience, with my small knowledge, that I can safely disregard their conclusions and their judgment, especially in the light of the experience of the past.

Mr. President, we have had the doctrine of protection for American shipping applied in this country. The signatures to the Constitution had scarcely dried before the fathers of this Republic framed and passed a law with the distinct object of building up the American merchant marine. They put into practice the doctrine of discriminating duties, and under that policy American shipping expanded until American ships were upon all the seas of the world, found in all the commercial ports of the earth, carrying up to 90 per cent of the foreign trade of this country.

I am not going into a historical or philosophical discussion of shipping. I am not going into the reasons why it declined. That is controversial, of course. We know it did decline after it had reached its high position under genuine protection. But we applied the doctrine of protection to American shipping in another direction. We said that no foreign-built ship should engage in the coastwise trade of this country, and under that policy we built up the shipping in the coastwise trade until we have six or seven million tons of shipping in that trade, built, of course, especially for that trade, and very little of it adapted to the foreign trade. I see that my friend from Florida congratulates us upon having nearly 6,000,000 tons of shipping under the American flag. I get the impression from his report that he would have the people of this country believe that we have five or six million tons of shipping now operating in the foreign trade in private ownership.

Mr. President, that is not correct. A great part of that tonnage is in the coastwise trade. Those ships are owned and operated privately. According to the statements from the Shipping Board, we have to-day not to exceed 2,000,000 tons of shipping in the foreign trade operating privately and owned privately. There are fifty or sixty million tons of shipping in the world, and about one-twentieth of it in private ownership under the American flag. That is not a very creditable position for a great country like this to be in when its commercial needs are so great and its means of defense are so scanty.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am afraid I will have to ask the Senator to read again the minority views. He has attempted to quote twice from the minority views, first saying that I boasted about what the Democrats had accomplished in building the merchant marine, and as to the amount of tonnage they constructed, and so on. I can not find anything of that sort in the minority views, and I do not remember having written it.

Now he quotes again, apparently from that report, to the effect that I claim that we have some 6,000,000 tons of American shipping in foreign trade. I do not claim that at all. The report says that in 1922 the Government had 1,960 privately owned ships of 500 gross tons or over, and that the total tonnage of those ships is 5,797,925 gross tons, approximately 8,500,000 dead-weight tons. That is all the ships under the American flag. I do not say that they are all engaged in a foreign trade.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know the Senator did not say that, and I did not charge him with saying it. I did say, however, that the impression gotten by anyone reading that who was not familiar with these things would be that this was in foreign trade, because that is what we are talking about, that is what we are trying to legislate about, that is the question under consideration, the foreign trade and the shipping in the foreign trade. I have not the time now to find the other statement in the report which gave me the impression that the Senator was really rejoicing in the construction of this large tonnage under a Democratic administration. I think I could find it. The Senator may not have had the intention of giving that impression, but he made that impression on my mind.

What are the handicaps to American shipping? What are the reasons for it not maintaining itself upon the sea? There are some facts that we must not overlook in the consideration of this question. For many years prior to 1914 we had been talking about building up an American merchant marine. We had been trying to enact legislation under which this would be accomplished, but we did not accomplish anything. The American merchant marine was not built up. Everybody wanted it, but nobody went into the business. I am going to point out in a very little while the shipping that we had and what the condition was in 1914, but I am now stating just in a general way what everybody knows to be the truth. We know that since the Civil War political parties and organizations throughout the country, men of high standing and low, have been expressing the hope of having an American merchant marine. They had been expressing a desire that we should build it up. But we did not do it. Capital did not go into it. There may have been good reasons why it did not, but it did not. That is a fact about which we need not argue.

What were the handicaps then and what are the handicaps to-day, according to the testimony? Higher wages of crews on American ships than upon foreign ships; higher cost of construction in American shipyards than in foreign shipyards; higher cost of operation; and higher capital cost. These are some of the things that honest and practical men say handicap us in maintaining a merchant marine. It is, however, denied that American shipping is under these handicaps. Honest men differ with reference to it. Yet I want to say, Mr. President, that I do not believe we can examine the testimony that was taken by the joint committee of the House and Senate—some two or three thousand pages—without coming to the conclusion that the testimony from men of experience, from men who have actually run ships, who have actually paid the crews, who have actually had ships constructed and who have actually operated them, overwhelmingly shows that the cost of wages of crew and of operation and construction is greater for the American merchant marine than for the foreign. One can find some testimony to the contrary. You can take that testimony and find something to support either view; but, taking it by and large, the testimony seems to me conclusive that the cost of construction, operation, and wages is higher for our merchant marine than for the foreign merchant marine.

I have here a statement by a member of the Shipping Board, a man who has had practical experience with American shipping, a man who, I think, knows what he is talking about. His statement, it seems to me, is almost conclusive with reference to this very proposition. It is a statement by Mr. Plummer of the Shipping Board, in which he said:

> When giant American corporations like the Bethlehem Co. and the Texas Co., each of them financially stronger than any European steamship concern, and both of them shipbuilders as well as shipowners, find it necessary to close their own shipyards and have their own cargoes carried by foreign vessels, what is the answer? * * *
> When such as they find, as they do, that they can charter foreign vessels for less money than it takes merely to operate their own steamers under the American flag, what is the sense of setting up the claim—as opponents of American shipping do—that American ships, without Government aid, can compete with foreign ships in carrying the ocean commerce of the United States?
> It can not be done! Every practical shipping man knows that it can not be done.

Mr. President, I do not know that it can not be done, but I believe that it can not be done. I believe that that man knows what he is talking about. There is the statement of what he said are the facts, and it seems to me that the facts establish conclusively his contention. Why, I see in the minority report a statement to the effect that certain ships are being built to-day in foreign shipyards for American trade. Why is it? It must be because it can be done more cheaply there than it can be done in this country. What other reason could there be for such action? And such a fact is worth all their theories. How we are to get around a fact of that character I do not know. I know of no way, by process of reasoning, to get around it. It is a fact that speaks most eloquently and with absolute conclusiveness.

But, Mr. President, this is what I think is the greatest handicap that we have in the building up and maintaining of an adequate American merchant marine. It is the fact that our competitor is firmly established in the business. Who is our competitor? England, of course. England has had her merchant marine for many, many years. It is well rounded out. It is what is called a well-balanced fleet. Her ships go to every quarter of the globe. Her companies are formed, composed of people in Great Britain who are interested in the merchant marine and have been interested in it for years. They have their business connections everywhere. They have their business relations in every line of industry throughout the world. They have them in this country. They have been one of the most potent influences, in my judgment, that we have ever had in preventing legislation for the building up of an American merchant marine. They have their agents everywhere. They have banks established everywhere which use their influence to furnish trade to British shipping. They have their cargo ships. They have their fast mail and passenger liners. They have the good will that goes with long-established business relations.

What we are trying to do is to establish a merchant marine in competition with that character of a merchant marine. We have to go upon the same seas upon which they go. We have to go in the same harbors that they enter. We have to seek the trade that they are carrying. That, in my judgment, is the greatest handicap we have. It seems to me that it is very much like the situation that confronts the young lawyer when he enters a town to build up a practice in competition with old established practitioners. He has to have aid and help to maintain himself, either out of his own private capital or assistance from somebody else. For two or three years he does not make enough to pay living expenses, and if he has not capital he has to go into some other business. I know how it is. I have tried it. I started out to practice law in a little town. I only had two or three hundred dollars. In six months it was gone, and I had to go into some other line of work in order to live. That is the situation of the American merchant marine to-day. It must establish its lines, create its agencies, make its business connections, and get business in the face of this competition. It must have help until it can do so. When it is firmly established I have no fears that it will maintain itself when it has a fair or equal chance.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator tell us what he did with all that money? [Laughter.]

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator did not call upon the Public Treasury.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I called on my own treasury, and I was the public so far as that is concerned. The Senator has talked about the public and the Public Treasury. As I said, what we are trying to do here is in the interest of the public, and the Senator knows it. The Senator contends that the benefits of the bill will go to the shipping trust, and so on. Well, he may be right and I may be wrong, but I am not supporting the bill in the hope or with the belief that the greatest benefit goes to the shipping trust. I am supporting it, as I said awhile ago, because I believe the greatest benefit will go to the people of the country.

I might just as well inquire at this point, what shipping trust have we? We have none. We have no shipping to get into a trust. We never have had. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] yesterday, in his eloquent and delightful way, said:

> We want to keep the money proposed to be appropriated under the bill from getting into the clutches of those who robbed the people in 1914, and we propose to keep it away from them.

I am going to call attention in a few moments to who it was that robbed the people of this country in 1914. I want to do exactly what the Senator from Mississippi said he wants to do. I want to keep our people out of the clutches of the people in whose clutches they were in 1914. They were not in the clutches of American ship-owning companies, because we had none. They were in the clutches of foreign shipowners, as I think I shall very clearly demonstrate. We have no shipping trust under the American flag. I hope we will never have, and I do not think we will.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator will admit that many American shipowners made as high as a thousand and two thousand per cent at that time?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think there were very many American shipowners who made that. There were some, but very few.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, there were.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, certainly; and that is another thing I want to avoid. If we had had a well-developed and well-balanced American merchant marine, they would not have made those enormous profits, none of them, not a bit of it, and the Senator knows it. It was our lack of ships that allowed the others and foreign shipping to rob our people.

Take our great competitor, England. It is said that the English do not give subsidies to their ships. I am not going into a discussion of that question now, for many of these matters will come up as we discuss the particular items of the bill; but they grant subventions, and everybody admits that England has a great merchant marine to-day. She has not, however, always had it. There was a time in the history of the world when England saw ships under the flags of other nations carrying the products that came to her ports; there was a time when England's fleet and England's flag were not found on all the seven seas of the world or in all the ports and marts of commerce. How did England get upon the sea? Ah, Mr. President, she took heroic measures when Sir Walter Raleigh called her attention to the situation. She did not follow any half-way policies; she was not hindered because some Englishman might make some money under the policy which she adopted as necessary to build up her merchant marine. She did not hesitate about what other people would think of her policy; she did not hesitate because some other country might protest that the policy she was following was injuring its trade. I am going to take the time of the Senate to read a short statement prepared by Mr. Plummer, giving briefly the history of the establishment of the British merchant marine. He says:

> The history of Great Britain's modern merchant marine starts with the reign of Elizabeth.

He cites the authorities which are taken from English sources.

Prior to that time England's influence upon the sea was negligible. Spain far surpassed her in merchant tonnage and, says Lindsay, the great British historian of shipping, "while England was fighting for political freedom the Dutch became the real masters of the sea. They—the Dutch—were now at the height of their maritime glory, their merchant ships penetrated to every quarter of the globe and they were able to grasp and keep to themselves large and valuable portions of the carrying trade—of England—thus laying the foundation for their wealth and greatness." At that time—Elizabeth's—most English ships of burden were obtained by purchase at the South Baltic ports, and Raleigh immediately called attention to the fact that while Holland, "without a single tree within its own borders," was building ships for them the great oaks of England were rotting to the ground. "When the English," says the Encyclopedia Britannica, "were at last awakened by the advice of Sir Walter Raleigh and other writers who followed him to a full consciousness of their own strength and of their previous legislative errors, they with characteristic energy resolved to adopt the most effective measures then in their power to remedy existing evils."

What did they do? Listen:

First came the direct subsidy act of Elizabeth, which provided a bounty of 5 shillings per ton to encourage the building of merchant ships of 100 tons and upward; and for the development of her fisheries and the training of seamen the eating of flesh upon Wednesdays and Saturdays was prohibited.

I do not know enough about shipping to know just what effect that had, but that was one of the policies followed by England in the early days in order to build up her shipping.

The effect of these laws is thus concisely stated by the Encyclopedia Britannica: "In the time of Elizabeth England began to achieve commercial independence. Great building of ships took place, for which bounties were granted by the Queen, and Elizabeth set herself against the Hanseatic League. In every direction English influence penetrated and Englishmen before 1603 might be found in every quarter of the globe."

No sooner had Charles ascended the throne than there came the law of 1626, which increased the size of merchant ships that should be eligible for the bounty which Elizabeth had authorized, making the minimum 200 tons; and 1646—brought the law that none of the (English) plantations might permit their goods to be exported to foreign places except in English ships.

Ah, that, Mr. President, was an effective policy in behalf of building up an English merchant marine—that none of the products of the English plantations should be sent to foreign ports except in English bottoms. If we should pass a law like that and permit it to remain in operation for about 10 years there would be no question about the building up of the American merchant marine; but, of course, we shall not do that.

Then came the great navigation act of 1651. Of this the Britannica says: "Under this far-reaching act the trade between England and her colonies and the British coasting trade was strictly confined to English bottoms, English owned and manned substantially by English seamen. The act contained further provisions in support of British shipping, the effect of which was greatly to prejudice foreign shipping in its competition for the British carrying trade. From the point of view of the Dutch, indeed, it was a 'vile act and order,' to be resisted at all costs."

But did that stop England from carrying out the policy? Not at all; she went on and built up her merchant marine. She looked after her own interests regardless of the opinions of others.

Says Lindsay: "The unequivocal object of this clause (quoted from the navigation act) was to secure to England, without, however, considering the interests of her colonies, the whole carrying trade of the world, Europe alone excepted. England had now asserted the practical right to carry on her own oversea trade in her own ships, and to obtain as much foreign trade as she could by her own industry and energy."

Then, as a special inducement for vessels to strive for the carrying of those cargoes which were coming from foreign countries to England, Parliament enacted the law of 1662, which provided that 10 per cent of the customs duties collected on the vessel's cargo should be paid to English-built ships of 2½ or 3 decks carrying 30 guns, armed merchantmen being in those days the only ships that could venture with safety into distant seas.

Says Meeker, in his History of Subsidies: "The effect upon the Dutch—

Not upon the English, but the effect upon the Dutch—who were at that time the carriers of the sea, was immediate and disastrous. There is no means of learning how much it cost Great Britain to take possession of her foreign and colonial trade in this manner. Directly or indirectly the costs were enormous, but the results were tremendous and no one can maintain that the end did not justify the means."

Says Lindsay: "It is undeniable that from the date of these laws the merchant navy of England steadily increased, and that soon afterwards the power over the seas previously claimed by the Dutch was permanently transferred to the English."

Says the Encyclopedia Britannica: "As a result of the navigation act and its successful maintenance a great increase had taken place in English tonnage, which in 1688 was said to be nearly double that of 1666."

Thus England became the commercial mistress of the seas, a position she has maintained to this day.

Mr. President, in 1815, after our shipping had developed under the fostering policy of discriminating duties, we passed reciprocity legislation; we thought we were able to stand in competition with the people of the world in that respect.

England did not take advantage of that legislation until, I think, along in 1853, at least not until after her merchant marine was firmly established. She had violated the spirit of those reciprocity laws by giving subventions and giving subsidies directly to her shipping and to certain lines for the purpose of building them up, but when she became satisfied that she had established her place on the seas in competition with the United States, then she accepted the reciprocity measures, and from that time until the war of 1914 our shipping went down, the movement, of course, accelerated by what transpired during the Civil War.

But, in addition to this, how has England maintained her supremacy upon the seas? Mr. President, there was a commission, known, I think, as the merchant marine commission, and commonly called the Gallinger commission, which investigated this matter and made a report. They found that England's merchant marine had maintained itself very largely by conferences, by rebates, and by "fighting" ships. They found that the English shipping interests had divided the commercial world into zones, as they might be called, and entered into conferences to control rates and control business; then they gave secret rebates to shut out competition on the part of any foreign country; and, furthermore, to make her position doubly secure, when they found the vessels of some other country working into their trade they sent out ships to carry cargoes at any rate that was necessary in order to get the cargoes from the other ships. These were termed "fighting" ships, and they were used most effectively. Those were some of the handicaps which our people had to endure. These things were done to prevent anyone from becoming a serious competitor.

But that is not all. What do we find to-day with reference to some of the policies which the colonies of England are pursuing? Mr. President, Australia has a law to the effect that when American-produced goods are carried by American railroads to an American port on the Pacific and transported thence by American ships to Australia, the goods so transported shall be taxed at the Australian customhouse on the entire value plus the whole cost of the transportation across the United States. On the contrary, if similar goods are carried by Canadian railroads to a British port and thence to Australia in a British or Canadian ship, no tax is levied on the amount paid for transportation over the Canadian railroad. That is the policy which they pursue, and it is an effective one.

I offered an amendment to the tariff bill, and had it referred to the committee, designed to carry out that same idea with reference to goods brought into this country; but we were afraid to take such action; we were afraid we would offend England, or possibly it was thought that we would violate some of our treaties.

Yet the possessions and colonies of England are doing that thing. We hear some people talking about the prosperity of the Australian ships operated by the Australian Government. Is it any wonder that they prosper under legislation of that character, which practically compels the shipment of goods to Australia in Australian ships? Oh, Mr. President, if we would use half the firmness in looking after our own interests in this respect that England does in looking after her interests and after her shipping we would build up an American shipping in this country and we would not need to draw from the Treasury to do it.

Mr. President, there is another thing which has gone a long way, in my judgment, toward maintaining the English merchant marine. For many years every railroad in this country has been an active agency for supplying cargoes for English ships; the agent of every railroad throughout the country has been interested in seeing to it that American goods were shipped abroad in foreign ships. Is it any wonder we can not build up a merchant marine under such conditions? Copies of contracts were put in the RECORD here some time ago showing that our railroads had entered into contracts with English shipping lines under which they agreed to use all their influence, not only to get the English ships cargoes but to get them relieved of local taxation and local burdens, and all that sort of thing. Our railroads can not be blamed for doing it at the time they did it. Why? Because there was a lack of American ships. There were no American shipping lines to make contracts with. They were simply promoting their own interests in competition with each other. What we would like to do by this legislation is to build up American shipping lines, make them practical extensions of American railroads, and have every American railroad agent an agent for an American steamship line. Then, my friends, we can maintain an American merchant marine.

Mr. President, what does this lack of shipping mean to our country? What does it mean to business? I need not point it out to Senators of the United States. They know what it means. They know that it means the development of foreign commerce by foreign ships. They know that it means that our people and our industries are absolutely dependent upon foreign shipping. They know that it means the encouragement of foreign insurance companies, under which the trade secrets of our people are acquired and used to our detriment and to the detriment of our trade. They know that it spells disaster to every industry in time of emergency. I need not take the time to go into this in detail. We have had experiences in the past that demonstrate conclusively what the lack of an American merchant marine means to the American farmer and the American business man. Surely all we need to do is to cite the facts.

When the Boer War was on we were not a party to it. It was thousands of miles away from us; and yet then we were dependent upon British ships for the carrying of the grain and the wheat and the corn, if any of it was exported, and the other products of the farm to foreign markets. What was the result? Because of the demands of that war English ships were taken for war needs and war purposes. That left fewer ships to carry the products of our farms, with the result that the rates charged for the transportation of the farmer's products went up and his prices went down.

Talk about this legislation being to the injury of the American farmer. There is no legislation that we can pass, possibly aside from rural-credits legislation and some other measures like that, that will be of greater substantial benefit to the American farmer than legislation that insures him transportation across the water for the surplus products for which he must find a market in the countries of the world. That is one reason why I am for this bill. I believe it means more to the farmers of my State and my section than any other legislation that we can pass.

Talk about the farmers of my State being against this measure. They will not be against it when they know what it means—that is, assuming that it will accomplish what we hope it will accomplish. Of course, it may not do it, but we believe that it will; and if it will establish permanently an American merchant marine adequate to carry at least 50 per cent of our products, then the farmer will be the great beneficiary of it, and they will sustain every man who votes for it.

Mr. President, it is said, and it is figured out by experts, that during the last 100 years we have paid to foreign ships $28,000,000,000 in freight for the transportation of American commerce—$28,000,000,000 transportation charges for our products. It is also figured that the balance of trade in favor of this country during the last 100 years is about $24,000,000,000. In other words, the balance of trade in favor of this country in our commerce has been more than overbalanced by the freight charges we have paid to our foreign competitors.

Is it any wonder that they can stand up against the great balance of trade that we have on paper in favor of this country? Oh, Mr. President, what would it have meant to American business and American capital and American industry if at least half of that $28,000,000,000 had been paid to our own people for carrying our own produce to market?

Take the Spanish War; the same conditions existed, my friends, that grew out of the Boer War, only probably to a less extent, because the Spanish War was a very small thing; but in order to maintain our own fleets we had to get ships under foreign flags to accompany those fleets and furnish them with the supplies and fuel necessary to maintain them.

We remember the time when the President of the United States sent the American fleet around the world; yet, Mr. President, it could not have been sent around the world without a foreign merchant marine. We did not have the ships to do it with; and so we had the humiliating spectacle of an American battleship fleet going around the world dependent upon foreign ships for its supplies and the carrying of its fuel.

But, Mr. President, that did not seem to be sufficient to wake up our people to the necessity of a merchant marine. That did not seem to be enough to convince our people of the injury that we might suffer by our dependence upon foreign shipping, and the World War came on. We were not in it at first, but we suffered from it. Have we forgotten, have the people of the country forgotten, have the farmers of the country forgotten what the condition was shortly after 1914?

In the first place, Mr. President, how many ships did we have then? I just want to read from a statement by Mr. McAdoo, an official document. I do not find that right now, but I remember what he said. He said that we had at that time just 15 ships of over a thousand tons engaged in the foreign trade under the American flag—just 15 ships! We had a little over a million tons of suitable ocean-going ships under the American flag when that war broke out, but only 15 of them were over a thousand tons, engaged in the ocean-going trade—that is, across the ocean—and what did he tell us about the result of this lack of American ships?

Mr. President, I want to read that. I want the American farmer to take this into account. I want to read this to refresh their memories, and possibly it may be well for Senators to refresh their memories and then to take it on and refresh the memories of their constituencies. I have a great deal of regard for the opinion of my constituency. I like to act as they think I ought to act. I like to go along the line that they seem to be going on, when I can do so in good conscience; but should we not assume that we know more about these things than the ordinary, everyday business man and farmer, busy with his crops and business cares, who has not had the time to look into these matters as we have and as it is our duty to do?

I may be wrong about it, but I think that after I have looked into these things and come to a conclusion from the facts I have as to what my duty is, I owe it to my constituency to do it, and then, if it does not seem to suit them, to tell them why I did it and let them pass upon it. I have no fears as to their judgment. I have no fears as to their verdict—not a bit of it. The American farmer, if you please, is an intelligent man, a man of good judgment, of sound judgment, a man who reaches sound conclusions when he has the facts presented to him, and above all he is a fair and just man. If he finds that he is mistaken in the facts he will revise his judgment. I want to say to you that if he finds that we have acted according to his opinion as to how we should act rather than according to our judgment upon the facts that we have, he will not hesitate as to the action he will take with reference to us later on.

There are facts bearing upon this question that many of the farmers of the country do not know, except it may be in a general way, if at all. They have not forgotten, however, how their farm produce rotted on the wharves at the ports of the country because there was no transportation. They have not forgotten how, when the World War broke out, they could not get anything for their produce. Have the farmers of the South forgotten the predicament they were in? I remember the impassioned plea of my good friend from North Carolina when he was urging on this floor the passage of a bill to loan money to the farmers of his section because they could not sell their cotton crop. I think I was the only man on this side of the aisle who voted with him. I did it because the condition appealed to me as warranting action by this great and powerful Government. What was the cause of the trouble? The trouble was the lack of ships—the lack of ships, that and that alone. There was a market for their cotton, there was a great demand for it, but there were no ships to carry it.

Listen to what Mr. McAdoo says in his report, which I have here now, and from which I am going to read. This is his statement about the shipping that we had then. This is a report to the Senate in response to a resolution of the Senate. He says:

> Lloyd's Register for 1914–15 states that the steam gross tonnage of the world of vessels of 100 gross tons or over is 45,400,000 in round numbers. Of this they credit 2,260,000 gross tons to the Great Lakes, and they state our ocean-going vessels as 1,113 steamers over 100 tons, with a total gross tonnage of 2,026,908. This includes both our seagoing coastwise steamers and our transocean vessels. Out of this 1,113 vessels 868 of 720,609 gross tons are registered by us for the foreign trade—> and out of this again there are but 15 of 1,000 tons or over which are engaged in the overseas (meaning the trans-Atlantic and trans-Pacific) trade. There is no American vessel regularly engaged in the European trade, the Asiatic or Australian trade, or the African trade as large as 1,000 tons except these 15.

That was the American merchant marine when the World War broke out, and when we were not a party to it. What about the condition as to business and industry? Mr. McAdoo said:

> This condition coincides in time with the greatest crops of cotton and of grain in our history, and with an eager demand for the latter and a growing call for the former from foreign purchasers. At a time when we have the most to sell and customers abroad are eager to buy the fact that our ocean-carrying facilities are in the hands of others, subject to war risks and controlled by interests not our own, stares us in the face. Were we dependent to-day upon the facilities we ourselves have available for doing our foreign trade, that trade could not be done. Our cotton would lie idle in our warehouses, and our wheat, apples, and other crops would rot in storage. We are forced to take the chances of war and to ship in belligerent bottoms. In shipping circles it is estimated by some that 50 per cent of the total tonnage available has been eliminated through the tying up of the German and Austrian marine and through the commandeering of such a large part of the British marine by the Admiralty. Not only has there been a great reduction in the available supply of tonnage, but on account of the large purchases of war supplies and the great profits which can be derived from shipments to European ports there has been a corresponding increase in the demand for ships for cargo purposes. The inevitable result has been a steady increase in the steamship rates.

Mr. President, what do I find? There is a great deal of talk about the farmer wanting to ship by the cheapest transportation method, and appeals are made to the farmer that under present conditions English shipping and other foreign shipping is the cheapest, and it is asked of him, "What difference does it make to you, so you get your products carried in the cheapest way?"

Mr. President, that may be all right one year; that may have been all right during the 25 years before the World War; but when the World War came on, the loss the American farmer suffered in one or two years more than overbalanced the cheaper rates he got for 25 years. He not only had to pay the high rates charged for conveying his products but he has to pay his part of the $3,000,000,000 spent to build ships.

What happened to rates? I am going to read a summary that Mr. McAdoo gives in his official report, which shows what the farmer is up against when he depends upon foreign shipping in the case of an emergency. It may be all right for a few years, but when the emergency comes, when the reed upon which he has been resting fails, then profits of a few years are wiped out and he is brought to bankruptcy. Listen to what Mr. McAdoo says. He heads this:

The effect of high ocean freight rates on the American farmer.

I do not suppose Mr. McAdoo could be accused of trying to mislead the farmers of the country or that it could be said that he was especially appealing to them for any particular reason. I am simply reading this to show that, not in a partisan campaign, not in a campaign of any kind, but upon a recital of the facts, the Secretary of the Treasury deemed it important to call especial attention to the losses the farmers of the country sustained by reason of not having an American merchant marine. He said:

It will be observed that the greatest increases in rates and the heaviest tax has been imposed upon the products in which the American farmer is most concerned, namely, grain and cotton. These commodities constitute the great bulk of our export trade and have the largest influence in throwing the balance of foreign trade in favor of this country.

While the steamship companies have imposed conscienceless taxes—

I would like to have my good friend from Mississippi remember that these steamship companies which had imposed conscienceless taxes upon the farmers were not American companies. They were the foreign companies, those whom we want by this bill, if possible, to keep from imposing these conscienceless taxes upon the American farmer—

While the steamship companies have imposed conscienceless taxes in the form of increased rates on grain, amounting, as already shown, to as much as 900 per cent to some ports, they have placed an even heavier burden upon cotton, where the increase in rates to some ports is as high as 1,100 per cent.

I can not understand why our people who are especially interested in cotton, remembering the conditions they went through, are not willing to take a chance, at any rate, upon the passage of this bill and its possible development of an American merchant marine. I know they are honest in their convictions and in their beliefs, and I have no fault to find. I simply can not understand it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator give the date of that report? My recollection is that the Senator's response to the strong appeal of the Secretary of the Treasury was a nine-hour filibuster against the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The date of the report is January 27, 1915. That has absolutely nothing to do with the merits of this case. I may have been wrong in that. The Senator thinks I was; but it has nothing to do with the merits of this proposition.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator is always candid. Does the Senator now believe he was wrong?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not. I think I supported the bill later on when it was modified and amended to meet the objections made against the original bill, and I believe we got some good legislation by the act of 1916. I think it was good legislation, and I join with my good friend from Florida in urging the retention of the Shipping Board as a proper agency. I would like to see it made a board of trade for this country, as the English Board of Trade is for the merchant marine of Great Britain. That is what I would like to see, and I believe we would get a merchant marine, possibly, without some of this legislation if that could be brought about.

Mr. McAdoo further said:

This increase is particularly onerous upon the cotton producers of the South, because it comes at a time when the effects of the war have greatly reduced the value of cotton and when the southern farmers are least able to bear additional burdens.

Grain, cotton, and other commodities are usually sold "delivered" at the port of destination. When steamship companies raise the cost of delivery of grain from 6 cents to 60 cents per bushel—it makes a vast difference in the price the farmer receives for his product; and when ocean freight charges on cotton are raised from $1.25 to $15 per bale, the price at which the farmer sells his cotton is seriously reduced.

I hope Senators from the grain States will note this as to what happened—

To show what the burden imposed on the farmers by these high ocean freight rates means, it is necessary only to bring out the fact that while the total freight cost on our exports by sea for December, 1914, was $30,742,500, the great commodities of grain, cotton, and flour bore $11,782,250 of this charge, or more than 36 per cent of the entire freight cost on all exports by sea for December, 1914.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] tells me that some of the rates were as high as $1 a bushel. There is no question about it. The farmer had to absorb a great deal of that. He could not help himself. He was at their mercy.

Mr. McAdoo further said, as to the American people being burdened by reason of this lack of shipping, in the same report from which I have been reading:

BURDEN UPON AMERICAN BUSINESS.

Annexed hereto as Exhibit 1 is a summary of our sea trade and the estimated freight cost of handling it from July to December, 1914, inclusive, prepared by the Actuary of the Treasury Department.

From this it appears that our total exports by sea for July, 1914 (before the war), were $139,225,479, and the ocean freight cost was $7,833,482, or 5.63 per cent; the total of such exports for December, 1914, were $226,000,000 (estimated) and the ocean freight cost was $30,742,500, or 13.6 per cent—an increase over July of 141 per cent.

If the ocean freight cost on December exports had been at the same rate as July, viz, 5.63 per cent, the total freight charge on our exports for December would have been $12,723,800 instead of $30,742,500. In other words, the increased ocean freight tax arbitrarily imposed upon our farmers and business men for the month of December, 1914, only, was $18,018,700. If exports by sea continue for the 12 months of 1915 at the December, 1914, rate and the ocean freight charges are the same as for December, 1914, the American farmers and business men will pay to shipowners (principally foreign)—

He puts that in parentheses in his report. Of course, they would have to be largely foreign when we had only 15 engaged in the overseas trade, and only possibly 1,000,000 tons capable of going into it. I continue reading:

The American farmers and business men will pay to shipowners (principally foreign) increased freight charges above the normal rate of $216,224,400, or more than five times the $40,000,000 which the Government proposes by the shipping bill to put into American ships for the protection of our foreign commerce.

In two months and seven days the increased ocean freight charges (above the normal rates prevailing in July, 1914) exacted on our foreign trade at the December, 1914, rate would amount to $40,241,761, or more than the total amount, namely, $40,000,000, which the shipping bill authorizes for investment in an American merchant marine.

In 12 months, as before stated, the total increase in the freight tax levied by steamship owners, mostly foreign, upon our export trade at the December, 1914, rate would amount to the sum of $216,224,400. If the same be applied to our import trade, there would be an additional increase of $95,640,000, or a total increased ocean freight charge on exports and imports by sea in one year of $311,864,400, or 141.6 per cent over the usual cost.

An increased burden upon the business of this country because we did not have ships.

Mr. President, that is what we met in the time of the emergency, and that is what the American farmer and the American business man had to pay to foreigners for the carrying of their products because we did not have American ships.

I have here a little book written by Mr. Bernard Baker, who was, I may say, the originator of the shipping bill of 1915. He was a great shipping man. If we had put his ideas fully into effect as contained in that bill and then carried out the law, we would have gone a long way toward building up an American merchant marine. I want to read what he said as to the condition of things when we got into the war, as follows:

The distressing experience of American business during the two years past—and American business is the very life of the American Nation—has brought home to us the blundering policy of the past. It has demonstrated the supreme folly of placing our foreign trade at the mercy of alien ships.

Now, I know my friends on the other side and the opponents of the measure do not want our commerce placed at the mercy of alien ships. They probably believe that the bill will not aid in the establishment of an American merchant marine. I believe that it will. It is a matter of judgment. It is a matter of opinion. Neither one of us can be certain, but when I have disastrous results pointed out, and when I refresh my own recollection about the disastrous results which came about by our not having an American merchant marine, then, Mr. President, I am not willing to take the risk of delaying any longer trying to do something to establish an American merchant marine that will be with us when emergencies arise.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator a moment ago said that if we had adopted some of the ideas of Bernard Baker they would have gone a long way toward establishing a merchant marine. What were those ideas?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would just say in a general way that he proposed to give to the Shipping Board almost unlimited authority to deal with the American merchant marine in a business way.

Mr. POMERENE. Did he suggest a subsidy?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I do not think he did. I have not gone into the details of it recently, but I remember how it impressed me when I read the book. He suggested a great deal of authority should be given to that board that we did not give it in any of our legislation and which, I suppose, Congress would not be willing to give to an administrative agency.

Mr. POMERENE. I remember having read the book about the time it was written, and I wondered what special thoughts he had suggested which met the approval of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is the general one, the authority which he proposed to give to the Shipping Board to meet the practices and methods of competition of our foreign competitors. He proposed to give to the board some authority to do this. The particular suggestions I can not call to mind now. I do remember that his suggestions in general appealed very strongly to me.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator will permit a further interruption, I should like to ask another question. He spoke of the earlier days of our shipping industry, in the early days of the Republic, when Congress had provided for a differential in customs rates on all goods which were brought to this country in American bottoms. How long did that legislation continue in effect, or how long did that right continue?

Mr. JONES of Washington. My recollection is that the legislation was repealed in 1828 as to the discriminating duty proposition. I am not sure about the date, but it continued, I think, until our shipping was carrying close to 90 per cent of the foreign commerce.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator, in the course of his discussion, indicate what other advantages were given by our Government to American shipping during the period when our shipping was really worth while?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I do not expect to go into that any further.

Mr. POMERENE. Can the Senator suggest what other advantages were given to our shipping industry by Congress during that period?

Mr. JONES of Washington. My recollection is that they imposed tonnage dues, and so forth, which affected foreign shipping more than our own, but the great thing was the discriminating duty proposition. The act as first passed, my recollection now is, provided that goods imported in American ships should have a reduction of 10 per cent of the tariff rate, and that in a year or two they changed that so that they had the basic rate applying to all, and if the goods were brought here in foreign ships they added 10 per cent to the tariff. That was the principal thing. In fact, that is all there was in that tax.

Mr. POMERENE. We had a splendid merchant marine up until about the time of the Civil War.

Mr. JONES of Washington. In a speech I made when the Underwood-Simmons bill was up I took up the shipping history of the country in five-year periods and showed when we reached our apex and when we began to decline, and I convinced myself at any rate that our declining shipping was due to and began largely with our repeal of the discriminating duty clause. While it did not reach the final conclusion probably until the Civil War, it was going down, at any rate.

Mr. POMERENE. In the merchant marine act which the Senator introduced there was some provision to that effect, was there not?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does the Senator refer to the act of 1920?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; which permitted discrimination.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will state what it did. It directed the President to abrogate the treaties we had which prevented our adopting a policy of that kind. It did not of itself undertake a policy of that kind. It simply directed the President to abrogate the treaties, and then Congress would have the power to act.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator has stated the legislation more accurately than I did, but is the Senator of the opinion that if those treaties were now abrogated, so that there could be some differential in tariff rates on goods carried in American bottoms, it would meet the situation?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am firmly convinced of it.

Mr. POMERENE. Does not the Senator think, if negotiations were begun with the other nations of the world, that some modification of those treaties could be made so as to permit it?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think so, if we would take a pretty firm attitude; but two administrations, one Democratic and the other Republican, have refused, I might say absolutely refused, to carry out that policy.

Mr. POMERENE. Did they refuse or did they simply neglect to do it?

Mr. JONES of Washington. They refused to do it. President Wilson, I think, expressly gave out a statement that it would not be done, and President Harding has taken the same stand.

Mr. POMERENE. Both administrations refused to abrogate the treaties——

Mr. JONES of Washington. They did.

Mr. POMERENE. But they did not refuse to enter into negotiations with other nations so as to have them consent to a modification of those provisions of the treaties?

Mr. JONES of Washington. They did not refuse to do it. I do not know that they have been asked to do it. I do not think they would have done it. I have not made any inquiries as to whether they have tried to do it or not. Of course, unless we took some drastic action, I can see how the other nations would refuse to negotiate, because they are in the most advantageous position as long as those treaties are kept in effect and it is to their advantage not to have the treaties abrogated, and I suppose, of course, they would refuse to negotiate. We will never get it done unless we take some drastic action.

Mr. McKELLAR. Congress would have the right to repeal those treaties.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Congress would have that right. There could be incorporated in the pending bill an express provision imposing discriminating duties. We could not put it in the bill now because that would make it a revenue measure which should originate in the House. Congress has the right to do it and could abrogate the treaties in that way, but, of course, that would be a very drastic step to take. In the merchant marine act of 1920 the committee thought that the proper and courteous way to proceed was to direct the President to give to those countries the notice required in most of the treaties of the abrogation of the treaties at the end of a certain time; but that was not done.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the only point arising about the act of 1920 was that we provided that parts of the treaties which bore on this question should be denounced and abrogated, and, of course, that raised the question whether we could denounce part of a treaty. I think we should have denounced all of each treaty and made new arrangements and new treaties.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But that was not the ground upon which the administration refused.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; President Wilson said, and I think President Harding took the same view, that it was not wise and was not good business and was not the proper thing to do. But I think there is a lot of trouble involved there. I believe if they started in to negotiate those treaties it would take a good deal of work and some time, but it ought to be done, in my judgment. I do not know but the point was well taken that we could not denounce part of a treaty between ourselves and another nation, but that we must denounce the whole treaty and then negotiate a new treaty.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That may be true, but that was not the ground upon which it was based. There is every reason to believe that if we had abrogated the whole treaties they would not have refused to negotiate new ones. I think President Wilson contended that Congress did not have the right to tell him to abrogate these treaties. Possibly we had not, but we could have abrogated the treaties ourselves. I would be in favor of doing it myself, so far as that is concerned, but that we can not act upon at this time.

Mr. POMERENE. Other countries are and have been granting certain subventions to their shipping. They have given, for instance, reduced rates on all goods which come from the interior of the country to their ports, and so forth. That operates indirectly as a discrimination in favor of their shipping. If we were to denounce the treaties or the provisions of the treaties referred to, that would simply be accomplishing by direct means what the other countries are doing by indirect means. If those countries were notified that unless they would consent to certain modifications of certain treaty provisions this Government would then denounce those provisions, and give the notice far enough in advance so that there would be an opportunity for further negotiation, I believe that something might be accomplished. I may be wrong about it, but in view of what the Senator has suggested was the cause of the original upbuilding of our merchant marine, it seems to me that we could do the same thing now.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator and I are in hearty accord on that proposition. I am firmly convinced of it, and the reasons given for not doing it are not substantial at all to my mind. But I have taken it for granted, and I think the committee took for granted, that there is no chance of doing that, and so we have not considered it at all and I have not considered it in connection with this discussion.

Mr. McKELLAR. If that were done, in the judgment of the Senator, would it take the place of direct aid or subsidy?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think so.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would that be satisfactory to the Senator?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It would be satisfactory to me personally. I think it would be the most effective way of building up our merchant marine; but it does not seem that we are able to get it, and so I am going to take the next best thing that presents itself. That is my theory. I consider this such a vital proposition, I consider it so essential that something should be done now to make use of the fleet that we have, and to use it in the establishment of a permanent merchant marine, that I am going to take the next best thing that anyone proposes which appeals to me.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I can see the Senator has not by any means approached the conclusion of his argument, and I was just wondering, as it is now 15 minutes after 5 o'clock, whether he would not prefer to go on in the morning. The hour is late, and there are very few Senators present.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Personally I would prefer to go on to-day.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is quite late and I know that many Senators desire to leave. The attendance, as we are aware, has diminished considerably from what it was when the Senator began his speech. I think, perhaps, the Senator would advance matters somewhat by allowing us to adjourn until to-morrow morning.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will ask the Senator whether he thinks there will be very much morning business to-morrow?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think so.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If that is likely to be the case, as I like the way matters have progressed to-day, I think that I shall not speak further this afternoon. I am informed, however, that there is a desire to have a short executive session.

MERGER OF MEAT-PACKING COMPANIES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair) laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 364, agreed to December 6, 1922 (submitted by Mr. LA FOLLETTE), information relative to the proposed merger of large meat-packing companies, together with certain other information and accompanying documents.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I request that the letter of the Secretary be printed in the RECORD, and that the whole matter be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest that perhaps it would be well to have the whole report printed as a public document, so that we can have the question in a convenient form to study it before it comes up in the Senate, if it is to come before the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It occurred to me that the accompanying papers ought to go to the committee for examination. I see there are some voluminous records attached which I did not take time to examine. The committee will consider the question of printing and report back to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah desire to have it printed as a document?

Mr. SMOOT. I will look it over before I make such a request. I do not make it at this time.

The communication and accompanying papers were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, December 12, 1922.

The honorable the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: This communication is in response to a resolution of the Senate of the United States, adopted December 6, 1922 (S. Res. 364), copy of which was duly transmitted to me by the Secretary of the Senate under date of December 6, 1922. This resolution reads as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and hereby is, directed to report immediately to the Senate all information now in his possession relating to any proposed merger or mergers of large meat-packing companies, accompanying said report with a statement of the number of animals annually slaughtered under Federal inspection tabulated by fiscal years, beginning July 1, 1918, and the proportion slaughtered by each of the five principal packers, with their subsidiary and affiliated companies; also to report as to any application for the privilege of merger, by whom made, and what action, if any, he has taken or contemplates taking in reference to such proposed merger."

While I have in mind a due regard for the coordinate relations of the executive and legislative branches of the Government, I am quite willing to comply with this resolution so far as possible.

A statement of the number of animals annually slaughtered under Federal inspection, tabulated by fiscal years, etc., is transmitted herewith:

I have no information as to any proposed merger or mergers of large meat-packing companies other than certain information informally submitted to me by Mr. J. Ogden Armour and two members of his staff to the effect that there is under consideration a purchase by Armour & Co. of the assets and business of Morris & Co., but not the corporate stock or share capital of Morris & Co., the price to be paid approximately one-third in cash, one-third in preferred stock, and one-third in common stock of the purchasing company or its successors. Armour & Co. and Morris & Co. are two of the five largest meat-packing concerns in the United States. Representatives of Armour & Co. submitted to me three sets of typewritten papers. The first of these is entitled "Law, facts, and argument," and contains certain historical and financial data concerning Armour & Co. and Morris & Co., as well as summary statements of certain information obtained primarily from public records and documents relating to the slaughtering and meat-packing business in the United States, with special reference to the operations of these two concerns. This paper also contains a discussion of the packers and stockyards act, the Federal Trade Commission act, the Clayton Act, and the Sherman antitrust law in their bearings on the proposed action, together with a general argument. The second of these papers is a "Brief" on law points. The third is an "Appendix," containing detailed information purporting to be taken mainly from public records as to such matters as the purchase and slaughter of animals by the various packing concerns, volume and character of business over various periods of time, including a statement of the names and locations of competitive concerns operating at various markets where Armour & Co. and Morris & Co. are engaged in business. Copies of these papers are transmitted herewith.

In stating to me what they desire to do, namely, to purchase the physical assets of Morris & Co., Mr. Armour and the members of his staff did not present an application for the privilege of merger. They said they came to make plain in advance the proposed business transaction and they expressed the hope that it would not be found to be in violation of the law and that it would not meet the opposition of this department. They said further that they hoped that upon consideration I might be able to agree with them that the proposed transaction would result in substantial economies in the transaction of their business and that these economies would be reflected both in the price they were able to pay producers for live stock and in the price at which they would be able to sell meats to the consumers. They contended that the bringing together of these two plants would result in savings of many millions of dollars each year and would enable them to conduct their packing and distributing operations more economically and, consequently, to compete more vigorously both in the purchase of live stock and in the sale of meats.

I have given careful consideration to the provisions of Title II of the packers and stockyards act, particularly that portion which makes it unlawful for any packer to "engage in any course of business or do any act for the purpose or with the effect of manipulating or controlling prices in commerce, or of creating a monopoly in the acquisition of, buying, selling, or dealing in, any article in commerce, or of restraining commerce"; and to the provisions of section 402 of the packers and stockyards act, that "the provisions (including penalties) of sections 6, 8, 9, and 10 of the act entitled 'An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes,' approved September 26, 1914, are made applicable to the jurisdiction, powers, and duties of the Secretary in enforcing the provisions of this act and to any person subject to the provisions of this act, whether or not a corporation." There is nothing in the act itself which specifically prohibits the purchase by one packer of the physical assets of another. The question seems to be whether out of such a transaction would flow conditions or actions which would come within the prohibitions of the act.

On Monday, November 27, I met with the President and the Attorney General, at which time the proposed purchase by Armour & Co. of the physical assets of Morris & Co. was considered. There was unanimity of agreement that there was no obligation upon either of us to indorse or acquiesce in the action proposed or to express an opinion concerning it. On the contrary, each was firmly of the opinion that none of us would or could be expected to approve in advance a transaction of this kind. The real question under discussion was whether the proposed purchase and sale might in and of itself be a violation of the law or whether it was of such a nature as to warrant action by any of us in advance of its consummation.

I addressed to the Attorney General an inquiry, as follows:

"The packers and stock yards act, 1921, in Title II, section 202, makes unlawful certain conduct on the part of packers as defined in the act; and in section 203 provides for a procedure in case the Secretary has reason to believe that any packer has violated or is violating any provision of Title II.

"Title IV, section 402, provides that for the efficient execution of the provisions of this act, and in order to provide information for the use of Congress, the provisions of sections 6, 8, 9, and 10 of the Federal Trade Commission act are made applicable to the jurisdiction, powers, and duties of the Secretary of Agriculture in enforcing the packers and stockyards act. The above references are not comprehensive, but serve to direct attention to the basis for the question on which I desire your advice.

"Recently the head of one of the five largest packing concerns has called upon me and has stated that he has in contemplation the purchase of the physical assets of another of these five largest packing concerns, the purchase price being part cash and part in the stock of the purchasing concern, and including the assumption of certain liabilities of the selling concern. The question upon which I desire your opinion is whether the terms of the packers and stockyards act contemplate or require me to take any action with regard to such a transaction in advance of its consummation."

In reply to this inquiry I have received the following communication from the Attorney General:

"In your letter of November 22, 1922, you state that the head of one of the five largest meat-packing concerns has called upon you, and stated that he has in contemplation the purchase of the physical assets of another of these five largest packing concerns, the purchase price being part cash and part in the stock of the purchasing concern and including the assumption of certain liabilities of the selling concern. You also state in your letter that you desire my opinion as to whether the terms of the 'packers and stockyards act, 1921,' contemplate or require you to take any action with regard to such a transaction in advance of its consummation.

"Section 202 in Title II of the 'packers and stockyards act, 1921,' makes certain acts by a packer, as packer is defined in such act, unlawful. Section 203, in Title II, of this act provides that 'whenever the Secretary has reason to believe that any packer has violated or is violating any provision of this title' he shall cause a complaint to be issued and a hearing to be held. This section also provides that if 'after such hearing the Secretary finds that the packer has violated or is violating any provision of this title' the Secretary shall make a report of his findings of fact and shall issue an order requiring the packer 'to cease and desist from continuing such violation.'

"Section 402 of Title IV of the 'packers and stockyards act, 1921,' provides that 'for the efficient execution of the provisions of this act and in order to provide information for the use of Congress the provisions (including penalties) of sections 6, 8, 9, and 10 of the act entitled 'An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes,' approved September 26, 1914, are made applicable to the jurisdiction, powers, and duties of the Secretary in enforcing the provisions of this act.

"The provisions of the Federal Trade Commission act pertinent to this inquiry are those found in section 6 and are as follows:

"'The commission shall also have power (a) to gather and compile information concerning and to investigate from time to time the organization, business, conduct, practices, and management of any corporation engaged in commerce * * * and its relation to other corporations and to individuals, associations, and partnerships; * * * (f) to make public, from time to time, such portions of the information obtained by it hereunder, except trade secrets and names of customers, as it shall deem expedient in the public interest.'

"It is my opinion that the packers and stockyards act, 1921, is essentially a regulatory act, and that the duties and powers of the Secretary of Agriculture thereunder are to regulate the industry included within its provisions. Neither the act itself nor the regulation provided for therein contemplates or requires that you should advise the industry in regard to such a transaction in advance of its consummation.

"In the opinion in the case of Stafford et al. v. Wallace et al., decided by the Supreme Court of the United States May 1, 1922, Mr. Chief Justice Taft said:

"'The language of the law shows that what Congress had in mind primarily was to prevent such conspiracies by supervision of the agencies which would be likely to be employed in it. * * * Congress has found as an evil to be apprehended and to be prevented by the act here in question, (in) the use and control of stockyards and the commission men to promote a packers' monopoly of interstate commerce. * * * Its provisions are carefully drawn to apply only to those practices and obstructions which, in the judgment of Congress, are likely to affect interstate commerce prejudicially.'

"The act in section 203 provides that when you have reason to believe that any packer has violated or is violating the provisions of that act you should proceed to issue a complaint and conduct a hearing, and if you find that the packer has violated or is violating such act you shall render a report of the facts and issue an order requiring the packer to cease and desist from continuing such violation. The provisions of the Federal Trade Commission act are carried into the packers and stockyards act, 1921, for the purpose, as expressed therein, of enabling the efficient execution of the provisions of the packers and stockyards act, 1921, and in order to provide information for the use of Congress. This does not seem to broaden the purposes or the essential powers conferred by the packers and stockyards act, 1921. The language used in the packers and stockyards act, 1921, makes it clear to me that the act does not require you to take any formal action unless you have reason to believe that the law has been violated or is being violated. To constitute a violation of the law within the meaning of this act there must be something more than a mere statement of what a person or corporation contemplates.

"In answer to your question as to whether the terms of the packers and stockyards act, 1921, contemplate any action on your part in connection with the proposed purchase of physical assets, I am of opinion that the act vests you with broad powers of inquiry and that you may make such inquiry."

For some weeks I have been making certain investigations and studies for the purpose of trying to measure the probable effect upon competition in the buying of live stock and the selling of meat if the suggested purchase and sale should be completed, but as yet no occasion seems to have arisen which requires formal action.

As to future action, that will depend altogether upon future events.

Respectfully,

HENRY C. WALLACE, Secretary.

AGRICULTURAL CREDITS AND COOPERATIVE MARKETING.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, two closely related subjects, rural credits and cooperative marketing of farm products, already have received from congressional agencies earnest consideration. The indications are that these questions soon will be brought before the Congress for action.

The importance of securing fair, wise, and adequate legislation with respect to these subjects is generally recognized. Much confusion and conflict occur as to what is the best means of liberalizing and stabilizing agricultural credits and marketing agricultural products so as to give assurance that a fair relationship may be maintained between the prices paid by consumers of farm products and the prices received by producers.

Mr. B. M. Baruch, a profound student of economics and a financier of world-wide renown, has for several years studied intensively these great questions. His researches have been comprehensive, his information seems accurate, and his conclusions are worthy of the attention of Senators and Representatives who are anxious to bring substantial and permanent relief to an industry the prosperity of which is inseparably associated with the comfort and well-being of all the people of this country.

I ask to have printed in the RECORD, in 8-point type, as a part of my remarks an address delivered by Mr. Baruch in Chicago yesterday on these subjects.

There being no objection, the address referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

AGRICULTURAL FINANCE—A SOLUTION OF THE RURAL CREDITS PROBLEM.

[An address by Bernard M. Baruch before the annual convention of the American Farm Bureau Federation, Chicago, December 11, 1922.]

Agriculture is the oldest and best-known business existing today—and it is a business much like any other. Yet it has seen grow up around it younger giants of industry that could not possibly get along without agriculture; young giants that by organization and modern methods have destroyed the fair relationship between those who produce from the soil and those who produce from mine and factory.

Other businesses have been centralized and concentrated to such an extent that the farmer finds himself buying at more or less controlled prices from great centrally directed industries and selling in an unlimitedly competitive manner in a market over which he has no control. All around him in the modern world he is met with organization where production and selling are concentrated in specialized hands. He finds, as a result, that he is not receiving a fair share of what he produces.

The statisticians of the Departments of Agriculture and Labor tell us that if prices of agricultural commodities were in a just relation to those of other commodities in 1913, they are now 36 points out of adjustment. That is to say, the purchasing power of farm products—their exchange value in other commodities—is only 64 cents on the dollar compared with what it was in 1913—and even then it was not equitable. An examination of Department of Agriculture figures will reveal the deadly effects of such economic injustice. Millions of good farmers on good land and with good crops are actually running their business, through no fault of their own or the mischances of nature, at a loss that spells ruin if continued. Capital is being impaired and burdensome debts incurred to keep the farms going and the farm people and, indeed, all of us, clothed and fed. This distressing situation is partly due to the general upset of the world during the war and after, but it has been aggravated by the weakness of the rural financing and marketing, which have caused the farmer to absorb much, if not most, of the losses of maladjustment and readjustment.

Some time ago, at the invitation of the Kansas State Board of Agriculture and the American Farm Bureau Federation, I made an investigation into the financial and merchandizing aspects of farming, and came to the conclusion that modern business methods and the growth of legislation had put the production and distribution of farm products out of line with the rest of the economic structure, to the disadvantage of agriculture. Being asked to suggest a remedy, it seems to me that the proper theory for correction should be based primarily upon the fact that without regular access to commensurate financing, modern business, with its highly specialized production and distribution, would be impossible. Agriculture needs like facilities in order to be placed upon an equality with all the other industries with which it has to deal. And in order to accomplish this, so far as access to credit is concerned, I have the following recommendations to make, regardless of whether you market cooperatively or as individuals, although I do not hesitate to say that I am unqualifiedly in favor of cooperative marketing.

A new finance system should be set up to increase the volume of three classes of rural credits: (1) Credit for the more orderly marketing of crops. (2) Credit for the purpose of raising and marketing cattle. (3) Credit for the productive purposes.

It is unnecessary to dwell upon the necessity of credit for the more orderly marketing of crops. You are too well aware of, indeed, many of you are suffers from, the necessity of forcing upon the market the products of the soil because of inability to obtain credit to carry those products until such time as the markets and transportation were no longer glutted by the great flow of them.

The basis of increased credits for this particular purpose should be the placing of the products in a modern warehouse or elevator where a neutral authority would register their grade and amount, and where a certificate would be issued for the amount so stored or warehoused. Honest and dependable grading and weighing are essential to the acceptability of warehouse certificates, but should be guaranteed to the farmer as a matter of common decency and civil right under any commercial or financial system. However it may be now, there is no doubt that the farmer has been defrauded by undergrading and scant measuring.

The farmer, once in possession of this certificate (with his product well protected and insured in the warehouse and properly graded), could take it to the present banking system and obtain credit upon it in much the same way as is now done; or to a new finance corporation which should be created for the purpose of lending money to the farmer, at the lowest obtainable rate of interest, for not exceeding one year, upon his note secured by this certificate representing marketable commodities. The new institution, intended to be independent of the present banking system, would place the farmer's note, secured by his products, in its treasury, and issue its own obligations, as is now done by the Federal land banks in their field. The paper so issued should be discountable in the Federal reserve system when having not more than nine months to maturity.

Paper issued by a federally regulated institution of this kind would have the widest kind of a market and would place the farmer who deserves credit in a position where he can obtain it at the lowest rates of interest in the credit markets of the world.

The basis of the issuance to cattle raisers would be, of course, the cattle, which would have to be properly inspected, with restrictions that would be applicable in the circumstances. Debentures for this purpose should run for as long as three years, but only notes or debentures having nine months or less before maturity should be discountable in the Federal reserve banks.

In the matter of credit for production, because here we do not have collateral of unquestioned value and marketability as in the two other instances, we have more to consider the character and individuality of the farmer himself—what bankers call the moral risk. Heretofore, the country banks and merchants have furnished this sort of credit. But, mind you, we are now endeavoring to give the farmer as free access to the credit markets of the world as other producers enjoy, so that he shall be confined, necessarily, to local markets.

The Raiffheisen banks in Germany and the Credit Agricole in France have as their basis the sound principle of mutual individual indorsement; but I can see there are very grave difficulties in the way of that in this country. These could be overcome by the formation of financial associations or corporations in localities so desiring, whose purpose would be to provide the necessary guaranties to the note of the farmer who wants and is entitled to obtain credit for the purchase of machinery or fertilizer, or for anything necessary to the productivity of his farm. These associations or corporations would be somewhat analogous to the farm loan associations of our Federal land banks. They would be controlled by the farmers and others by whom the capital would be subscribed. Notes for productive purposes would be required to have the indorsement of the local organization, which would have the right to indorse and forward to a regional institution for sale an amount of notes equal to ten times the local's capital. The procedure under this plan would be somewhat as follows:

The farmer, if he can not borrow from the present banking facilities, goes to the local credit organization. If it decides to lend him money, it takes his note, indorses it, and passes it on to the regional institution, which in turn places the local body's note in its treasury and issues its own obligation against it for sale in the credit markets of the world. This latter paper ought to be discountable in the Federal reserve system when its maturity is within nine months.

The regional institutions would be controlled by a central organization under Federal authority. Each should be allowed to issue and sell its obligations in the open market to the extent of ten times its capital. Any present or future bank or financial institution, as well as the proposed local rural credit units, that could furnish proper guaranties could use this regional organization.

There is no reason why one central organization should not be the agency for all of the three above purposes; that is, for more orderly marketing of crops, for the raising and marketing of cattle, and for productive purposes. However, this institution should be rigidly departmentalized and a certain percentage of its funds allocated to each branch of the organization. Its obligations for the three different purposes enumerated would thus stand on their own bottoms, separate each from the other; each fund to be earmarked. Otherwise credit for the more orderly marketing of crops which have the warehoused product as collateral and for live stock would have to pay as high a rate of interest as that which was granted for productive purposes, which has no such marketable collateral.

After all is said and done, the final arbiters of how much money will be raised will be the investing public, banks and bankers, whose ability to furnish money by buying the notes or debentures is greater even than that of the Government. They are entitled to know what they are buying, so that orderly marketing, cattle raising, and production will each bear its just share of interest charges. Interest rates on credit for productive purposes might reasonably be slightly greater than for other purposes.

With proper governmental control and regulation we should thus soon have a new sound financial system supplemental to the present one, but independent in its administration, which would free the farmer from many of the present credit restrictions, of which he so justly complains. Like a big business, the farmer would be able to either get his credit from the Federal reserve system, as at present, or by going out into the general credit markets as well organized as those with whom he has to compete.

The initial capital of the new system could be obtained out of the liquidation of the War Finance Corporation. The amount can be readily determined by an investigation to ascertain what are the annual credit requirements for the three purposes necessary to supplement present sources. I might add that I am given to understand that the larger cattlemen do not desire Government capital investment assistance. Although available to them, it is not, however, for the few larger but for the vast number of smaller producers that the proposed system is suggested. Assuming that the new system would have a capital of fifty to one hundred millions of dollars—to be increased if found necessary—and the right to issue its own obligations to the amount of ten times its capital, you can readily see how, in addition to the present credit facilities, the farmer would be well taken care of and could have no just cause for complaint in respect to credit. It must be remembered, however, that no legislation can create higher prices, which are solely determined by the natural law of supply and demand; neither can legislation give a farmer any more credit than his character and volume of production entitle him to. But it can give him an equal access to credit and freedom to market his crop more at his own discretion.

The country should be divided into regions for the establishment of the regional loan institutions somewhat on the basis of the Federal land banks and the Federal reserve system. Each suitable locality within each of these regions should form its own organization for the purpose of dealing with the regional institution.

It is not necessary and might be confusing for me to go into an elaboration of the details of the method of creating and administering such a system as I am recommending. There are a number of bills before Congress aiming in this general direction, which it should be easily possible to combine to realize in one measure the fundamentals of the system here proposed. And it may be possible to avoid further extension of governmental machinery, already too complex and cumbersome, by utilizing the executive and administrative machinery of the Farm Loan Board with some adaptations and revisions. (Since preparing this address there has been introduced into Congress a bill covering most of the things herein suggested with a most valuable addition of admission of small banks into the Federal reserve system.)

As in the case of the land banks, provision should be made for the repayment of the original capital investment of the Government. In the end the Government would be repaid not only in the money sense but also in the greatly increased prosperity of 40 per cent of the population—yes, of the whole population.

This institution will not be a panacea for all our ills, and indeed, may not actually be used as much as now anticipated. But its potential credit-providing facilities will be there and operate powerfully as a restriction of the practices of which you now complain. But we must remember that whatever instrumentality we have, no matter how excellent its organization and objects, it is, after all, the intelligent direction of its affairs that will realize the desired results. Let us not be too critical of our Federal reserve system as such, for in fairness we must admit that it has accomplished much; nor should we expect too much of any new institution. It is wisdom of administrators rather than the agency itself that makes for failure or success.

The proposed system would place agriculture on an equal footing, as far as credit is concerned, with other industries. That is only a beginning, but it is a proper beginning. I have not been called upon to speak of the additional things that are necessary, but I may say that one of them has to do with greater cooperation in marketing. This, I am glad to say, is increasing by leaps and bounds. Let us always remember that we can not enjoy the fruits of cooperation unless each one gives up a certain amount of his individuality and allows a specialized organization, the cooperative society, to do his marketing for him. Each one may think that he can do it better, but if all thought so we should still remain with the old-fashioned machinery, which has given such poor results and produced, comparatively, so little for the farmer.

Another matter of very great importance, which is a part of almost every program for the removal of unnecessary burdens upon agriculture, is that of the carrying of farm products from the producer to the consumer—the transportation problem. There is much to be done here of vital importance to the farmer.

But I would urge upon you the necessity of concentrating on the doing of one thing at a time. I believe that the matter of credit is basic and primary. And I would also urge you to have your leaders devote their attention to this matter, which is now before Congress, and provision for which could be placed upon the statute books within a very few days if you get behind it and do not allow yourselves to become diverted by too many scattered efforts.

Again, in considering the whole subject, one must have in mind that no matter what credit facilities, no matter what transportation and what distributive agencies you may have, there must be a market; and that market, as in other business, you must continually endeavor to widen.

That brings us to another point concerning which I feel that I must say a few words—and that is the question of your foreign markets. The price of all products is finally made by their surplus. If you can not sell your surplus abroad, you must take a much lower price for that portion of the product which can be consumed at home. A small exportable surplus often has a very disproportionate effect on the price of an entire commodity. So our thoughts must turn toward considering what, if anything, we can do to widen our foreign market, on which we are dependent for the sale of our surplus products. You farmers are the real exporters of this country. It is you who are most deeply interested in foreign affairs.

The whole world was thrown into confusion when Germany quit the workbench and drew the sword and the other nations had to follow. The sword may have been sheathed, but there is no peace; and when there is no peace men can not go on normally producing and consuming. Germany has not yet been restored to the economic circle; neither has Russia, Poland, Austria, or the Balkan countries; England, France, and Italy only partly so. There is nothing so important to you gentlemen as the full reestablishment of your foreign markets, which can come only from reestablishment of the world's economic peace and balance. It is true that last year large quantities of our products were exported—but how were they paid for?

In the first place, by the sale in this country during the first six months of the current year of some $800,000,000 worth of bonds issued by foreign countries at the highest rates of interest ever known in the history of international finance. Secondly, by the sale of family heirlooms, called by my old friends in South Carolina the "wedding rings." Families have sold their famous pictures that have been with them for centuries in order to be clothed and fed. Already there is almost an end of the sale of bonds of European countries, because nations can not pay the rates of interest that are being demanded. The supply of works of art and treasures must soon come to an end. The money secured from the sale of the bonds and the family treasures has not been used for productive purposes but to feed and clothe the population that has been paralyzed by corroding fear.

Gentlemen, I affirm that there is nothing in the world that affects your credit so much as the shrinking of foreign markets for your products. There is nothing to which you can give your attention that is of greater moment to you in a practical way than the creation of the international relations that are precedent to the reestablishment of those markets. I do not speak of our moral responsibility in the matter, nor of the great opportunity that America has to lead a stricken world into a finer and better order of things—an opportunity toward which the noble thoughts of all men urge them, though I do think this consideration the most compelling of all. These thoughts are fundamental to all religions and to the hope of a better world for men and their children. Rather, I dwell merely upon what enlightened selfishness or even just plain greedy selfishness demands—the necessity of keeping open and enlarging an ever-increasing market for the products of your hands and minds.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 12, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our heavenly Father, we bless Thee that we are still within the circle of Thy arms, for their protection is sure and their care is infinite. Each day give us courage and endurance, and may these virtues make us stronger and nobler men. O may Thy greatness flow around about our incompleteness. We ask the forgiveness of our sins. We pray for our families that Thy love and mercy may be their daily portions. In the integrity of soul, in the confidence and calmness of a conquering faith may our whole Nation set up the banners of the living God. In Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REREFERENCE OF SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 26.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate Concurrent Resolution 26, which was referred to the Committee on Rules, be rereferred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. I may say I took up this matter with the chairman of the Committee on Rules and this course is agreeable to him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that Senate Concurrent Resolution 26 be rereferred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman inform the House as to what the concurrent resolution refers?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The concurrent resolution refers to an investigation of the office of the recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia, and it is a joint committee of Members of the House and Senate, it carries no appropriation, and gives no unusual powers.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understand from the chairman of the Committee on Rules he has examined the resolution, and it is clearly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on the District of Columbia?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes; and the chairman of the Committee on Rules suggested I make this request on the floor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

DEPARTMENTS OF STATE AND JUSTICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13232.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13232, with Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13232, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13232) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUSTED: Page 15, line 15, after the word "rent," strike out the amount "$30,715.50" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$25,913.50: Provided, That none of this appropriation shall be used to pay the salary of a consulting engineer: Provided further, That at the request of the Secretary of State the Secretary of War shall detail an officer of the Engineer Corps of the Army to serve as consulting engineer to the commission."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition. I notice, in looking over the report, that the committee has in most instances granted the estimate of the department for the maintenance of these respective commissions. In the present instance the amount recommended by the department was $30,715. This item last year carried an appropriation of $15,000. It has been a subject for controversy for many, many years as to the utility and value of the work of this commission. It has been regarded more or less as a political football to send lame ducks and others of that type to obscurity.

Mr. HICKS. Is the gentleman a candidate himself?

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to state positively that while some gentlemen from New York may be candidates for these positions, I have given special notice that I like my home city too well to stay here at Washington if I am not a Member of this House. [Applause.] I wish now to inquire as to whether the committee has granted the allowance as asked for by the department, or whether they have scanned them rather closely and cut down the appropriations. In this instance the chairman of the subcommittee has reduced on the floor of the House the amount asked for with some qualifications, and yet that permits an expenditure of virtually the full amount asked for other than this for one officer.

Mr. HUSTED. We have made cuts wherever we felt we could do so without injury to a necessary or useful service.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is giving an increased appropriation over the $15,000.

Mr. HUSTED. They reconstituted the commission and they will use this money usefully.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no question but what they will use it.

Mr. HUSTED. I say usefully, to the advantage of the Government.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUSTED. I will.

Mr. BEGG. How can this International Boundary Commission function with Mexico when you refuse to recognize that Government?

Mr. HUSTED. Well, I did try to explain all that yesterday. Of course, they can not come to any definitive agreements.

Mr. BEGG. Has not that been true for four or five years?

Mr. HUSTED. No. That has not been true, because they have not had a commissioner, until very recently, for some time past.

Mr. BEGG. No; the gentleman is wrong there. They have had a commission.

Mr. HUSTED. There is but one American commissioner, and he constitutes the commission. They have not had an American commissioner until recently with the Mexican commissioner for several years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BEGG. I want to ask the gentleman how many men are employed in this work? I am serious about this. I remember that we had quite an investigation, and we found that we were appropriating from $15,000 to $20,000 to $25,000, and they had but one meeting, and they were using all the funds. What are they going to do?

Mr. HUSTED. This new commissioner was appointed some time in the month of August last, and he has had a number of meetings with the Mexican commissioner.

Mr. BEGG. With whom does he meet?

Mr. HUSTED. With the Mexican commissioner.

Mr. BEGG. How can he?

Mr. HUSTED. They meet informally and arrive at informal understandings.

Mr. BEGG. How can they determine anything?

Mr. HUSTED. They can arrive, as I say, at informal agreements, which undoubtedly will be carried out when diplomatic relations between the two countries are reestablished.

Mr. BEGG. I think the latest evidence before the committee was to the effect that about all they did was to survey the water on the Rio Grande.

Mr. HUSTED. They survey the land that has been affected by the change in the course of the stream and measure the water, and then they hold meetings and have notes made of all the facts in these cases, so that later on, when diplomatic relations between the two countries have been resumed, some definite understanding can be arrived at.

Mr. BEGG. If we appropriate $25,000 a year for 10 years, that will be $250,000 in salaries for the purpose of ascertaining the location of a few shifting sand bars. Does the gentleman think it necessary to retain this commission indefinitely?

Mr. HUSTED. I will say to the gentleman that I have never been down there and know nothing about the facts, except as the Secretary of State and other people have testified. The hearings are quite full of information.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me right there to make a suggestion?

Mr. BEGG. Did you ever have anybody testify that knew anything about it? I have, and I have gotten my information from them.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. We have had the testimony of Mr. Carr, of the State Department, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER].

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] will go to the hearings conducted by the Committee on Foreign Affairs he will find that Secretary Root and Secretary Knox and Secretary Bryan and Secretary Lansing and every Secretary of State for the last dozen years have said that this was absolutely essential, that it could not be done with less expense to the State Department by any other method, and that if you would only get this data that you speak of, which in 10 years at an expense of $25,000 a year would amount to $250,000, it might save us a cost of $25,000,000 when we came to settle our differences with Mexico. The essential thing is the measuring of the water. The Mexican Government claims that we are taking more than our share of the water now. Now, if we are taking more than our share of the water, when it comes to settling our differences with the Mexicans we shall have to pay for it.

Mr. BEGG. Three years ago, after hearings, we cut the appropriation down to $5,000. Was the water measured that year?

Mr. GARNER. It was put in there for the purpose of measuring the water alone, and we did measure the water.

Mr. BEGG. Now, what is the use in having this commissioner and this traveling inspector continue to measure any water? It is the engineer on the ground that does the work, and the salary will not amount to $5,000.

Mr. GARNER. That is simply the opinion of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BEGG. It is not simply the opinion of the gentleman from Ohio. It is the testimony elicited in the hearings.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, there is no use in discussing it with the gentleman.

Mr. BEGG. There is no evidence showing that it was essential and necessary to maintain a high-salaried commissioner during the time you are not recognizing the Government of Mexico and when they can not function. Now, next year you will probably find that they will have two or three meetings, and your $25,000 is gone.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GARNER. I do so, Mr. Chairman, in order that the gentlemen of the committee may understand that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. BEGG. "The gentleman from Ohio" knows what the evidence is.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. Is it not a fact that by reason of the character of the Rio Grande and the changes it makes, which are sudden, there are constant disputes arising between the owners in the United States and Texas and those in Mexico, and that these two commissioners have been instrumental in marking the boundary under such circumstances, which has been recognized by the nationals of both parties, and so they have prevented many serious differences?

Mr. GARNER. Yes. I was just going to remark that if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] had done what he has said he had done—read the hearings—he ought to be better informed than his statement to the House indicates. The hearings are full of statements to the effect that it is absolutely essential, when the Rio Grande rises and cuts off an island from Mexico and then flows from Mexico into the United States, to survey that locality under the treaty to ascertain how many acres are involved.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARNER. No; I decline to yield. The gentleman would not yield to me, and continued to make statements that were not justified by the record.

Mr. BEGG. That is just what you are doing now.

Mr. GARNER. The record is full of statements to that effect, that you must survey these bancos in the United States or in Mexico. If they exceed 640 acres they go to the country in which they are carried. If they are less than 640 acres they still remain part of the old territory. Now, who is going to survey it? Who is going to determine that question between the State of Texas and the Government of Mexico? They do do it now. The gentleman from Ohio is mistaken when he says that they do not do it. I am not in favor of fixing jobs for Republicans. This commissioner could well be suspended until relations are resumed between the United States and Mexico.

I insist upon having the money for the purpose of measuring this water, and I do think we ought to have a commissioner to keep down these difficulties if we possibly can. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] is only indicting his own administration when he is indicting the efficiency of this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED].

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For printing and binding for the Pan American Union, and the Public Printer is authorized to print an edition of the monthly bulletin not to exceed 6,000 copies per month, for distribution by the union during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, $20,000.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that we appropriate $100,000 for the Pan American Union. Is the chairman of the committee able to state what the other American Republics contribute?

Mr. HUSTED. I think all of the other adhering members put together appropriate something less than the amount that we contribute.

Mr. WATSON. Suppose there is a deficiency at the end of the year; who pays that?

Mr. HUSTED. There is no deficiency.

Mr. WATSON. What is this money used for? Is it for the repair of buildings?

Mr. HUSTED. No; there is a large force employed at the Pan American Building here in Washington.

Mr. WATSON. What is the money used for?

Mr. HUSTED. It is used for the dissemination of information.

Mr. WATSON. It says it is to meet the expenses of the union. I want to know what the expenses of the union are.

Mr. HUSTED. They disseminate information. People in South America write to the union here at Washington for information on many different subjects.

Mr. WATSON. Is this amount for clerk hire?

Mr. HUSTED. It is for miscellaneous expenses, clerk hire, and for the payment of the salary of the director.

Mr. WATSON. Do the other American Republics pay as much as we do?

Mr. HUSTED. I think all of them put together do not pay quite as much as we do. It is really our institution, in a way. We started it and are the chief promoters of it, although the rights of all members are equal.

Mr. WATSON. And we own the ground and the building here?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. Thank you. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION FOR PROMOTION OF INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.

For the contribution of the United States toward the maintenance of the Bureau of the Interparliamentary Union for the promotion of international arbitration, $4,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. KING: Page 17, lines 19 to 23, inclusive, strike out the paragraph.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I make this motion for the purpose of ascertaining, if possible, something concerning this Bureau of the Interparliamentary Union for the promotion of international arbitration. I have searched high and low for some act under which it was organized, or some contract of organization authorized by this Congress, and for some offices of this interparliamentary union. I understand that at one time they had an office at 54 Jackson Place, but a careful search made by competent detectives and men knowing that vicinity has failed to disclose any such office or any stenographer or chairman or anybody else in charge of it. It seems to be a sort of a mystery and myth. Yet I notice that some individuals who claim to be attached to this organization took a very nice junket to Europe along in the spring some time and attached themselves to the League of Nations by sitting in the gallery at Geneva, to all of which I have no objection whatever. It is, of course, our first and most intimate connection with the League of Nations. What progress is being made by the Interparliamentary Union for the promotion of international arbitration? The sum of $4,000 is asked for. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee and others what this trip to Geneva to visit the League of Nations cost the United States; how much was used for that purpose; and what useful reason there is for the existence of this organization. If there is anybody on God's earth who can tell me anything about it, I will be a most interested and anxious listener.

Mr. HUSTED. This is an institution in which I think our State Department is not particularly interested. It is purely a congressional matter. It is a union composed of members of various legislative bodies who are in favor of submitting all disputes between nations to arbitration. They meet annually at certain designated places abroad and hold a sort of international parliament for the discussion of certain important questions which are submitted. They met in this country in 1904. I think the Members of Congress who are particularly interested in it are the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOORES].

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. And Governor MONTAGUE, of Virginia.

Mr. HUSTED. And the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE]. They have always expressed great interest in it.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. KING. What effort has this institution made since its organization in 1904 to foster the spirit of arbitration between the nations? Did they take any part in attempting to prevent the World War or make any effort along that line?

Mr. HUSTED. I do not know how effective their efforts have been. I think their disposition has been good at least.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I think possibly this $4,000 is very well spent, because both abroad and when he came back here the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] gave everyone to understand that they might just as well quit talking about canceling any part of our foreign indebtedness. None would be canceled. That was one of the good things that grew out of the expenditure of this $4,000, and if we accomplished nothing more it was likely well spent.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Some of us wish to know how this appropriation is expended and for what purpose, and who gets the actual benefit of this $4,000.

Mr. HUSTED. It is our share toward the expense of maintaining this bureau. The headquarters of the bureau are at Brussels. Twenty different countries make annual contributions, according to the size and population of the respective countries, for the maintenance of the bureau, namely: Great Britain, Germany, Russia, France, Austria, Italy, Spain, Japan, Turkey, Belgium, the Netherlands, Portugal, Hungary, Greece, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Switzerland, Rumania, and Serbia. The American Congress joined the union in 1904 and the first appropriation—$2,500—was made in 1912.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move to strike out the last word so that the chairman can give us a little more information about this. Does this organization make a report to anybody?

Mr. HUSTED. It is a matter in which our State Department takes no particular interest, they have no connection with it whatever. It is purely a congressional matter. If our Congress is not interested in having the United States participate in the deliberations of this union, in getting all the information that is available from the bureau, there is no reason why the item should be continued to be carried.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand that no part of the appropriation is used for the payment of the delegates.

Mr. HUSTED. It is not.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That expense is borne by the delegates themselves?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is the chairman's recommendation in regard to this?

Mr. HUSTED. I think we should continue the contribution to the bureau. I think it is a good thing for Members of Congress to meet the members of other parliamentary bodies. It promotes international good feeling.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. KING. What advantage do we get unless there are some reports made of the proceedings? I have investigated in the Congressional Library and I only found one short report made by Judge Slayden, an ex-member from Texas, who was much interested in the parliamentary union at that time. There has been no report of the expenditure since 1904. I presume it has been expended all right. What I would like is a little information to justify the expenditure of this money.

Mr. HUSTED. It is not a large amount of money—only $4,000—as a contribution on the part of this Government toward the maintenance of a bureau which promotes international good feeling and the settlement of disputes through arbitration. I see the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOORES] on the floor, and I would like a statement from him.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. As a matter of fact, if the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOORES] and the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] could make this trip to Europe on this mission that does not spend more than $4,000 of the people's money, was it not rather a cheap junketing trip compared with what some of the congressional junketing trips cost?

Mr. HUSTED. As a matter of fact, these gentleman do not spend any part of this appropriation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to correct the inference contained in the question by the gentleman from Texas. I understand that these delegates get no part of this appropriation.

Mr. HUSTED. Absolutely no part of it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then, it is not a junketing trip.

Mr. BLANTON. The appropriation furnishes grounds for certain Members to make a European trip every year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I wish to oppose this motion to strike out. During this discussion which has been had so far the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has not been here, and Governor MONTAGUE is out of the Chamber with the Judiciary Committee; but the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has just come in. I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] was at the last meeting of the union, but I am not sure. I was not there. I was there three years ago. This union is maintained to secure an adherence of the various parliaments in some 20 principal countries to the principles of arbitration and peace. Not one of the members of any of these parliaments, so far as I know, has ever had a dollar of his expenses paid by this appropriation or any other appropriation. Every Member of Congress is eligible to membership in the American group of the Interparliamentary Union. That Interparliamentary Union was organized and is maintained for the purpose of inculcating the principles of international arbitration. The amount of $4,000 goes to the secretary, who is still, I think, Mr. Lange, whose home is in Norway. He is an exceedingly able and accomplished man, well posted in diplomacy. The meetings are largely attended by members of parliaments of the many different countries who meet on a common basis and discuss international arbitration and similar matters. It has been my privilege to attend but once. The gentleman from Ohio, Ex-Senator BURTON, has gone many times.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman if this is not along the same lines as the League of Nations?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. It is; there is no question about that in a general way. They have the same ultimate purpose—peace; but this union is limited to the members of parliaments of the principal nations of the world. It would seem exceedingly small—for the amount is not great—exceedingly small for the American Congress to refuse to pay this proportion of expenses to the bureau for the circulation of literature. I ask unanimous consent that Senator BURTON may have five minutes.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. KING. The gentleman says the secretary lives at Norfolk, Va.?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Oh, no; I said he lives in Norway.

Mr. KING. Does the gentleman know where he lives?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. KING. Is he an American citizen?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. No.

Mr. KING. Does he draw this $4,000 in salary?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. No; this $4,000 goes to the expense of maintaining the bureau and the maintenance of a large clerical force. I think the office is in Brussels.

Mr. BURTON. No; in Geneva.

Mr. KING. That is where the League of Nations is located. I would like to ask the gentleman has the secretary made any report?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. He has made reports to the association to which the gentleman is eligible as a member. The reports are in French and probably would not be of much service to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KING. Why is it that there is no report in the Congressional Library or in the Congress?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised at the opposition this comparatively trivial item seems to arouse every year. It is along the same line as the expression of a United States Senator who said some years ago, "What have we to do with abroad?" We have a great deal to do with abroad, and our foreign relations are assuming increasing importance every year. This association has existed for some 25 years or more, indeed, 30 years, and has been one of the most helpful agencies for promoting arbitration and international cooperation. It was this body that presented to President Roosevelt a resolution which led to the convening of the second Hague Conference. Its deliberations are not entirely restricted to advocacy of arbitration. In the meeting at Vienna, held in August last, there was an extended discussion of the subject of the rights of minorities in the various nations. A great variety of nations have been represented at various times in the meetings I have attended. Japan is represented at every meeting. Even Turkey and Russia have been represented. This organization affords us a touch with international movements which is of the utmost value to us. It would be a decided reproach to us if we failed to adopt this small appropriation. The expenses are given to the maintenance of the bureau. The secretary, Mr. Lange, has prepared reports, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] will find them in the Congressional Library. There are various volumes; one, especially, for the year 1904.

I wish to say just a word about the idea of detachment that many Members seem to have. We can not keep aloof from movements in the world without the most serious disadvantage to ourselves. This idea that we can live in isolation belongs to the remote past and to a spirit of narrowness that would be utterly unworthy of this House and unworthy of the American people. I trust the motion will be voted down.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. Other nations contribute to this fund?

Mr. BURTON. They do. Ours is the largest contribution. The contributions have been very carefully adjusted. Japan contributes, perhaps, two or three thousand dollars. They take into account as a primary consideration population, and the rates of exchange are considered also.

Mr. KING. I notice by the press that this union or some of the delegates attended the meetings of the League of Nations at Geneva. Was that done officially, and were they able to accomplish anything?

Mr. BURTON. Oh no. It was simply done as private individuals. I trust the gentleman will not come anywhere near to being in a fit simply because some of us went to Geneva to see what the League of Nations was doing.

Mr. KING. Oh, I am very glad the gentleman did. I would like to have him tell us about it sometime. I am simply trying to find out what this union is doing.

Mr. BURTON. I was there for five days attending the sessions, and, I may say to the gentleman, without any official sanction from this Government, and I took pleasure in paying my own expenses and conducting myself in my own independent way as an American citizen.

Mr. KING. Oh, I know the gentleman would do that. Was there any particular meeting at Geneva of this Interparliamentary Union to which we are contributing $4,000? Did they have any meetings?

Mr. BURTON. No.

Mr. KING. Did the gentleman see the secretary or visit his office?

Mr. BURTON. Oh, yes; I saw the secretary, if that is what the gentleman desires to know.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salary of one member of the permanent committee of the International Institute of Agriculture for the calendar year 1924, $5,000.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Will the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. EVANS] please tell me who is the American member of this international conference on agriculture?

Mr. EVANS. I can not give that information.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. What are his duties? The gentleman is a distinguished representative of an agricultural State, and I would be glad to have him tell us what the duties of this international gentleman are.

Mr. EVANS. I can give the gentleman more detailed information as to the purpose for which the appropriation is made.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. What does he do during the year?

Mr. EVANS. It is for the purpose of collecting from all countries agricultural statistics as to supply, demand, methods of agriculture, and any information which might be of interest. When collated and gathered together that information is sent to the various countries, and we get ours now through the Department of Agriculture. It is sent to the agricultural constituencies through reports from the agricultural departments.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Does this commissioner reside here or in Rome?

Mr. EVANS. I said I do not know who the commissioner is. He is there at times. The situation with reference to this, and to the increase in the appropriation, which perhaps is the reason the gentleman is making his inquiry, is this: The King of Italy furnishes the place, the residence of this bureau, and out of his private funds he furnished a large portion of the expenses of conducting its operations. During the war his finances got into such condition that he could not longer continue to make the contributions he formerly made, and hence there was necessity to increase the amount given by the contributing countries. It was because of that that our contribution was increased.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. KING. Is it not a fact that Doctor Lubin, who had charge of this bureau, is now dead?

Mr. EVANS. It is. He was the one who instituted it.

Mr. KING. He was the one for whom the appropriation was really made.

Mr. EVANS. It was through his activity. He was the founder of the bureau.

Mr. KING. He was the founder of the bureau and the founder of the appropriation.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. In addition to the $5,000 salary, we are also providing in the preceding paragraph $19,000 for maintaining in Rome this particular bureau, which we designate as in the interest of the farmers. This is one continual appropriation, year after another. Will the gentleman tell me a single benefit that he can think of that the ordinary American farmer has ever derived from this appropriation?

Mr. EVANS. I do not know that I can answer the gentleman's question to his satisfaction. During the time that this item was under consideration a year ago we were in touch with and secured information from our Agricultural Department, and the Assistant Secretary very strongly advised the continuance of the item. I have explained in answer to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] the reason for the increase.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; we caught that reason.

Mr. EVANS. The information for which the gentleman asks touches anything which is of interest to agriculturalists in this country, such as plant diseases.

Mr. BLANTON. I was not speaking of theoretical agriculture; I was speaking of the practical, ordinary, everyday farmer in the gentleman's district and in mine. The gentleman has admitted that the most of this increase as is embraced in this $19,000 item is spent for quarters?

Mr. EVANS. No.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, for what is it spent besides quarters?

Mr. EVANS. No; none to quarters.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I misunderstood the language of the gentleman. He said the King of Italy had been furnishing these quarters out of his own finances, but his finances became involved during the war and he was no longer able to furnish them.

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman is mistaken or else I did not correctly state the facts.

Mr. BLANTON. That is in substance the language of the gentleman. If he does not mean to convey that idea——

Mr. EVANS. What I attempted to say was this: That the King of Italy gave quarters——

Mr. BLANTON. Out of his own finances.

Mr. EVANS. Not out of his own finances, but gave quarters, and then out of his own finances he contributed to the extent of very largely covering the entire expense of the organization.

Mr. BLANTON. That is practically what I said.

Mr. EVANS. He is still giving quarters, but the expense of the organization he can not now maintain for the reasons which I stated.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, get down to the main question. The gentleman is a member of the committee and he should have more information about the matter than anybody else, and if he is unable to give one single benefit that the ordinary farmer in his district and in mine has ever derived from this annual appropriation, does he not think that instead of increasing it to $19,000 for the general fund and $5,000 for the salary that we ought to stop it all in the interest of the American farmer?

Mr. EVANS. But I did not say what the gentleman says I said. I did not say I could not give the information.

Mr. BLANTON. That is what I understood the gentleman——

Mr. EVANS. No; the gentleman from Texas, when I tried to give the information, stopped me.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, now, I will suspend and yield the balance of my time to the gentleman, in which I would like for him to give one single practical benefit which the ordinary farmer in his district or mine has ever received from this appropriation for this bureau in Rome. I will yield to the gentleman to answer that question in my time.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will answer it.

Mr. BLANTON. I want the gentleman from Nebraska, in charge of the bill, to answer it if he can.

Mr. EVANS. There is gathered from all countries of the world which participate in this bureau information as to plant diseases, plant insects, and the various things which affect the growing of crops. That information is then transmitted to this country and through our Department of Agriculture it is made available to the individual farmer. That is what I meant to say to the gentleman when he stopped me and told me he wanted something practical. That seems to me to be practical.

Mr. BLANTON. There is no practical farmer in my district who has ever received one single benefit from this information which comes from this office in Rome. He does receive some valuable information from the Agricultural Department about the growing of crops in this country. If the gentleman can find a single farmer in his district who has received any practical benefit from this bureau in Rome I would like to know it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from Texas I would say this, that the hearings show that a considerable part of this fund is expended in the gathering of statistics. The gentleman from Texas says these statistics do not reach the farmer. The hearings show also those statistics, when gathered, are disseminated through the bulletins of the Department of Agriculture. Now the gentleman will readily concede that there is no literature gives as great benefit to the farmer of this country as the bulletins of the Department of Agriculture, which he uses and every other Member of this House uses by the thousands for distribution and which they find of enormous benefit, and the statistics gathered in this way are disseminated through those bulletins. Let me illustrate in a simple way.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Not at the moment. I live in a very great fruit region, one of the greatest fruit regions in the world. We could not be raising any fruit to-day except by the gathering of such statistics as are gathered abroad under this appropriation. Crop and fruit diseases, as a member of the committee has said, have ravaged the European countries for years. The experts there study them and treat them and the diseases are eradicated, or the pest, whatever it may be, like the brown-tailed moth, are exterminated; diseases of wheat, diseases of cotton, in Egypt, for instance, are studied and combated abroad, where they originate, and the remedies are transmitted to this country. The man who says we derive no benefit from the study of these problems in foreign countries, from the study of diseases which originate there and which are combated there and which they learn by experience how to successfully treat, whereas they might for years be infecting our crops, lessening our crops and making our farmers less prosperous, has not studied the situation, for all those things are of enormous benefit. This small appropriation of $19,000 is insignificant in comparison with the very great advantages that are derived from its expenditure.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes; surely.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the gentleman this question, if he does not think that $24,000 a year is a high price to pay for the particular information that comes from Rome to our Department of Agriculture?

Mr. DEMPSEY. No. I think it is a very small sum; and I say, in answer to the gentleman, that it does not mean that the information comes from Rome alone; it means also that that information is gathered from all Europe and all Asia; that Rome is but the central point and the very point to gain information, for instance, as to the cotton trouble in Egypt. It is the central point to gain information from all southern Europe, and it is the central point to gain information from Germany and France; and then that information, gathered in these various places and forwarded to the central point, is sent here.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I understand that this bureau also gathers information concerning the pink boll worm, and that it gives our Agricultural Department information in regard to it?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes. I understand that is the fact, and it simply puts you four or five years forward in the way of combating a plant disease, and instead of our being obliged to find out how to fight the disease for ourselves the information as to the remedy is gathered abroad and sent here.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. One important thing, it seems to me, is the amount of crop production each year. I wondered if this bureau furnishes any statistics as to the amount of crop production and the marketing of crops.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The hearings show that that is true. If the gentleman will turn to page 63 of the hearings he will find the following:

Mr. CARR. As I understand, it benefits us, in the first place, in this way: That we get uniform statistics of agriculture from all over the world through membership in this institute, which we would not get if we were not members; because, then, all of the Governments would publish their statistics in any way they chose, and there would be no place in which statistics could be brought together and made comparable; and statistics of agriculture in various countries which are not comparable are not of any value in marketing American products abroad.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Is this information furnished both by wire and by letter?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes; in both ways. When it is important that it be furnished immediately it is furnished by wire, and when it is not so important that it reach here at once it comes through the slower process of the mail.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES SECTION OF THE INTER-AMERICAN HIGH COMMISSION.

To defray the actual and necessary expenses on the part of the United States section of the Inter-American High Commission, $15,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. KETCHAM. I do so for the purpose of asking the chairman a question. Referring to the item in the bill, "Arbitration of outstanding pecuniary claims," on page 19, I notice this in the hearings, that the representative of the department testified in the hearing that there was expended only $2,500 out of the appropriation of $55,000 for the year 1922, and earlier in the testimony he states that they will be able to expend all of the appropriation for 1923. He makes no statement with reference to the unexpended balance of $52,500 appropriated for the year 1922. With that in mind, does not the gentleman think we might make a saving of practically the entire amount for 1924?

Mr. EVANS. That lapses. It can not be used, if not used for the year for which it is appropriated. And if it will enable the gentleman to understand any better, I will say that there was no action during the year in question.

Mr. KETCHAM. That is shown in the hearings?

Mr. EVANS. Yes. That is shown in the hearings, and that is the reason why the money has not been expended. But there has been a commissioner representing the United States appointed, and they are now at work presenting cases.

Mr. KETCHAM. Then I understand that of this appropriation for 1922, $52,500 has been covered into the Treasury.

Mr. EVANS. It has been covered into the Treasury.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I wish to call attention to a statement that was made yesterday by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] and also to a statement made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] as to the proposed amendment to the Constitution with reference to tax-exempt securities.

The gentleman from Iowa made the statement that if the amendment were adopted it would not affect farm loan bonds that are hereafter issued, in so far as taxes are concerned. If I understood the gentleman from Kansas correctly, he made in effect the same statement. In the meantime I sent for a copy of the proposed amendment, which was introduced by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], and which I suppose is in the very form in which it would probably be adopted.

Now, it is true that at the present time Congress may tax or not tax these bonds, but they are not subject to taxation by the States at the present time. Also, so long as Congress leaves the law as it is at present, the bonds that are issued are never taxable after they are issued. This amendment provides in the first section—

The United States shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes on securities after ratification of this article by or under the authority of any State, but without discrimination against income derived from other States or other securities.

Then the second section provides that—

Each State shall have the power to lay and collect taxes on the income derived by its residents from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of the United States.

In other words, if that amendment is adopted—and it is pursuant to the declared statement of the President—every bond issued by the Federal farm loan system after the adoption of that article will be subject to taxation by the State in which the citizen happens to live who owns that bond, and of course whether the tax is levied at the time of the issuance or not, the man who is buying the bond will want to raise the interest rate enough, or discount his bond enough, to enable him to be sure that the tax is paid by the borrower and not by the lender.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I supposed under the provisions of that amendment the State would have the same right to levy tax on any Government bond.

Mr. JONES of Texas. They have the right, specifically stated, to levy an income tax on any bonds that are held by people in that State; and, of course, when a man goes to buy one of these farm loan bonds he will know that they are subject to taxation at any time hereafter that any State sees fit to tax them. Therefore he will not pay as much for the bond, and as a consequence the bond will have to bear a higher rate of interest, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. TINCHER. I will state this. I hope the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], the author of the resolution, will get together on the meaning of the resolution.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I do not think anyone can gainsay that construction. It seems to me as clear as the English language can state it. This resolution in the final section provides that—

Each State shall have the power to lay and collect taxes on income derived by its residents from securities issued after the ratification of this article by and under the authority of the United States.

Are not the farm loan bonds issued by and under the authority of the United States? Certainly they are.

Mr. TINCHER. The only point I made was that it would not change the status, so far as the Federal Government was concerned. I never thought of anyone wanting to allow the States to tax farm loan bonds.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I am glad to hear the gentleman state that. But the position stated by the gentleman from Kansas is not the position stated by the President of the United States, and it is not in accordance with the provisions of the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, in taking the floor yesterday I had no idea in the world of entering into a controversy over the amendment to the Constitution suggested by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], only it was clear to my mind at the time the controversy came up here that the constitutional amendment would not change the status of the Federal farm loan bonds in so far as the Government was concerned, because I knew we had the power at this time to tax the bonds if the Congress wanted to do so.

I have asked permission to proceed out of order this morning for another reason.

On yesterday while the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] was discussing the matter raised by the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER] I suggested to him that Mr. Magon, whom he was then talking about, had had the charity of this Government extended to him in the form of a prison by Government officials instead of deporting him. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], who is very careful of the RECORD, took the liberty of suggesting to the House that I did not know what I was talking about, and that there had been no order of deportation. I do not want to be put in the attitude of stating anything that I do not know about, and I knew the wisdom of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] and naturally felt some alarm.

Mr. Magon was an anarchist. He said himself in response to a question at the time of his trial: "I am a communist-anarchist." Later in his testimony he described what a communist is and what an anarchist is. To make a long story short, he admitted that he was against government and that where government interfered with him he believed in destroying government by force. Mr. Magon was ordered deported from the United States, and I want to read that order:

From the evidence of record in this case I find that Enrique Flores Magon is an alien, namely, a citizen of Mexico.

That he has been found in the United States in violation of the immigration act of October 16, 1918, in that he is a member of or affiliated with an organization that entertains a belief in the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States; that he is a member of or affiliated with an organization that advocated the overthrow by force or violence of all forms of law; that he is a member of or affiliated with an organization that teaches the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States; that he is a member of or affiliated with an organization that teaches opposition to all organized government; and that he is a member of or affiliated with an organization that entertains opposition to all organized government, and that he is an alien anarchist.

I therefore recommend that he be deported.

WARREN E. LONG, Immigration Inspector.

It was later that Mr. Post held up the deportation, stating that he would not deport Mr. Magon but would leave him in the prison, as his life would be taken if he was deported to Mexico. I do not make this correction and contribution to the facts of history for the enlightment of most Members of the House, but as my friend from California [Mr. RAKER] is a bundle of wisdom itself, seeming to be in possession of all the information in the world save and except this one little thing, I want to put this in the RECORD so that he may embody 100 per cent wisdom.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] does not seem to be present in the Hall.

Mr. TINCHER. I thought he was here. He was here a moment ago.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I understood the gentleman from Kansas to say that the gentleman from California had stated that no order of deportation had been entered.

Mr. TINCHER. The gentleman from California simply stated that he wanted to keep the record straight, and made a statement which would be convincing to all Members of Congress of what I said was false because it could not be true. I know exactly what he said.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the RECORD on page 208 shows that Mr. Raker's statement was as follows:

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that under the law, as it stands to-day, when a man is convicted he can not be deported until after his sentence is carried out?

Mr. TINCHER. He wanted to keep the RECORD straight, and I wish to say that I am in sympathy with the gentleman from California. I am simply making this clear in order that he may be 100 per cent wisdom, because I am sure he did not think that they had ever ordered the deportation of Mr. Magon, and I know it is presumptuous on my part, whether I am familiar with the facts or not, to state anything that relates to the Committee on Immigration when the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is around.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas may proceed for one additional minute. Is these objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman from Kansas mind answering this question: In case a person is convicted and sentenced to imprisonment and is also ordered deported, would the gentleman from Kansas favor his deportation prior to the expiration of his prison sentence?

Mr. TINCHER. I was not talking about that phase of the matter.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I want to know what the gentleman thinks about that.

Mr. TINCHER. There had been an indignation meeting held here in Washington——

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Does the gentleman think it would be better to deport him first and let him serve his sentence later?

Mr. TINCHER. Not being on the Committee on Immigration, I would not presume to express an opinion on that. What I am trying to do is to square myself with that committee and not get into further trouble with them. I was attempting to suggest to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] that perhaps it was an act of charity on the part of the Government that they permitted this man Magon to die in prison instead of sending him to his own country where his life would have been taken. The controversy over Magon at the time was between the then Attorney General, Mr. A. Mitchell Palmer, and a man at the head of the Labor Department named Post. I happened to know all the facts in that particular case, because I attended and was interested in the hearing.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Knowing the facts, would the gentleman have deported Mr. Magon first and let him serve his sentence afterwards?

Mr. TINCHER. I think under the facts in that case, if they were ever going to deport him they would have to deport him instead of sentencing him to prison.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Would the gentleman favor deporting him first?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] had the last word, anyhow. [Laughter.]

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question with reference to the item on page 20 for the United States section of the Inter-American High Commission. This carries an appropriation of $15,000. I note in the hearings that there is considerable uncertainty as to the exact character of the work accomplished by this particular commission. For instance, in the hearings, page 220, this occurs:

Mr. HUSTED. Do you happen to know what they—

Referring to this commission—are working on at the present time?

Mr. CARR. No.

Mr. HUSTED. Or what they did last year?

Mr. CARR. No; I do not.

That indicates that there is a considerable degree of uncertainty. I want to ask whether or not there is a duplication of work in the Department of Commerce and the Pan American Union with these related subjects, so that this item might be omitted?

Mr. EVANS. No; Mr. Carr, to whom the gentleman from Michigan refers, stated to the committee that there was no duplication.

Mr. KETCHAM. Can the gentleman inform us what is the line of work which this commission carries on?

Mr. EVANS. Pages 108 and 109 of the hearings will give the gentleman the information he is looking for.

Mr. KETCHAM. Is it the judgment of the gentleman that the item is necessary?

Mr. EVANS. It is necessary and should be retained. It has been carried for years.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

PAYMENT TO THE GOVERNMENT OF COLOMBIA.

To enable the Secretary of State to pay to the Government of Colombia the second payment from the Government of the United States to the Republic of Colombia under article 2 of the treaty of April 6, 1914. $5,000,000.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making an observation. I do not remember just what the treaty with Colombia provides as to the payment.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman will find the information on page 71 of the hearings. He will find that the second payment is to be made within one year after the first payment, and that the first payment is in process of being made but has not been fully made.

Mr. DENISON. The facts which I want to call to the attention of Congress are these: If there was any way that we could strike the item out of the bill without violating our treaty with the Government of Colombia, I would be in favor of doing so. I would do so for this reason: Before the Panama revolution the Government of Colombia had a great many troops stationed on the Isthmus of Panama, which at that time was a part of the Colombian Republic. The Colombian Government had no money with which to pay her own troops, and so she issued scrip, and the local parties in Panama cashed that scrip in order to enable the Colombian troops to be paid and remain there.

The result of it was that a great amount of Colombian scrip that had been used to pay the soldiers was cashed by the residents of Panama and a number of the banks there. At the time of the Panama revolution this scrip was held by the citizens and the banks, and members of the Colombian Republic who happened to be living on the Isthmus of Panama. After the Panama revolution Colombia repudiated these obligations and has refused until this time to pay the holders of this scrip any of the money which the Government owed them.

The result was that some of the banks in Panama were embarrassed and some of the citizens of Panama lost their fortunes because they had advanced money to cash this scrip issued by the Colombian Government to pay the troops.

We have agreed to pay the Republic of Colombia $25,000,000 to get them in good humor, on account of the revolution which led to the independence of the Republic of Panama. If I had been connected with the State Department or if I had been a Member of the United States Senate, I would have required that the Republic of Colombia meet her obligations to the citizens of Panama before our Government should pay them $25,000,000.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I think if the gentleman had been a Member of the other body he would not have voted for the treaty even with that proviso.

Mr. DENISON. I think I would not, but if I had voted for it I would have requested the Republic of Colombia to honor obligations to the citizens of Panama who were bankrupted by the repudiation of the Colombian Government. She refused to pay them simply because they resided in Panama, which revolted and won its independence. Now our Government is to pay $25,000,000 because of the supposed connection we had with the revolution, and it seems to me that out of the money we are going to pay to the Republic of Colombia, Colombia ought to pay her just obligations to these citizens of Panama who out of private funds advanced the money to pay the Colombian troops. I think the attention of the American Congress ought to be called to this situation, that the world may know of her repudiation of her just debts to the citizens of Panama. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL TRADE-MARK REGISTRATION BUREAU QUOTA OF UNITED STATES.

For the annual share of the United States for the expenses of the maintenance of the International Trade-Mark Registration Bureau at Habana, including salaries of the director and counselor, assistant director and counselor, clerks, translators, secretary to the director, stenographers and typewriters, messenger, watchmen, and laborers, rent of quarters, stationery and supplies, including the purchase of books, postage, traveling expenses, and the cost of printing the bulletin, $4,961.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 22, after line 25, insert: International Bureau of the Union for the protection of industrial property. For the share of the United States in the expense of conducting the International Bureau of the Union for the protection of industrial property at Berne, Switzerland, $1,700.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to the amendment.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, for the information of the committee I will say that this appropriation has heretofore been carried in the appropriations for the Interior Department under the Patent Office division. It is a treaty obligation that has been transferred to this appropriation bill because the Secretary of State, the Patent Office, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations have thought, and all concede, that this is the proper place. It is the same appropriation that was carried in the other bill and is not a new appropriation.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does it relate to the international patent office?

Mr. EVANS. It is a clearing house for patent matters.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. And trade-marks?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Were all of these international agencies described in the last two or three pages, as well as the one the gentleman has mentioned, created by treaty?

Mr. EVANS. Not all of them, but nearly all. A statement was made with respect to those that were not treaty obligations at the time the item was reached in the reading of the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Are they all functioning in a practical way?

Mr. EVANS. So far as I know, each and all of them is. This is true of some of these activities. For a time they may not function because the occasion for their functioning is not present, but, take it year by year, all of them are performing a work deemed valuable by the State Department or by the department for which they function.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill, and it is not authorized by any treaty agreement. The Chair will find, I think, that a point of order has heretofore been made against this item when it appeared in another appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Nebraska on the point of order.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, this is under a treaty concluded at Paris on March 20, 1883, adhesion to which was advised by the Senate on March 2, 1887; ratified by the President March 29, 1887; accession to Swiss Confederation announced May 20, 1887; and proclaimed June 11, 1887; and I read from article 13 of the treaty, found on page 1939 of Senate Document No. 48:

An international office shall be organized under the title "International Bureau of the Union for the Protection of Industrial Property." This bureau, the cost of which shall be supported by the Governments of all contracting parties, shall be placed under the high authority of the superior administration of the Swiss Confederation, and shall work under its supervision. Its powers shall be determined by common accord between the States of the union.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the date of that treaty?

Mr. EVANS. It was concluded in 1883—March 20.

The CHAIRMAN. Signed by whom?

Mr. EVANS. By His Majesty the King of the Belgians, His Majesty the Emperor of Brazil, His Majesty the King of Spain, the President of the French Republic, the President of the Republic of Guatemala, His Majesty the King of Italy, His Majesty the King of the Netherlands, His Majesty the King of Portugal, the President of the Republic of San Salvador, the King of Serbia, the Federal Council of the Swiss Confederation——

The CHAIRMAN. Is the United States a signatory power?

Mr. BLANTON. His Majesty the United States does not seem to be a subscribing party.

Mr. EVANS. In order that we may save time, I ask unanimous consent that this may be passed until we can discover the signature.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, it can be brought up later.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to pass this section. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object, because I think it is a matter that ought to be settled now.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request. It is signed for the United States of America by E. Byrd Grubb.

Mr. BLANTON. And was ratified when?

Mr. EVANS. In executive session, March 2, 1887. Article XVII provides:

SECTION 18.

The States that have not taken part in the present convention shall be admitted to adhere to the same upon their application.

This adhesion shall be notified through the diplomatic channel to the Government of the Swiss Confederation and by the latter to all the others.

It shall convey, of full right, accession to all the clauses and admission to all the advantages stipulated by the present convention.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Before leaving the paragraph in regard to the International Trade-Mark Registration Bureau I wish to ask the gentleman from Nebraska a question. I note that the quota of the United States, or at least the appropriation for it, has been reduced from something like $10,000 to something less than $5,000. I know that this trade-mark registration bureau is a very important one for the business of this country, and I should not like to see it hampered in any way by lack of appropriations on the part of the United States.

Mr. EVANS. The reason for the reduction of the appropriation is because the activities of the bureau have nearly become self-supporting, and the amount of the appropriation is all that is asked for by the State Department and awarded by the Budget.

As the gentleman probably knows, when this bureau was originally created it came out of one of those many activities in which the Pan American Union engages, and this one has become nearly self-supporting. There is no intention or desire to cripple the bureau.

Mr. TILSON. I am very glad to hear the gentleman say so, because from my own knowledge I can say that this is one of the very important activities that we appropriate for.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will turn to page 74 of the hearings he will see that in 1919 we appropriated $56,000 for this same purpose.

Mr. TILSON. That appropriation was in connection with securing a place of abode for this bureau in Habana.

Mr. DEMPSEY. And they say that the fees that they receive are rapidly bringing the matter to a point where it will become totally self-supporting.

Mr. TILSON. It undoubtedly will, and this fact indicates the extent to which it is used by American citizens as well as any others who wish to avail themselves of the privilege.

Mr. DEMPSEY. It gives protection for a certain limited time.

Mr. TILSON. Without something of this kind we stand to lose a great deal by the taking over of our trade-marks without receiving any equivalent for them.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LONGWORTH having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2934. An act to provide for the issuance to John W. Stanton by the Secretary of the Interior of patent to certain land, upon payment therefor at the rate of $1.25 per acre.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 11040) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the sale of the marine hospital reservation in Cleveland, Ohio," approved July 26, 1916.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4100. An act to amend section 9 of the trading with the enemy act, as amended.

DEPARTMENTS OF STATE AND JUSTICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For paying for the keeping, feeding, and transportation of prisoners in China and Turkey and of those declared insane by the United States Court for China, $5,600;

For rent of prison for American convicts in Smyrna, Turkey, and for wages of keepers of the same, $1,000;

For rent of prison for American convicts in Constantinople, Turkey, and for wages of keepers of the same, $1,000;

Total, $15,000.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Will the gentleman in charge of the bill inform me what amount is paid for rent of a prison in Constantinople? Are there special cells set aside for American convicts, and who are the keepers?

Mr. EVANS. I do not know except that that is extraterritorial, and I presume the court authority would handle it in that way.

Mr. WATSON. I ask because an American in whom I am interested was a convict in Constantinople. He wrote me he was in an English prison, that he had plenty of food, the keepers were kind, but he wanted to be transferred to America. I wanted to know whether there is a special prison set aside for American convicts, and whether other convicts are placed with them, and how the whole matter is conducted.

Mr. EVANS. Well, I am unable to advise the gentleman as to what the facts are other than what the gentleman knows himself, namely, that we have extraterritorial jurisdiction there, and it would be under the control of the American official and those who had charge of the convicts.

Mr. WATSON. I suppose the keepers are not Americans?

Mr. EVANS. Of course, if we have rented quarters, they would be English keepers, unless we secured the privilege of also having one of our own at that place. That I do not know.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Does the gentleman think we could get very many keepers at $1,000 a year?

Mr. WATSON. I do not know; that is the reason I asked the question. The wages in Turkey are not quite so high as in America, as the gentleman well knows. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message in writing from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, was received.

DEPARTMENTS OF STATE AND JUSTICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Enforcement of antitrust laws: For the enforcement of antitrust laws, including not exceeding $10,000 for clerical services and not exceeding $40,000 for compensation of attorneys at the seat of government, $200,000.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to inquire about the section just passed. I was on my feet when it was read. If the chairman of the committee will permit——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield for that purpose?

Mr. BLACK. I understood the gentleman's amendment to apply to the paragraph in reference to the enforcement of antitrust laws. I wanted to make an inquiry of the paragraph preceding.

Mr. DENISON. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, in lines 9, 10, 11, and 12, on page 30 of the bill, is included an appropriation for per diem in lieu of subsistence. Now, the regular per diem rate is not to exceed $4 per diem, as I understand, and I wanted to inquire if the following language, "when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914," is a restriction so that the per diem allowance of this sum will not exceed $4?

Mr. EVANS. It is the act which fixes the limit at $4.

Mr. BLACK. I had not time to examine the act, but I thought probably that was the case. That was the information I desired.

Mr. EVANS. That is correct.

Mr. BLACK. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 31, line 7, after the figures "$200,000," strike out the period, insert a colon and the following words: "Provided, however, That no part of this money shall be spent in the prosecution of any organization or individual for entering into any combination or agreement having in view the increasing of wages, shortening of hours, or bettering the conditions of labor, or for any act done in furtherance thereof not in itself unlawful: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the prosecution of producers of farm products and the associations of farmers who cooperate and organize in an effort to and for the purpose to obtain and maintain a fair and reasonable price for their products."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment that it is legislation unauthorized by law on an appropriation bill.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, that is a provision that is carried in the current appropriation law, and it was also carried in the law last year and the year before, if I remember correctly. It was carried in several appropriation bills, and points of order have always been made against it, I think by the same gentleman, or at least by some gentleman, and the points of order have always been overruled and the amendment sustained as proper, being a limitation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman allow the Chair to ask the gentleman from Illinois, Is this exactly in the words of the former act?

Mr. DENISON. It is unless the stenographer made an error, and I compared it very carefully.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas on the proposition.

Mr. BLANTON. I submit that the matter is legislation, and while the gentleman from Illinois is correct in stating it has been ruled on once before, and ruled adversely, yet the ruling of that particular Chairman was never passed upon by the House on appeal and did not become the ruling of the committee. Sometimes one Chairman makes a ruling and another Chairman of just as much parliamentary acumen changes the decision by making a contrary ruling. I submit it to this particular Chairman.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to state my own rule is not to vote for any amendment that brings in legislation upon an appropriation bill, and that is the rule I am going to follow. But this is not legislation. In making an appropriation we can place any limitation upon the money to be appropriated. This does not change the existing law, but is simply a limitation upon this appropriation.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will state for the information of the Chair that this limitation has been carried on this appropriation bill providing appropriations for the Department of Justice for the past 10 years. The point of order has been repeatedly raised against it, and, as far as I recollect, the Chair never held this limitation is legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to follow the rulings that have been made in the past. The Chair distinctly remembers this point being up several times. Last year the same matter was up. It is plainly a limitation, and as such is surely authorized by the rules of the House. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Investigation and prosecution of war frauds: For the investigation and prosecution of alleged frauds, either civil or criminal, or other crimes or offenses against the United States, growing out of or arising in connection with the preparation for or prosecution of the late war, including the institution and prosecution of suits for the recovery of moneys which contain no element of fraud but arose incident to the investigation of alleged frauds, to be available for the employment of counsel and other assistants, rent, and all other purposes in connection therewith, whether in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, including not to exceed $10,000 for communication service, the purchase of furniture, law books, books of reference, and other necessary equipment and supplies at the seat of government, $500,000, to be expended in the discretion of the Attorney General: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia if suitable space is provided by the Public Buildings Commission: Provided further, That not more than one person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $10,000 per annum.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, there was some discussion yesterday with reference to the salaries that were being paid under this appropriation. The hearings and the discussion on yesterday disclosed that about 30 attorneys were employed, 9 of whom receive $10,000 each and the others $7,500 or a lower sum. It was also stated that the chief accountant under this appropriation receives a salary of $18,000 a year. There is no statement in the hearings showing just how many assistant accountants there are. I do find a statement in the hearings showing that there are some 20 receiving salaries ranging from $7,500 down. The hearings fail to show just how many accountants were employed, just how many on the regular roll, unless we take the 20 names to be the number on the regular roll, and also how many special accountants are employed.

I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if he can tell us how many special accountants are employed under this appropriation?

Mr. EVANS. There is a director, whom the gentleman has already mentioned. Then there are five ranging from $7,500 to $4,200. There is one engineer accountant at $4,000. There are 14 accountants ranging from $1,680 to $3,600. The reason those facts were not included in the hearings is because they were expressed in the estimates attached to the committee estimate. They are in the Budget, however, so that they are available to the Members of Congress.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Is that the entire permanent force employed under this appropriation?

Mr. EVANS. That is a fact. Now, there is an accounting service other than that, of which I do not know the exact amount. It is variable. But this is the permanent force which I have given to the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now, in addition to that force, is it not a fact that quite a number of accountants are specially employed at quite large sums per diem to investigate different cases?

Mr. EVANS. That is possible for a few days, if occasion arose to need them, but not as a rule.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Take the case of the Lincoln Motors Co. Can the gentleman tell us how long that investigation has been going on with reference to the books and accounts of that company?

Mr. EVANS. As I understand, that matter has been concluded.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The hearings suggest that it has been about concluded.

Mr. EVANS. It states that the preparation of the case is about concluded. But I understood the accounting work had been concluded.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No. I think if the gentleman will examine the hearings he will find that Mr. Cameron, this $18,000 accountant, stated that the accounting was practically concluded. Can the gentleman tell the committee how long the investigation has been going on?

Mr. EVANS. I can not say.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have been informed on the very best of authority, and I wanted to ask the gentleman for information in regard to it, that an accountant was employed under this appropriation at $50 a day, and that he had a number—I do not know just how many—of junior accountants or assistants, to whom he was paying $25 a day, and that he employed these junior accountants through firms which paid the junior accountants only $200 a month, and that the firm furnishing these junior accountants drew the difference between $200 a month and $25 a day.

Mr. EVANS. I can not give the gentleman either a confirmation or denial of that statement. I do not know.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now does not the gentleman think that an investigation ought to be made to ascertain whether or not that is true, because if it is true I am sure the gentleman will agree that it is an outrage upon the Government and upon the Treasury.

Mr. EVANS. There is no question about that.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; I yield.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Do I understand the gentleman to say that there was one accountant that received $18,000 a year?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes. That was the information contained in the hearings, that one accountant receives $18,000 a year.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Is that from a direct appropriation, or is it out of a lump-sum appropriation?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, may I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is paid out of a lump sum, because there is no limitation on these lump sums as to what amount shall be paid.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Does the gentleman know who that is?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is a Mr. Cameron, as appears in the hearings. I do not know him personally. I think the hearings disclose, according to his testimony, the fact that he has been a certified accountant since 1915.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. At that figure?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; not at that figure. He has been employed for the last few months under that appropriation, but he has had an experience of six or seven years. Yet under this appropriation of $500,000, without any limitation as to salary, those in charge of its administration have put him on the roll of the Government at $18,000 a year.

Now, this fact and the other fact that I have stated, if my information is correct—that accountants were employed in the Lincoln Motors Co. investigation at $50 a day, and that the chief accountant employed a number of junior accountants at $25 a day, while as a matter of fact they only drew $200 per month from the firm which they represent, the firm receiving the difference between $200 a month and $25 a day—it seems to me is the best argument that could be offered against Congress appropriating these immense lump sums and leaving to the officials the right to fix the salaries to be paid thereunder. Because everyone must agree that when we consider the salaries which are paid to attorneys and other experts of this Government it is a perfect outrage to pay an accountant $18,000 per year. Why, the Chief Justice gets only $14,500 a year. The members of the Supreme Court get only $14,000. Cabinet members get only $12,000 a year. The Vice President of the United States and the Speaker of this House get only $12,000 a year. The Comptroller General, the chief accountant of the Government, gets $10,000. Yet here we have a certified public accountant of only six or seven years' experience as such receiving $18,000 out of this lump sum of $500,000.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DEMPSEY. In an effort to itemize this particular appropriation would you not encounter this difficulty: The hearings show that at least $100,000,000 is involved in these war-fraud cases. Now, the gentleman is an attorney. Here are these cases, which depend unquestionably upon the closest kind of an investigation both from the accounting and the law standpoints. How can you anticipate just what you are going to find it is necessary to do in a lawsuit? Because that is what you have to do. While generally the gentleman is undoubtedly correct that you should specify your items just so far as it is possible to do so, would that be possible in a variety of lawsuits, each of which involves endless details in the two particulars to which I have referred?

I ask the gentleman in all good faith and in all good nature, is it quite fair to compare the salary of an accountant with the other salaries which have been suggested? Take, for instance, the Chief Justice of the United States. He receives not only a small stated sum per year but he holds one of the most honorable positions in the world, and the honor goes to his compensation as well as the salary.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Let us eliminate the Supreme Court. Does not the gentleman think it is entirely fair to compare the salary paid to the chief accountant who is investigating the books and accounts of these companies with the salaries which are paid to special attorneys who are brought in for the purpose of looking after the legal side of the case?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think it is; and yet my own experience as a lawyer has been that you can not get the services of a skillful, competent accountant for less than $50 a day. It seems to me you would want the very highest grade accountant here.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think there is any justification for paying the chief accountant practically twice the sum that is paid to the attorneys who are specially employed and who have to look after the legal side?

Mr. DEMPSEY. While I agree that the comparison is not fair, I have found that you can not get an accountant competent to handle such cases for less than $50 a day. I quite agree with the gentleman that if there has been a loading of the cost here, if somebody has acted as a contractor and brought in a lot of men and has been making double the amount that they make, that should be investigated. But, on the other hand, as to the payment of a high sum to a specially skilled man, I think he would be the cheapest man whom you could possibly secure, if he is really skilled.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman think that the Department of Justice, having charge of this matter, having charge of the salaries paid to the accountants, ought to give some attention to the amounts paid to these junior accountants?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think so.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If my information is correct—and it comes from a very high source—junior accountants were employed in this Lincoln Motors case, and their firms were paid $25 a day for their services, whereas the junior accountants who actually did the work received only $200 a month from the firm.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I quite agree with the gentleman that that should be investigated.

Mr. EVANS. I wish to give to the Committee of the Whole and to the gentleman from Tennessee the information which the committee has, which is this, that there are a small number of highly paid accountants, but those accountants are supervising others who receive much lower salaries. For instance, those who simply make additions and checkings are not paid high rates at all, and our information is that it is the individual accountants who are paid, not their employers; but I can not answer the gentleman's statement positively about that, and hence I do not make the statement positively. Our information, obtained not only in the hearings but in conversation, is that there has been an attempt on the part of Mr. Cameron to make these investigations just as cheaply as they can possibly be made and at the same time get a high grade of service.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. As I recall the hearings, Mr. Cameron says that with reference to his permanent force, but he makes no statement with reference to these special accountants who are employed in these particular cases like the Lincoln Motors case; and, so far as I know—I have no information on the subject—there may be similar payments with reference to the investigation of other important cases pending.

Mr. EVANS. As I understand it, all the work in the Lincoln Motors case was done by those permanently employed.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The hearings do not disclose that.

Mr. EVANS. The additional question came up as to whether there were other motor cases which were similar to the Lincoln Motors case. I think there are some 14 or 15 in all in which the investigations will run along similar lines, and I think in a general statement he said that all of these investigations were made in the manner I have indicated.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Let me make a suggestion to the gentleman. I should also like the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee for a moment. Does not the gentleman from Tennessee think it is quite possible that the Government finds that in assembling a force of minor accountants it is unable to get them individually, and can only secure a supply of them through the large accounting firms in the country, and that if an attempt was made to get these minor accountants individually there would be delay, and it might be practically impossible to assemble them?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say this to the gentleman from New York, that while that may be true, if there are accounting firms who have a monopoly upon junior accountants to the extent that they can pay them only $200 a month and at the same time force the United States Government to pay $25 a day for their use, it seems to me that they are in the class of the very profiteers whom we are seeking to prosecute and send to jail.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Probably the difference is too large, but I think undoubtedly the explanation is what I have suggested to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Congress made an appropriation of $500,000 last May for the purpose described in this particular provision. Now, there is proposed an additional appropriation for the next fiscal year of a similar amount of $500,000. These are very large lump-sum appropriations. The difficulty I have in reading the hearings is to determine how the money is being spent. More or less information is given but not definite and detailed information. I think that information ought to have been had and ought to be furnished here. I do not mean to say that there is an improper expenditure, but I do mean to say that we ought to know what the expenditure is and on what account. If the gentleman has the information I speak of we at least are not in possession of it, and I believe that he will agree that it is desirable that we should have it. I think when great lump-sum appropriations are made there should be a requirement at the time they are made that reports shall be presented somewhere from which it can be known how they are expended, and without such information we may acquiesce in some irregularity and some perversion that was not contemplated when the appropriations were enacted.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I will give the information, if I understand the inquiry, which was in the possession of the committee when the bill was presented. As I have alrealy indicated, there is a director at $18,000; there are 5 accountants with a salary varying from $7,500 to $4,200; 1 at $4,000; 14 with salaries from $1,680 to $3,600. There are 2 typists at $1,200, 9 special assistants to the Attorney General at $10,000; special assistants to the Attorney General with salaries varying from $7,500 to $25,000; 1 at $14,000, 1 at $20,000, 1 at $25,000, 1 at $24,000; 11 stenographers with salaries varying from $1,200 to $1,800; 1 chief file clerk at $1,800, 1 at $1,400; 2 special employees, 1 at $1,000, 1 at $900, and 1 messenger at $660. These are permanent salaries.

In addition to this the appropriation of special accountants employed temporarily, the number of which at this time I do not have, but the amount paid to these can be readily arrived at by figuring the salaries of the others which I have given. The supplies and materials amounted to $1,200. Communication required $1,300; traveling expenses, $44,000; transportation of things, $50; stenographic work, $400; photographs, $100; repairs, $250; special and miscellaneous current expenses, $500; furniture and fixtures, $2,000; educational and scientific equipment, $200; making a total of $500,000.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. KINCHELOE: Page 31, beginning at line 16, strike out the section.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment for the purpose of getting some information if I can. From the reading of the hearings starting on page 126 there is no doubt but what the Department of Justice went before the Budget Committee and asked for $750,000. There is no doubt further that the purpose of that was to either increase the salaries of these accountants and attorneys or to employ more attorneys and more accountants, and there is no doubt further from the hearings that they expect to have a deficit of $250,000 to come in later. I want to read a part of the hearings here.

Mr. TINKHAM. What did you recommend?

Mr. DOWNING. Fifty per cent increase in the cost of the attorney services, at least.

Mr. TINKHAM. What would that be a total of?

Mr. HARRIS. A total of $750,000.

Mr. DOWNING. A total of $750,000 for the entire section.

Mr. TINKHAM. So that you wanted $250,000 for attorneys for the entire section?

Mr. DOWNING. Oh, no, sir; $250,000 more for all the costs of the entire section.

Mr. TINKHAM. Will you tell me what the $250,000 would represent—in detail?

Mr. DOWNING. It would represent additional cost of attorneys and stenographic assistance, additional cost of accounting, additional expense for traveling expenses, additional expense for stationery, additional expense for everything that would accompany the increase in the force.

Mr. TINKHAM. Do you believe that if we only allow you the $500,000 which has been allowed you by the Bureau of the Budget you will incur a deficiency for 1924?

Mr. DOWNING. I do. I might add that this is the first opportunity I have ever had to estimate on these subjects, and my opinion is only worth so much.

Now, I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill did he get the impression from the hearings that this $500,000 is to go for an increased number of attorneys and an increased number of accountants and an increase in the number of the secretarial force, and so forth?

Mr. EVANS. No; I did not. I understood the $250,000 requested was to increase the number of attorneys and accountants and stenographers and to extend the scope of the investigation. As the gentleman knows, a great many things are crowding now for investigation, and they are all matters quite difficult to prepare. Five hundred thousand dollars, as I understand it, was to carry on practically the same organization that they now have in this division.

Mr. KINCHELOE. But Mr. Downing says that it represents an additional cost.

If you are not going to have an increase of attorneys and stenographers, but an additional cost, it can not mean anything but an increase in the salaries of the present force. Does the gentleman think this Department of Justice needs more than these attorneys already employed under the original appropriation?

Mr. EVANS. The opinion of the committee is evidenced by what they did in the making of the appropriation, in following the Budget recommendation, and I may say to the gentleman that the officer in charge of the Department of Justice touching these matters has stated that there will be no deficiency in any of these expenditures. While Mr. Downing said there would, he qualified it, as the gentleman has read, with the fact that it is his first experience, but Judge Holland stated that whatever was given would be expended, and the best work possible done, and that if more additional expenditures were made it would be presented through the Committee on Appropriations to the House.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I was wondering what the attitude of the gentleman would be if they came back later and wanted $250,000 extra, and the facts are that they have increased the number of attorneys and salaries.

Mr. EVANS. Not the number of attorneys and the salaries. The gentleman is wrong. The organization which was made under the $500,000 appropriation is continuing intact, but not being increased.

Mr. KINCHELOE. But I am talking about the $250,000 item. He says that it would represent additional cost of attorneys. Does that mean extra attorneys, or to increase the salaries of the present force?

Mr. EVANS. The $250,000 represented the additional cost, not the $500,000.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. TINKHAM asked him to tell him what the $250,000 would represent in detail, and his answer was that it would represent additional cost of attorneys, and so forth.

Mr. EVANS. The $250,000, if the gentleman will permit, is the excess over the $500,000.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Absolutely.

Mr. EVANS. Included within the $750,000.

Mr. KINCHELOE. And they wanted that for the purpose of either increasing the salaries of the attorneys, and so forth, they already have, or for employing additional attorneys, and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLACK: Page 32, line 10, after the word "annum," strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided further, That the Attorney General shall report to Congress on or before the first day of its regular session, December, 1923, how the amount appropriated in this paragraph has been expended, classifying the names of the persons to whom paid, and the amount paid to each. A similar report shall be made of the $500,000 appropriated at the second session of the Sixty-seventh Congress for the purposes named in this paragraph."

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman might as well make the point of order, because, of course, I do not care to make the amendment if it is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I have no objection to his language if he will make it so that it will not require the reporting of pay for services to detectives for secret work.

Mr. BLACK. I do not see any reason why he should not report the names of those.

Mr. DEMPSEY. What the gentleman has in mind is this: You are making a report perhaps of cases in progress and by reporting you might disclose some information which might seriously injure the chance of success in the litigation.

Mr. BLACK. I do want to modify the amendment because I intended that the report be made after the expenditure of the money. I ask unanimous consent that the figures "1924" be inserted in lieu of the figures "1923," because what I intended was to require the Attorney General to make a report to Congress after the money had been expended.

Mr. EVANS. If the gentleman will make it so that it will exclude the names of persons who are engaged in secret work, I have no objection to his amendment.

Mr. BLACK. I do not see any force in that suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman modifying his amendment in the manner indicated? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK: Page 32, line 10, after the word "annum," strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided, further, That the Attorney General shall report to Congress on or before the first day of its regular session, December, 1924, how the amount appropriated in the paragraph has been expended, classifying the names of the persons to whom paid, and the amount paid to each. A similar report shall be made of the $500,000 appropriated at the second session of the Sixty-seventh Congress for the purposes named in this paragraph."

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment as modified.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I would suggest that the changing of the date will not obviate the difficulty to which I directed attention. Lawsuits are slow things, and it may easily be possible that a case started now will not terminate by December, 1924. As I understand it, the committee does not want to object to any proper amendment. It seems to me that the amendment ought to be safeguarded in some such way as to state that what is required are expenses in cases which have been closed and in so far as is not incompatible with public policy in cases not yet concluded. I think words to that effect should be added to the amendment.

Mr. BLACK. I would say very frankly that if I could conceive how a report from the Attorney General of the way he has expended money could hamper the department in the prosecution of these cases, I would not offer the amendment, but I can not see how it will impair in the least the administration of justice.

Mr. EVANS. Of course, much of the work in the preparation of these cases is necessary in the investigation of the facts which have been concealed or are attempted to be concealed.

Mr. BLACK. That is true; but they do not do that in secret.

Mr. EVANS. The same man who is doing that work for the Government is not known to the defendant in the case, and they do not wish him to be known. He may be through with his case and go into another case. We are perfectly willing to have the Attorney General give the information as to the names of all persons except those who are investigating in the manner I have indicated, and the amount, but I do object and shall insist upon the point of order if the gentleman insists on having the names of those persons included, because it furnishes no information to him that is valuable, and it may furnish information to those against whom the cases are being prosecuted that to them will be invaluable.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I withdraw the request temporarily.

Mr. BLACK. Would it satisfy the gentleman's objection if the amendment be modified at the end of the amendment to add the following language, "except as to names of detectives employed under this appropriation."

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, will the gentleman from Texas be willing to have the qualification to his amendment so as to say "not incompatible with the public interest in cases not yet determined"?

Mr. BLACK. Well, if the gentleman wants to offer that amendment——

Mr. STAFFORD. I certainly shall offer the amendment if it gets by the point of order, and unless we can agree on something, in view of the statement of the gentleman in charge of the bill, conditions might arise where it might not be for the public interest to have a full disclosure of all employees paid out of this fund, and I think the gentleman will be perfectly warranted in pressing the point of order.

Mr. TILSON. This might arise: If you publish the names of the men who are active in one case which was closed would it not give information to some other party whom he might be investigating?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman from Texas has offered to modify it so as to except the name of detectives or special agents, so what possible information can be furnished to a defendant in any lawsuit by simply giving the name of the attorney and the amount paid him and the name of the defendant or anyone else?

Mr. STAFFORD. There may be conditions, I will say to the gentleman, where special agents are not detectives——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Special agents and detectives.

Mr. STAFFORD. What objection can there be to the language I have offered, "except when incompatible with the public interest"?

Mr. BLACK. That means it will go in the discretion of the Attorney General. Mr. Chairman, I ask at the end of the amendment to insert the language, "except the names of special agents and detectives."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment in the matter indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK: Page 32, line 10, after the word "annum," strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following language: "Provided further, That the Attorney General shall report to Congress on or before the first day of its regular session, December, 1924, how the amount appropriated in this paragraph has been expended, specifying the names of persons to whom paid and the amount paid to each. A similar report shall be made of the $500,000 appropriated at the second session of the Sixty-seventh Congress for the purposes named in this paragraph, except the names of special agents and detectives."

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. EVANS. As the record stands now there is a point of order to the amendment as reported.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no reservation of the point of order as modified.

Mr. EVANS. I reserve a point of order to the amendment as amended.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think I can offer an amendment which the gentleman will accept. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas on that point.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph in question appropriates $500,000 for the use of the Attorney General's Department in the investigation of the war-fraud cases. Now, my amendment seeks to have the Attorney General make a report to Congress on or before the first day of the regular session of the December Congress, 1924, of the amount spent, the name to whom paid, and the amount paid to each. Evidently that is a requirement which Congress has the power and the authority to make and would not be legislation upon an appropriation bill. The further provision requiring him to make a report of the amounts expended under a resolution of the second session of the Sixty-seventh Congress may be more questionable from the standpoint of the point of order. However, I do not believe that it would be such legislation as is prohibited by the general rule.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, may I make this observation. This is nothing more than an amendment in the nature of a limitation. Certainly Congress, when it makes an appropriation, has the power to say how the money shall be expended, and it further has the power, it seems to me, to provide that a report shall be made to Congress as to the manner in which it is expended. That is all this amendment proposes to do. It is simply in the nature of a limitation upon an appropriation bill. If Congress has the power to make an appropriation of $500,000 for the purpose, it has the power at the same time to say that the spending body shall make a report to Congress as to how it has been expended. It is not legislation. The House could by simple resolution which would not rise to the dignity of legislation direct a report as to the manner in which this money has been expended. It seems to me that it is clearly in order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that the proponent of this amendment would accept the suggestion of the committee, or that of the gentleman having the bill in charge, to modify his amendment so that this information would not be furnished when incompatible with the interests of the public service. In its present form it is open to very grave objection.

In discussing the point of order I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the following language. This is not a limitation in the first place. It is a positive direction to an executive head to perform some additional duties; and in confirmation of that position I read on page 363 of the Manual, construing Rule XXI, that relates to legislation on general appropriation bills:

Propositions to establish affirmative directions for executive officers (IV, 3854–3859), even in cases where they may have discretion under the law so to do (IV, 3853), or to take away an authority or discretion conferred by law (IV, 3862, 3863), are subject to the point of order.

Now, this amendment is a mandatory direction upon the executive head to make certain specific reports. This is not proposed even in the form of a limitation. The original law authorizing the doing of this work did not provide for any report. Under the original law the Attorney General was left free to utilize the funds as he sees fit. Now, we are placing a further restriction upon him as to the utilization of this fund, not in the form of a limitation, but of absolute, real direction.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Has not the Congress the right, in making an appropriation by way of a lump sum, to direct the official who has charge of the expenditure how it shall be expended?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If that be so, has not the Congress the same right to require a report from him to show whether or not he has complied with its will?

Mr. STAFFORD. It has the right to do that, but in the bill authorizing this work no such substantive direction was carried.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There was no bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes; there was a bill, which I hold in my hand, authorizing the beginning of this work. It was passed on May 22, 1922, in which $500,000 was authorized to be expended for 1923. Now, we are proposing to extend that work to the fiscal year 1924.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I just want to make this statement in connection with the pending point of order: The Attorney General under existing law, under the resolution to which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] referred, is authorized to prosecute all the war-fraud cases. The only purpose of that resolution, as I understand it, was to appropriate the $500,000 to enable him to do it effectually, and specifying for what purpose the $500,000 might be used. The language of the present paragraph is a repetition of that purpose.

Now, I will admit that if this $500,000 was an appropriation to carry out some function of the Department of Justice which had already been defined by law and the language of the amendment which I have offered sought to interfere with the Attorney General's discretion, or if we sought by the language of this amendment to give him an affirmative direction in the expenditure of this money contrary to existing law, it would be legislation. But we are not seeking to do that. The only purpose of the language of the amendment which I have offered is to require him to account to Congress for the way it is expended. We do not undertake to direct as to how he shall pay it. We do not undertake to direct as to what sums he shall pay. We do not undertake to direct him in any way except to require him to make a report to Congress; and if we have not that authority, then we have been transgressing it from time to time in practically every appropriation bill that has been passed by Congress.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Why could not the gentleman accept my amendment, upon which I understand the gentleman will withdraw his point of order?

Mr. BLACK. Because the amendment is not satisfactory.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is the gentleman sure he understands it?

Mr. BLACK. I think I do. We will discuss it when the point of order is disposed of.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The resolution referred to by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], passed in May, 1922, authorized an appropriation of $500,000 for the prosecution of war frauds. There is no authorization of this particular $500,000 for this special purpose. Therefore no legislation authorized it. No point of order was made upon the section when it was read, and I submit that under the well-known precedents if the amendment of the gentleman from Texas is germane to the section, even though it be considered legislation, a point of order will not lie against it, because the section itself was not authorized by law.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I know of no authority anywhere for extending the doctrine of limitation as we are here asked to do. The purpose for which this appropriation is made is stated in the original law. It is as follows:

> That for the investigation and prosecution of alleged frauds, either civil or criminal, or other crimes or offenses against the United States, growing out of or arising in connection with the preparation for or prosecution of the late war, to be immediately available, for the employment of counsel and other assistants, rent, and all other purposes in connection therewith, whether in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500,000.

Now, with this authorization in the law, we are asked to reappropriate $500,000 for the next year. Of course, the special purpose is stated in the original law. This is but a continuation appropriation for the purpose of giving a certain amount of money for this ensuing year.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Is not the fallacy of the gentleman's reasoning found in the fact that the resolution, a copy of which he holds in his hand and a part of which he has just read, appropriates $500,000 and does not contemplate any subsequent appropriation? If that be true, then this provision here, providing for an additional $500,000 for the next fiscal year, is legislation. It is not based upon any existing law. It is legislation.

Mr. TOWNER. No. The gentleman is mistaken on the proposition entirely, because under an authorization heretofore made we are now continuing the appropriation for another year. Mr. Chairman, we are not asked to express the purpose of this legislation. There may be authorities that go so far in some particular instances where they appear justified—and they would not appear justified in this case under any circumstances—as to hold that the purpose for which the appropriation is to be made may be stated and regarded as a limitation. But that is not the case here. The purpose is stated in the law. The purpose is already determined. Now, we are asked to have a report made giving the names of the persons to whom these amounts of money are to be paid. It is shown beyond question that this appropriation is for the apprehension and prosecution of criminals violating the law. It is shown by the purpose expressed in the original act that that is the declared purpose of the appropriation. This money, then, is to be used for certain definite purposes. Those purposes are stated. It is asked that the names of the persons to whom the money is paid and the amounts to be paid shall be reported, when, if that is done, the very object and purpose of these prosecutions may be defeated. It seems to me that gentlemen who desire, I know, as all do, that these frauds shall be prosecuted, who desire, as all do, that the men who have been defrauding the Government shall be punished, should be anxious that nothing that would prevent their punishment should be placed in the very law that provides for their punishment. But, aside from that consideration, we have now the mere question for the Chair to decide as to whether under our rules this can be considered as a limitation. I do not think there is any authority that goes to the extent asked in this case. For these reasons the objection to the amendment should be sustained.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I want to again call the attention of the Chair to the point already suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee, and to emphasize it, and that is the rule that where an amendment to or a section in a bill is subject to a point of order and the point of order is not made against it, then the point of order can not be made against amendments to that section on the ground that they contain legislation; and I think the reason for that rule will appeal to the Chair. In other words, here is a provision in this bill which is legislation, because, as has been pointed out by the gentleman from Tennessee, the original resolution adopted in 1922 only authorized the expenditure of $500,000. That expenditure has already been made.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the gentleman's application to this item in the bill is erroneous, because the rule would apply only to a case where there was not a work in progress. This is a work in progress.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. With all due respect to the gentleman from Illinois, for whose judgment when he is in earnest I have very great respect—I believe he is not earnest in this case—this can not be a work in progress. It is not a physical work in progress, such as an uncompleted building or a continuous process of improvement of a stream, such as the gentleman from Illinois has in mind.

That rule has no application here. The resolution of last May authorized the expenditure of $500,000, and that sum of money has been expended. Therefore there is no permanent law authorizing the expenditure of the $500,000 in this bill. If that is true then it is also true that that whole section was subject to a point of order on the ground that it was not authorized by law, and on the ground that it contained legislation, because that provision directs the Attorney General to do certain things. If the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] is legislation, then the other provisions of this section which contain directions to the Attorney General are also legislation. Now, no point of order having been made against the paragraph, the point of order does not lie against amendments which seek to amend the section that contains legislation, and that would have been subject to a point of order if it had been made. Authority for my contention is found in Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, section 3823, et seq.

I want to suggest this further point to the Chair: My contention is that the power to appropriate carries with it necessarily the implied power to require an accounting of the expenditures made, not on the theory of a limitation, not on the theory that it is an exception to any of the general rules, but there can be no question that under the rules of this House Congress possesses the authority to appropriate money to maintain the Department of Justice, and my contention is that the power to appropriate necessarily carries with it the power to require an accounting as to what has been done with the money. "Appropriating" does not mean simply going into the Treasury and shoveling out so much money into the street.

Appropriating does not mean abstracting so many million dollars from the Treasury, but appropriating means setting apart a certain amount of money for some particular purpose; and in order to know how that money has been used, in order to know whether it is well spent, in order to know whether sufficient money has been appropriated to accomplish that purpose, Congress has the inherent right as an incident to the appropriating power to require of those into whose hands the money goes an accounting as to their stewardship and as to what has been done with the money appropriated.

So, if the Chair please, I contend that this point of order does not lie; first, for the reason that the section itself is subject to a point of order, and that it contains legislation; and that the point of order not having been raised against the section it can not lie to an amendment that is germane to the section; secondly, that there is comprehended within the power to appropriate the incidental power to require an accounting from the officers into whose hands the funds go as to the use made of such funds.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, just one further observation. I have not before me a copy of the resolution of May, 1922, but my recollection is that the language of this provision is not identical with the language of that resolution, that there is a departure from its terms, and if that is a fact it simply serves to emphasize the statement made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] that the provision of this bill is legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph in question, found on pages 31 and 32 of the bill, appropriates certain sums of money for the investigation and prosecution of war frauds. It has a proviso that the appropriation shall not be available for rent, and so forth, and it is further provided that not more than one person shall be employed at a rate of compensation exceeding $10,000 per annum.

To that section the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] offers an amendment, as follows:

Provided further, That the Attorney General shall report to Congress on or before the first day of the regular session in December, 1924, how the amount appropriated in this paragraph has been expended, specifying the names of the persons to whom paid and the amounts paid to each. A similar report shall be made of the $500,000 appropriated at the second session of the Sixty-seventh Congress, for the purposes named in this paragraph, except the names of the special agents and detectives.

It has grown into a rule of the House, although the Chair believes it is not specifically stated in any rule, that limitations on appropriations may be made, the theory being, of course, that the body which makes an appropriation can make any proper limitation on its use.

The Chair can see in this particular language no limitation on the use of the money that it appropriates. How does it limit it? How does it in any way say how the money shall be spent or for what purpose or to what extent? It is not a limitation. The provisos in question are plainly provisos made as to some duties imposed on the Attorney General.

The point of order is made to it which I assume is made under the provisions of clause 2 of Rule XXI, which provides:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

This proposed amendment does not do any of the things mentioned in clause 2 of Rule XXI. There is no retrenchment sought to be made by it or any reduction in the amount to be expended.

The thing that is required by the amendment is this: The Attorney General shall report to the Congress on or before the first day of its regular session certain things—that is, how the money appropriated by this section shall be expended, and, second, the Attorney General shall make a report about the $500,000 that was appropriated by a former act. These are reports not required by existing law. The Attorney General is not required to make reports on these matters except by the amendment, and therefore this amendment imposes substantive duties upon the Attorney General, and, of course, is new legislation.

Now, to meet that point the gentleman from Texas argues, and argues very well, that the original paragraph under which this amendment is offered was not in order if a point of order had been made against it because it contained new legislation, and therefore this particular amendment which he claims is germane, although it contains new legislation, would also be in order to that section.

The rule invoked by the gentleman from Texas is that in an appropriation bill a paragraph embodying legislation may be perfected by a germane amendment, even though the germane amendment itself contains legislation. It is conceded this is the law. However, it has been held on numerous occasions that this exception to the general rule does not permit an amendment which adds additional legislation—that is, legislation not comprehended by, or embraced within, the subject matter of the paragraph sought to be amended. To illustrate this principle the Chair cites Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, paragraph 3830. In that case the Chair held—

That if a paragraph has been included in the bill which has in it a taint of illegality or of being contrary to existing law, that paragraph can be corrected or perfected by an amendment; but if the further paragraph which is proposed as an amendment carries a further degree of illegality affecting the whole paragraph as amended, then it is not in order.

Again, in the same volume of Hinds, paragraph 3862, where a provision in the naval appropriations bill which provided for the construction of new battleships, one to be named the Maine, was under consideration, where an amendment was proposed to name one of the said battleships the Missouri, it was held that while it would have been permissible to strike out the word Maine and insert any other name, it was not permissible to so change the law as to name more than one ship. To a similar effect is a decision made by Chairman Dalzell, found in the same volume of Hinds, paragraph 3838.

The substance of these rulings is that in an appropriation bill a paragraph embodying legislation may be perfected by a germane amendment, but that this does not permit an amendment which adds additional legislation.

If this is the parliamentary law there can be little doubt about what the ruling ought to be on this amendment. If the amendment were confined to requiring a report on the various items of appropriations contained in this paragraph it might be held to be in order, although that depends upon the question as to whether the original paragraph contains legislation, a point which has not been urged upon the Chair and upon which the Chair does not now express an opinion. But the amendment goes further and requires the Attorney General to report as to his expenditure of sums of money appropriated by a former act of Congress, and thus introduces new matter not covered by this pending bill in any way. It therefore does not come within the exception to the general rule forbidding legislation, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do that for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that there is in the gallery the greatest aggregation of football men ever assembled in one place, the Waite High School of Toledo. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

JUDICIAL.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

Salaries: Chief Justice, $15,000; eight Associate Justices, at $14,500 each; marshal, $4,500; nine law clerks, one for the Chief Justice and one for each Associate Justice, at not exceeding $3,600 each; nine stenographic clerks, one for the Chief Justice and one for each Associate Justice, at not exceeding $2,000 each; in all, $185,900.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do so to ask a question about a previous paragraph. I do not see the chairman of the subcommittee or the gentleman from Nebraska here, but I will put my question to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], who seems to now be in charge of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will try to the best of my ability to answer the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. On the top of page 31, in a paragraph previously passed over, there is a provision that contemplates the automobile purchased from the appropriation for the detection and prosecution of crimes shall hereafter be under the exclusive control of the Director of the Bureau of Investigation. I was wondering when the lump-sum appropriation had been used to purchase an extra automobile for the Director of the Bureau of Investigation, and whether or not there was any specific authority granted in the lump-sum appropriation at the time the purchase was made.

Mr. STAFFORD. Perhaps this appropriation was utilized rather belatedly for the purchase of this automobile, as belatedly as the gentleman from Tennessee has propounded his question. We passed that paragraph some time ago. If we have to take up the time of the committee in going back to these paragraphs we will not make much progress.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman may consider that an answer to my question.

Mr. STAFFORD. Having some acquaintance with automobiles in the Army, I would not give much attention to just one lone automobile for the Department of Justice. Whether it is warranted or not we can well afford to pass it over without much debate.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. My question is propounded in all seriousness, if these lump sums are being used for the purpose of purchasing automobiles?

Mr. STAFFORD. From my acquaintance with the hearings and the work in the various departments, I think the gentleman from Tennessee will confirm me in the statement that lump sums are not being used for the purchase of automobiles; that there was probably a specific authority for its purchase. It is highly probable that an automobile was transferred from the War Department to this service, and this authorization is to provide for its upkeep.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is the conjecture of the gentleman from Wisconsin, which the gentleman from Tennessee could make quite as well.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I ask that the gentleman be given two more minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks that the time of the gentleman from Tennessee be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, the situation was this: The committee granted an automobile a year ago for the detection and prosecution of crimes in the District of Columbia. They discovered in the hearings before them this year that it was being used for other purposes. The automobile was already purchased; the price had been paid. It was needed for the purpose for which it was purchased, and the committee by this provision simply effectuates the intention of Congress when it purchased the automobile. It confines its use to the detection and prosecution of crime in the District of Columbia. That is the sole purpose of it, and that is the way in which it originated.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Do I understand that the automobile was purchased solely for use in the District of Columbia?

Mr. DEMPSEY. For the detection and prosecution of crime.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I was just wondering why the Director of the Bureau of Investigation of Crime needed an automobile in the District of Columbia, especially when he is on a $7,500 a year salary, any more than any other bureau chief in the city of Washington. I thought we had cut out the proposition of buying automobiles and furnishing them to bureau chiefs.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The District of Columbia is rather large. It is 10 miles square. You can not possibly walk over the District of Columbia and either detect or prosecute crime.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. You know that that is a matter for the police of the city, and we know that the Director of the Bureau of Investigation has to do with crimes over the United States, and that his duties are almost altogether confined to that.

Mr. DEMPSEY. No; that is not a matter exclusively for the police in the District any more than elsewhere in the country, but Federal officials are employed to do this work, and they and the local police act together.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DISTRICT COURTS.

Salaries: One hundred and twenty-five district judges, at $7,500 each, $937,500: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for the salaries of all United States district judges lawfully entitled thereto for the fiscal year 1924.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, line 15, after the figures "1924," strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided, That no part of this $937,500 shall be paid in salary to any district judge who willfully fails or refuses to enforce any Federal law under his jurisdiction."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment because it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this has been ruled upon several times. This particular matter was ruled on just the other day in the Treasury appropriation bill. Just such an amendment was offered under the appropriation for the salaries of revenue officers, and the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] who was Chairman at the time, presiding over the committee having under consideration that bill—and I think no one will deny he is a good parliamentarian—held that the point of order was not well taken, that this was merely a limitation. I offer his ruling in that respect. It was not appealed from, and I call attention to various rulings similar to it preceding it during the last five or six years, holding that it is a limitation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, it is not every limitation on an appropriation bill that is in order. The duties of the judges are prescribed by law.

Mr. BLANTON. It was this particular amendment, practically word for word.

Mr. STAFFORD. Here an attempt is being made to change those duties by a substantive enactment in the way of a limitation on an appropriation bill. There are rulings which hold that you can restrict the appropriation when there is no legislation appertaining to the use of the fund, but these judges have their duties prescribed by law, and it is an attempt now to change the duties under the form of a limitation. Under the guise of a limitation you can not change existing law. That is what the gentleman is attempting to do.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to give the Chair the specific precedent. I call the attention of the Chair to page 221 of the RECORD for December 8, 1922, in the second column. This amendment was offered by myself:

Page 28, line 8, after the word "standing," strike out the period, insert a colon, and insert the following: "And provided further, That no part of this $9,000,000 shall be paid in salary or expenses to any employee of the Internal Revenue Service who willfully fails or refuses to perform his duties connected with the enforcement of the laws mentioned in this paragraph."

Then the following occurred:

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that amendment. I do not think anybody can justify it.

Mr. BLANTON. It is merely a limitation.

Mr. MADDEN. That is already covered in the law itself. The law provides that men who fill these places are under oath to enforce the law, and where a man willfully refuses to do that, of course the remedy is to put him out of office. If he willfully violates the law and commits a crime by so doing he ought to be prosecuted. I do not think this is a proper amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this amendment is simply a limitation. Whether it is desirable or not is for the committee, and not the Chair, to decide.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that this is a limitation. It is true that if it were followed it might change the law to some extent, but it is a limitation nevertheless. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition on the amendment. In his message to the Congress last Friday the President of the United States intimated that he had determined upon one thing, and that is that the prohibition laws of the country shall be enforced by the courts, and in that connection I call attention to what he said. He said that such a course "would save humiliation of this Government and humiliation of our people before the world, and that it challenges the destructive forces engaged in widespread violation, official corruption, and individual demoralization."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Those are the words of the President. In the press, within the last 24 hours, we find that in the city of Baltimore, not 40 miles distant from this Capitol, there have been within the last few days nine policemen suspended because they were found under the influence of intoxicating liquor, and were found to have disobeyed orders to stop drinking in the saloons of Baltimore. Saloons under prohibition laws! These laws that are supposed to have put them out of existence! Why do they exist?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The gentleman is not addressing himself to the amendment under discussion. He is criticizing the enforcement officers of the prohibition service and not the judges of the United States. The very amendment is in itself a severe arraignment of the integrity of our judges.

Mr. BLANTON. It was the gentleman's President who arraigned them, not I.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. BLANTON. I call attention, Mr. Chairman, to the fact that in yesterday's Washington Times, on page 4, it is shown that within 48 hours preceding last Saturday there were 43 drunken men arrested in the District of Columbia. Oh, they will arrest the poor drunk and put him in jail, but the bootleggers who violate the prohibition laws, who sell him the liquor, are turned loose or are permitted to pay a measly little fine that is merely a license.

In the same Washington Times, on page 15, it contains this statement:

The largest turnover of money for whisky and other liquors since prohibition began three years ago will be recorded this Christmas, revenue officers said to-day.

On the first page of the same paper yesterday evening was this: That Commissioner Oyster shows that 1,967 bootlegging cases are pending in court here in the District of Columbia, and here is Commissioner Oyster's statement:

What does make it hard, however, is to have so little court attention that the bootleggers and other liquor violators, realizant of the police department's helpless position, run rampant and make the job of running them down twice as hard.

Then Commissioner Oyster shows that since last August the policemen here in the District of Columbia have taken from bootleggers the following amounts of liquor:

Liquor.

Whisky	gallons	8,233
Gin	do	358
Alcohol	do	1,495
Cider	do	1,029
Champagne	do	7
Wine	do	3,494
Home brew	do	687
Cognac	do	160
Alcoholic beverages	do	523
Pela tonic	do	870
Brandy	do	10
Extracts	bottles	14,592
Beer	do	1,504
Mash	gallons	10,963

And have apprehended 130 stills here in the District of Columbia. This is in the Nation's Capital.

This exists because the law is not enforced, and if you will merely suggest to these district judges and the district attorneys throughout the land that their salaries are going to stop if they do not uphold their oaths to see the laws are enforced you will then see that they will pay more attention to the law of this land.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am as much in favor of the enforcement of the prohibition law as any man in this House, or any man outside of it, for that matter, but the manner in which the gentleman from Texas offers his amendment is not the way to proceed. His remarks have not been directed at the judges, but, rather, at certain officers of the law whom he claims have not been properly enforcing its provisions. If the gentleman from Texas has any evidence to present that any Federal judge is willfully refusing to enforce the law, I will join with him at any time in impeachment proceedings, and that is the only way to proceed under the Constitution by which a judge can be reached. The Supreme Court has recently held that even the taxation of the salary of a Federal judge, becauses it decreases his compensation during his term of office, is forbidden by the Constitution. We can not try him by any other method except by impeachment, and no officer of the United States is authorized to try him. This amendment, if it can be enforced, which I doubt very much, is absolutely unconstitutional.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I care to add anything to what has been said by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], except I agree with him in every enforcement law, and the enforcement of law, that this would leave the power in the Comptroller General to take all discretion away from Federal judges. For instance, I think there is some abuse of discretion by judges, and I think we should perhaps correct that by amending the law and the minimum punishment for the violation of law, but I do not think seriously we ought to adopt this amendment giving to the man who issues the pay checks final authority to pass on the qualification of district attorneys and judges. I would be more afraid that the time would come when an amendment like this would rise up to defeat the law enforcement rather than to help it. I think, however, it is a very good thing to have the attention of judges and district attorneys called to the fact that Congress is observing some of the sentences and lack of sentences being imposed.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is constructive; what plan would he offer to follow up the suggestion made by the President that the law must be enforced, and that it is not now being enforced?

Mr. TINCHER. An amendment just like that adopted by the dry State of Kansas, increasing the minimum punishment and taking from the judges——

Mr. BLANTON. The right to fine a man 1 cent and——

Mr. TINCHER. Absolutely; that would be my cure for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 1, noes 52.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of necessary quarters in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, $7,000; books and periodicals, including their exchange; stationery, supplies, traveling expenses; heat, light, and power service; drugs, chemicals, cleansers, furniture, pay of bailiffs and all other necessary employees not otherwise specifically provided for; and for such other miscellaneous expenses as may be approved by the presiding judge, $3,965; in all, $10,460.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I ask to return to the last paragraph. I endeavored to secure recognition for the purpose of offering an amendment to correct a clerical error.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 34, line 18, strike out the amount "$3,965" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$3,460."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For custodian of the building occupied by the Court of Claims, $500, to be paid on the order of the court, notwithstanding section 1765 of the Revised Statutes or section 3 of the act of June 20, 1874.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] was speaking a few minutes ago as to the expenses incurred by the Department of Justice for salaries of accountants. By turning to pages 136 and 137 Members will find a full statement in regard to that matter.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is in the hearings?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes; it is in the hearings. You will find there that the full number of men employed is given at 32. You will find that their salaries are given. You will find that their salaries aggregate $108,980, and you will find that the average price per day paid to these accountants, instead of being $25 a day for simply the assistant accountants, is only $11.33 a day for principal and supervising and junior accountants.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have read that statement, and I think it was read by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. EVANS] during the discussion. I have read that statement to which the gentleman refers. But I was speaking of information which I had received, and I was asking if it was correct or not as to the employment of special accountants.

Mr. DEMPSEY. If the gentleman would read a little further, on page 137 he will see that the special accountants referred to were also covered by the testimony. He will find that the special accountants are furnished not at the rate that the gentleman speaks of but at a specially low rate, and that the chief accountant had made a special arrangement in order to obtain those rates. I will condense the substance of his testimony. He says he has obtained the services of these accountants not at the regular prices but at very much reduced prices by means of a special arrangement that he was able to make. He has not only obtained the services of these accountants at less than the regular prices but also the services of the members of the great accounting firms on the same terms as those which they were regularly paid for assistants in their offices.

When you are building up a great force of that kind of accountants and engineers and experts you have to go through the process of elimination, and he has avoided that, and from these great firms in New York and Chicago and other large centers he has obtained the services of picked men, so that no process of elimination was or is necessary. In other words, he has secured, as he says in the subsequent part of his testimony, the services of men of national reputation, men whose reputation is so great that it is Nation-wide, in the Department of Justice on terms below the terms charged by ordinary accountants when the ordinary employer of accountants applies to such firms for their services from time to time. In other words, instead of these employments in the Department of Justice being a matter of scandal, instead of their being a matter of criticism, instead of being a matter to which objection could be made, it develops upon investigation that the man who has charge of this force, who is said to be receiving a fair sum for his services, is so skillful a man, is a man of such great executive ability, that he has been able not alone to render great service to the country in his personal capacity, but he has been able to build up a splendid force of experienced men at a minimum of cost. So that instead of receiving criticism here, the accountants and the chief accountant in particular are only to be praised for this one thing to which criticism has been directed in the discussion of this bill, and I think in fairness this should be stated, not only for the Department of Justice, but for the men immediately in charge of this work. I think a careful perusal of this testimony will show that not only what I have said is true, but true to a degree that it is not practicable to show here unless I should go into more minute detail.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee rose.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I shall not consume the five minutes. I thought this discussion had closed. I will state to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] that I had read the hearings that appear in the volume before me. I am perfectly familiar with the testimony, and I presume the gentleman is familiar with the statements made there with reference to the permanent force. Mr. Cameron does say he has a permanent force of 32 men, his salary being $18,000, and others getting $7,500 and less sums; but the point of my inquiry a while ago was as to the employment of special temporary accountants.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I can not yield in the five minutes. Let me make this connected statement, and then if I have time I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman.

The point of my inquiry a while ago was as to the special temporary accountants under this appropriation. The gentleman in charge of the bill stated that they could not give the information. I stated, and I state again, that I have information from a source which I believe to be perfectly reliable to the effect that temporary accountants are employed and that an accountant was employed in the Lincoln Motors case at $50 per day and that he employed junior accountants, paying for them $25 a day, whereas those junior accountants received only $200 per month from the firm by which they were employed, the firm receiving the difference between $200 per month and $25 a day. My inquiry was directed for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not that was true. The gentleman from New York has not controverted the statement. He has had opportunity to telephone to the Department of Justice and get the information. Why not get into telephonic communication with the Department of Justice and tell the House whether or not it is true? The point I make is that we should put an amendment on this provision, so that the Attorney General will be required to report the facts. When we attempt to do that we find the gentleman from New York and other gentlemen very vehemently insisting on a point of order to prevent the disclosure of such facts.

I do not see any reason why Congress should not be told how this money is being expended, and ascertain whether or not there are temporary accountants employed, not the men the gentleman from New York is referring to but whether one man who is drawing $50 a day and junior accountants $25 a day, whereas they are actually employed by a firm which pays them $200 a month. The country ought to be told the facts.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The latter half of the first long paragraph at the top of page 137, and the next paragraph, deal with exactly what the gentleman refers to.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That refers to the permanent organization and does not say a word about temporary accountants.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think it refers to just this.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Read the language.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Cameron says:

I told them that I felt and had told the Attorney General that this organization, which was an organization of accountants and engineers, could not be had without a process of elimination, as we had known that to be a fact from our past 25 years' service; that he could not wait for the process of elimination and therefore I had an understanding with these men. I said: "I want you to say to me, as the principal member of this firm, that I can call on your services as a supervisor and principal accountant, and in many cases furnish you (me) my (their) own assistants," something rather unusual in their business, because you are taking away some of their profits.

Now, as I understand this language it means that he made an arrangement not only to build up a permanent force but he made an arrangement to call upon them for temporary supplies of help from time to time as they were needed, and by that arrangement he secured the services of the partners or the supervising accountants at the same rate at which you would ordinarily secure the services of junior accountants. That was the arrangement that he had made and that is the arrangement under which the investigations are being made.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is not an answer to my inquiry as to whether or not there were special accountants employed in the Lincoln Motors case who were getting the salaries that I referred to.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Why does it not answer it? If he has a general arrangement, why are we to suppose that he has made an altogether different arrangement in the absence of any testimony at all to that effect and contrary to the existing testimony?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. He does not make any statement which contradicts the information I have received.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is closed by order of the committee. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TERRITORIAL COURTS.

Alaska: Four judges, at $7,500 each; 4 attorneys, at $5,000 each; 4 marshals, at $4,000 each; 4 clerks, at $3,500 each; in all, $80,000.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word with reference to the need for a requirement for reporting to Congress the expenditure of these lump-sum appropriations. I do not think that the Committee on Appropriations, except in very exceptional cases, ought to bring in a lump-sum appropriation without a legislative requirement of that kind. If I understand the policies of Congress, it is always desirable and it is the practice of Congress wherever possible to itemize these expenditures and to appropriate specifically for different items; but I recognize that that can not be done in all cases.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman will find an itemized detailed statement in connection with every lump-sum appropriation printed in the Budget.

Mr. BLACK. I have understood from the discussion this afternoon, which I have followed with a great deal of interest, that there has not been any detailed account of this $500,000 item, except in part.

Mr. MADDEN. Is the gentleman talking now about the $500,000 item for the Department of Justice?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman must know that to make a detailed itemized statement of that would be to disclose the hand of the Government to those whom the Government is prosecuting.

Mr. BLACK. I can not see how the Government would disclose its hand by making a statement from the Attorney General's department as to how it has expended money in the orderly process of the enforcement of the law.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. As a general principle I believe the most complete reports should be made as to every expenditure, and in the greatest detail. But here is a matter standing alone, where the country, through its Department of Justice, is endeavoring to prosecute those who are charged with frauds against the Government. To the extent that you disclose the action of the Department of Justice, to that extent you make it easier for the men charged with crime to escape.

Mr. BLACK. I do not insist and have not insisted that it be done at the time the expenditures are made; but after the expenditure of the money it seems to me it is the duty of the Department of Justice to make a detailed report. Perhaps the report will be made anyway, but there is no harm in making it a requirement of law. Here we have the case of an accountant in the Department of Justice, under an appropriation of $500,000, getting a salary of $18,000, when we pay the Comptroller General of the United States only $10,000. My experience as a Member of Congress has been that the indefensible extravagances of the Government have been out of these lump-sum appropriations. It is time that Congress required a detailed accounting as to how the money has been spent in each and every one of them, not only as to the Attorney General's department, but all other departments of the Government.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman understands, does he not, that I read into the RECORD a detailed statement of exactly what was proposed to be done with this money?

Mr. BLACK. I understood the reading of the gentleman's statement.

Mr. EVANS. And also that the only objection made to the amendment was when you insisted on having certain things reported which might be prejudicial to the ends of justice?

Mr. BLACK. I understood the gentleman's attitude, but that still does not meet the objection I make, to wit, that the Attorney General may spend this $500,000 as he sees fit and make no detailed report of it to Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. No one in this Chamber is more insistent on detailed appropriations for employees of the various departments than I am, but it has been the invariable rule of the Congress that when we create a new agency, like the Federal Trade Commission—and there are many others that I might cite—Congress is necessarily compelled to vote a lump-sum appropriation to permit of its organization. It is never the policy of the Government to parcel out piecemeal appropriations for clerks and to schedule their salaries in advance when those who are organizing the bureau or the activity do not know in advance what will be required. When the Committee on Appropriations first considered this proposal to appropriate $500,000, they placed only one limitation upon that appropriation, and that was that not more than one person should be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $10,000. The Attorney General has not abused the confidence imposed in him by Congress in employing only one person at $18,000. The gentleman having this bill in charge called the attention of the committee in detail, place after place, to an exact statement of how it is proposed to expend this $500,000 in the ensuing year. They might just as well have written it into permanent law, but as this is merely a temporary activity which will expire in a year or two, the Committee on Appropriations, following the custom and practice, did not think it advisable to take that course, and accordingly it is a lump-sum appropriation.

I ask for the reading of the bill.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXPENSES OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

For salaries, fees, and expenses of United States marshals and their deputies, including the office expenses of United States marshals in the District of Alaska, and hereafter the Attorney General shall pay the office expenses of United States marshals in the District of Alaska from the appropriation, "Salaries, fees, and expenses of United States marshals and their deputies," services rendered in behalf of the United States or otherwise, services in Alaska in collecting evidence for the United States when so specially directed by the Attorney General, and maintenance, alteration, repair, and operation of horse-drawn and motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicles used in connection with the transaction of the official business of the office of United States marshal for the District of Columbia, $2,275,000: Provided, That there shall be paid hereunder any necessary cost of keeping vessels or other property attached or libeled in admiralty in such amount as the court, on petition setting forth the facts under oath, may allow: Provided further, That marshals and office deputy marshals (except in the District of Alaska) may be granted a per diem of not to exceed $4 in lieu of subsistence, instead of, but under the conditions prescribed for, the present allowance for actual expenses of subsistence.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 37, line 3, after the word "subsistence," strike out the period, add a colon, and then insert the following: "Provided further, That no part of this $2,275,000 shall be paid in salary or expenses to any United States marshal who willfully fails or refuses to perform his duties connected with the enforcement of any Federal law under his jurisdiction."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, no one better than I recognizes the futility of trying to pass just now some amendment that would enforce the prohibition law when we now have the ever alert, ever active, able, highly intelligent, ever present, and ever working distinguished gentleman from Milwaukee [Mr. STAFFORD] sitting at the head of the table in charge of this bill. While I differ with him on several subjects, I love the gentleman from Milwaukee. He is one of the hardest working Members in Congress. I do not know of a man in Congress who eternally works harder in cutting down expenses and saving the money of the people than does the gentleman from Milwaukee. But if there is one thing and one subject upon which his mind is absolutely fixed in protecting, it is that thing which made his home town famous. [Laughter.] You are not going to get any kind of an amendment through with him sitting at the head of the table. For instance, when I presented the last amendment it was the gentleman from Milwaukee who made the point of order against it. Then, when a vote was taken, in the hope of trying to show to his Milwaukee constituents that we had a wet Congress instead of the dry Congress, he forced a division of the question, knowing that we had but a little handful of men here, and everyone recognized, as I did, the futility of trying to pass such an amendment just now; he knew that the Members would not go to the trouble of rising to vote. He knew I was about the only one who would vote for the amendment, and this would be a good showing to Milwaukee, that the great House of Representatives on an amendment to enforce prohibition would vote 1 for prohibition and 52 against. [Laughter and applause.] Fifty-three Members here considering a bill which takes out of the people's Treasury $33,188,151.50 of the public money! Fifty-three men! With the full membership here results would have been different. I want to say that I want to see the President's recommendation carried out. It is a disgrace to this country that there is such a laxity in the enforcement of the prohibition laws. Do you know who is responsible, so far as this Federal Government is concerned? Three men in each district are responsible alone; one the district judge who charges the grand juries and who sits at the trial, the other is the marshal who collects the evidence for the court, and the third is the district attorney who is supposed to enforce the law. It lies with them as to whether the law is going to be enforced or not. It is according to their decision as to whether the law shall be enforced or not.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman must know that the marshal has nothing to do with the enforcement of the law. There is a prohibition enforcing corps, under Mr. Haynes.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I know during the eight years I sat as circuit judge in Texas it was within my power to enforce the prohibition law and to see that all laws were enforced. It was within the power of the district attorney, it was within the power of the sheriff to see that criminals were apprehended.

Every United States marshal in the United States has jurisdiction to apprehend these criminals, to bring the evidence before the district attorney, put it before the court that it may be submitted to the grand juries, and they could help to have the law enforced.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] says that it is a hit at the judiciary, that it is intimating that they are not doing their duty. He says that his remedy is to pass a law taking away their discretion in fixing the minimum punishment, to take away the discretion which permits them to fine a criminal who admits that he is bootlegging one cent and turn him loose. He says we must raise the minimum punishment. The very minute he uttered those words he admitted my argument; the very minute he uttered those words he admitted that the judiciary was not doing its duty in enforcing the law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the present paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto be closed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of United States district attorneys and expenses of United States district attorneys and their regular assistants, including the office expenses of United States district attorneys in Alaska, and for salaries of regularly appointed clerks to United States district attorneys for services rendered during vacancy in the office of the United States district attorney, $900,000: Provided, That United States district attorneys and their regular assistants may be granted a per diem of not to exceed $4 in lieu of subsistence, instead of, but under the conditions prescribed for, the present allowance for actual expenses of subsistence.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 37, line 14, after the word "subsistence," strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided further, That no part of this $900,000 shall be paid in salary to any United States district attorney who willfully fails or refuses to enforce any Federal law under his jurisdiction."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, it is so patent that we can not pass this amendment, and in order to help the distinguished gentleman from Milwaukee in the dispatch of business, I move that all debate on the paragraph now close.

Mr. TILSON. I make the point of order that there has been no debate.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; I have debated it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of clerks of United States circuit courts of appeals and United States district courts, their deputies, and other assistants, expenses of travel and subsistence, and other expenses of conducting their respective offices, in accordance with the provisions of the act approved February 26, 1919, and the act approved June 1, 1922, making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923: Provided, That per diem in lieu of subsistence not to exceed $4 per day may be granted to deputy clerks and clerical assistants to clerks of United States district courts, instead of but under conditions applicable to the allowance for actual expenses of subsistence, as provided in the above-mentioned act of February 26, 1919: Provided further, That hereafter the number and compensation of deputy clerks in Hawaii shall be fixed by the Attorney General as in other judicial districts, $1,400,000.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice in the item on page 38, for salaries of clerks and deputy clerks, there is a provision for a per diem allowance in line 15 which is slightly different from the provision on page 36 for deputy United States marshal. I want to know the reason for this difference, and also to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that for many years the deputy clerks have been underpaid, and to ask him if this paragraph just read will give to these clerks or deputy clerks some increased per diem allowance, to which I feel they are entitled.

Mr. EVANS. This was intended and will give them just the per diem that is mentioned.

Mr. SEARS. In other words, they may receive $4 per day now.

Mr. EVANS. Yes; if it is actually expended.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous expenditures, including the same objects specified under this head for the penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans. (including the special provision for motor car), and not exceeding $500 for maintenance and repair of horse-drawn and motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, $130,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I observe that $659,000 is appropriated for the Leavenworth Penitentiary. Does this mean that it costs that much to run the penitentiary in addition to what the institution received from what the prisoners manufacture?

Mr. EVANS. Oh, no. That goes into the Treasury. This is the gross cost. As a matter of fact, inmates of Leavenworth and other prisons are producing commodities of considerable value, the proceeds of which are covered into the Treasury of the United States. This item is the entire cost, including the clothing, the maintenance, and subsistence of prisoners.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is the gentleman able to tell the committee how much, or approximately how much, more it costs than is received from what the prisoners produce to carry on this prison?

Mr. EVANS. I could not tell the gentleman the difference at this time. It does cost more, but it is the fact that the Federal prisons are being most economically administered, and this is one set of institutions where I understand there is no complaint by reason of extravagance.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I agree with the gentleman. I never heard any complaint about extravagance. The only complaint I have heard—and I think possibly it may be well founded—is not against the prison officials, but, rather, because Congress has not authorized sufficient appropriations so that the prisoners may be kept at work and pay all of their expenses.

Mr. EVANS. One of the chief difficulties in keeping the prisoners employed is the subjects upon which they may work. There is a great prejudice against prison-made articles, and they have attempted at most of the prisons to have a farm in connection with it and thus reduce the expense for subsistence. I understand that complaint is being made by those in charge of the prisons because they have not been liberally provided with means of employment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Are the prisoners all kept at work that are able physically to do work?

Mr. EVANS. As a rule, yes; but there are exceptions. There are times when they do not have the means of keeping them all employed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think it is a great mistake not to provide work for them, and I think that could be done without conflicting with the free labor in the country.

Mr. EVANS. The prison authorities are endeavoring to do everything within reason to comply with the wishes expressed by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment in order to ask the gentleman from Nebraska in regard to these appropriations for Federal prisons. The gentleman says, undoubtedly correctly, that there has been no complaint against the running of these institutions. I call his attention to the fact that in almost every item, beginning on page 42, there is a material increase, covering about four pages of items for the Federal penitentiaries. There is an increase in almost each individual item.

Mr. EVANS. The reason for that is the increase of the people who are convicted in the Federal courts. There is now no place in the United States in which they can confine female prisoners, because they are all full. There have been a number of additions to the Federal prisons, and, as I understand it, all of the Federal prisons are full, some of them more than is proper.

Mr. TILSON. Is this increase in the number of prisoners due to the enforcement of the prohbition act?

Mr. EVANS. The enforcement of the prohibition act has contributed to it. The violations of the narcotic act, and convictions following such violations, are among the chief causes; and there has been, as the gentleman well knows, what is known as the crime wave following a great war. While that is on the wane, the cases are just being tried.

All three causes to which I have called attention contribute to the prisons being crowded. Then there is another item to which I ought to call your attention which has furnished quite a number of penitentiary inmates, namely, the automobile thefts and unlawful transportation of stolen automobiles.

Mr. TILSON. But it is a fact there has been a very considerable increase in the number of inmates of the Federal penitentiaries during the last three years?

Mr. EVANS. It is not only true that there has been an increase, but the cost of subsistence per individual prisoner has been reduced. June 30, 1912, there were in the Atlanta Penitentiary 954 inmates. June 30, 1921, there were 2,091 inmates, and June 30, 1922, 2,334 inmates. In the Leavenworth Penitentiary, June 30, 1912, there were 1,165 inmates; June 30, 1921, 1,917 inmates; and June 30, 1922, 2,671 inmates. At McNeil Island, June 30, 1912, there were 221 inmates; June 30, 1921, 298 inmates; and June 30, 1922, 535 inmates. Those are the exact figures.

Mr. TILSON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. Certainly.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I desire to ask the gentleman whether or not the number of anarchists and Bolshevists and people preaching the destruction of our Government, the so-called red drive in this country, has tended to increase the number of inmates of these prisons or not. We know they are in the country, and I was just wondering whether or not they are being apprehended, and thereby increase the number in our prisons.

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman is quite well aware of the fact that during the war there was as rigorous prosecution for offenses along the line suggested by him as could be made. Since that time there has not been the same tendency to prosecute these men; but the fact is, also, that the most of those persons who are not citizens of the United States, in place of being imprisoned, are being deported. There have not been, as far as I know, many convictions in the last year, but I can not be specific.

Mr. LINEBERGER. That has not materially increased the number of prisoners?

Mr. EVANS. It has not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the pro forma amendment for the purpose of asking a question. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the revenue that has been coming from the various penitentiaries through the labor of convicts—for instance, our Post Office Department used quite a lot of ducking cloth, and much of that has been manufactured in our penitentiaries by convict labor.

Mr. EVANS. That is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not know what is doing now, but they used to manufacture shoes and other things at the penitentiaries by utilizing the time of the convicts. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact by that plan we derived some revenue to offset the expense, and that has been interfered with to a greater or less extent by the protests of organized labor that it is interfering with their business?

Mr. EVANS. I do not know that I can answer the gentleman positively; but this is a fact, there was a large stock of canvas on hand held by the War Department and it was used to some extent by the Post Office Department, which reduced the amount of canvas which would be called for from the penitentiary at Atlanta, where it was manufactured, to which I presume the gentleman from Texas alludes. There has also been, as the gentleman well knows, all over the country a protest against prison-made goods.

Mr. BLANTON. That is what I am driving at.

Mr. EVANS. That has been presented for years. Now, that does stop these convicts from manufacturing stuff to compete with the same kind of product manufactured by free labor.

Mr. BLANTON. That competition has been stopped.

Mr. EVANS. I think there is no attempt on the part of Federal prison authorities to compete outside.

Mr. BLANTON. Outside of Government use?

Mr. EVANS. With any other activity.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask the gentleman if it had not been for that action in stopping this manufacture, or, in other words, if our friends, organized labor, would permit, the Government would grant us permission to manufacture ducking cloth, shoes, and other things, which convicts can manufacture in the penitentiaries, there will be just that much diminution of expense through the revenue derived?

Mr. EVANS. That is probable.

Mr. BLANTON. And it is because they will not grant us permission that we are rather forced to appropriate these extra sums?

Mr. EVANS. I would not want to agree to that statement.

Mr. BLANTON. I would not ask the gentleman to agree or embarrass him, but that is the situation.

Mr. EVANS. No; I do not understand they will grant us permission; that is the way the gentleman made his statement.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, if they have stopped us from manufacturing it is the want of their permission, and that is why——

Mr. EVANS. No; it is not a question of permission at all.

Mr. BLANTON. I am hopeful that some day organized labor will withdraw this objection and grant the United States Government permission to permit its convicts to be employed, which would be helpful to the men as well as helpful to the people.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13282) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EVANS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE—PORTS OF ENTRY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

To the Congress of the United States:

The sundry civil act approved August 1, 1914, contains the following provisions, viz:

"The President is authorized from time to time, as the exigencies of the service may require, to rearrange, by consolidation or otherwise, the several customs collection districts and to continue ports of entry by abolishing the same or establishing others in their stead: Provided, That the whole number of customs collection districts, ports of entry, or either of them, shall at no time be made to exceed those now established and authorized except as the same may hereafter be provided by law: Provided further, That hereafter the collector of customs of each customs collection district shall be officially designated by the number of the district for which he is appointed and not by the name of the port where the headquarters are situated, and the President is authorized from time to time to change the location of the headquarters in any customs collection district as the needs of the service may require: And provided further, That the President shall, at the beginning of each regular session, submit to Congress a statement of all acts, if any, done hereunder and the reasons therefor."

Pursuant to the requirements of the third proviso to the said provision, I have to state that the following changes in the organization of the customs service have been made by Executive order:

By Executive order, dated January 24, 1921, the port of Portland as then constituted was abolished and that place was created as a port of entry in customs collection district No. 29 (Oregon), the order defining the limits of the newly created port.

By Executive order, dated January 9, 1922, various ports of entry were abolished and several new ports of entry created in several of the customs collection districts as follows:

CUSTOMS PORTS OF ENTRY ABOLISHED.

In customs collection district No. 1, of which Portland, Me., is the headquarters port, Rockport, Me.; Deer Isle, Me.; Vinalhaven, Me.; and Castine, Me.

In customs collection district No. 4, of which Boston, Mass., is the headquarters port, Barnstable, Mass., and Holyoke, Mass.

In customs collection district No. 7, of which Ogdensburg, N. Y., is the headquarters port, Chaumont, N. Y.

In customs collection district No. 10, of which New York, N. Y., is the headquarters port, Greenport and Patchogue, N. Y.

In customs collection district No. 11, of which Philadelphia, Pa., is the headquarters port, Tuckerton, N. J.

In customs collection district No. 18, of which Tampa, Fla., is the headquarters port, Port Inglis and Punta Gorda, Fla.

In customs collection district No. 22, of which Galveston, Tex., is the headquarters port, Port Lavaca, Tex.

In customs collection district No. 23, of which San Antonio, Tex., is the headquarters port, Santa Maria and Roma, Tex.

In customs collection district No. 24, of which El Paso, Tex., is the headquarters port, Boquillas, Tex.

In customs collection district No. 25, of which San Diego, Calif., is the headquarters port, Campo, Calif.

In customs collection district No. 31, of which Juneau, Alaska, is the headquarters port, Fairbanks, Alaska.

In customs collection district No. 33, of which Great Falls, Mont., is the headquarters port, Plentywood, Mont.

In customs collection district No. 26, of which Duluth, Minn., is the headquarters port, Isle Royale, Mich.

In customs collection district No. 38, of which Detroit, Mich., is the headquarters port, Manistique and Petoskey, Mich.

In customs collection district No. 45, of which St. Louis, Mo., is the headquarters port, Cairo, Ill.

In customs collection district No. 46, of which Omaha, Nebr., is the headquarters port, Lincoln, Nebr.

CUSTOMS PORTS OF ENTRY CREATED.

In customs collection district No. 1, of which Portland, Me., is the headquarters port, Jackman, Frenchville, and Robbinston, Me.

In customs collection district No. 23, of which San Antonio, Tex., is the headquarters port, Hidalgo, Tex.

By Executive order dated September 30, 1922, the port of Carrabelle, in customs collection district No. 18 (Florida), was abolished.

By Executive order dated November 3, 1922, Seward, in customs collection district No. 31 (Alaska), was created a customs port of entry, with headquarters at Juneau, Alaska.

All of the above changes were dictated by considerations of economy and efficiency in the administration of customs and other statutes with the enforcement of which the customs service is charged, as well as the necessities and convenience of commerce generally.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 12, 1922.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 4100. An act to amend section 9 of the trading with the enemy act, as amended; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 2984. An act to provide for the issuance to John W. Stanton by the Secretary of the Interior of patent to certain land, upon payment therefor at the rate of $1.25 per acre; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the bill just passed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13316) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes; and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] if he has any requests for time?

Mr. OLIVER. I have a very limited number of requests for time, not exceeding 15 minutes. I feel that 15 minutes would be liberal to each side in the allotment of time. I am sure that the gentleman will concur in that view.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with general debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to dispense with general debate. Is there objection?

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there is an important provision in this bill dealing with immigration and the enforcement of that part of the law. The five-minute rule would not give a sufficient amount of time to explain to the Members of the House how this appropriation bill would affect the Immigration Service.

Mr. MADDEN. We will give the gentleman time to discuss that question.

Mr. CABLE. I would like to have an understanding that we will have as much time as we want.

Mr. MADDEN. That would not be reasonable. You might want a week.

Mr. CABLE. I want only a reasonable time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CABLE. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio objects.

Mr. MADDEN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the general debate be limited to 30 minutes, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] and the other half to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHREVE].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the general debate be limited to 30 minutes, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Alabama and the other half by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Is there objection?

Mr. CABLE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, how much of that time would be allotted to anyone with reference to the provision on immigration?

Mr. MADDEN. That will be for the gentleman who has charge of the bill to decide.

Mr. OLIVER. How much time would the gentleman like?

Mr. CABLE. I would like to have at least 10 minutes.

Mr. OLIVER. Very well.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHREVE], that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13316.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] will please take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13316, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13316, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13316) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. CABLE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I would like to know whether the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule will start to-morrow or to-day?

Mr. SHREVE. Not to-day. It depends on how late the House runs this afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHREVE] is recognized.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in submitting this bill, covering appropriations recommended by the House Committee on Appropriations for the fiscal year 1924 for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, I should like to call your attention before explaining the bill in detail to the attitude which governed our committee in making its calculations and recommendations and bringing the bill to you in its present form.

The committee has adhered strictly to the policy adopted by it in the handling of last year's bill by refraining from proposing any salary increases in this bill, proposing any additional statutory positions, or including new legislation, a good bit of which was found scattered throughout the estimates when our committee first took up their consideration. In only one instance has our committee exceeded the recommendations of the President in submitting his budget. This was occasioned by the estimate of $800,000 for carrying out the provisions of the act of November 23, 1921, entitled "For the promotion of the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy," which authorized an appropriation of $1,240,000 for a period of five years. The committee's action in adding $440,000 to the $800,000 estimate to make the total appropriation authorized will be explained later in detail. By making moderate reductions, however, throughout the bill where the committee saw fit, the bill carries $111,990 less than the original estimates.

This bill carries a total of $25,807,101, which is $100,407.69 more than was appropriated for the current fiscal year ending June 30, 1923. It is $111,990 less than was proposed in the original estimate. So we have kept ourselves safely within the estimates made by the Bureau of the Budget.

Of this amount the Department of Commerce carries $19,163,545 and the Department of Labor carries $6,643,556.

We made some increases in the Secretary's office. It is really very remarkable the work that is being done by the Department of Commerce, and we found on investigation that the Secretary has been paying clerks out of his own pocket. He must have the help. As far as possible under the organic act we endeavored to give that help. That is, we gave them a few additional clerks of the $1,800 class and less.

It was necessary to increase some incidental expenses, for the reason that the department has been called upon to take charge of various activities in the last year that were really not connected with the department, such as the coal inquiry and numerous other things that we might mention. The housing proposition is one of them.

You will remember that a year ago, when employment was at a standstill all over the United States, the matter was taken up by the Department of Commerce, and undoubtedly they had much to do with placing the 5,000,000 men who were at that time out of employment. I might mention the Bureau of the Census. The appropriation for that bureau is about $5,000 less than it was last year. This comes about by reason of the use of some mechanical inventions by which they are able to save that sum.

There was a condition that arose which I desire to explain to the House, because otherwise it might be misunderstood. The Bureau of the Census asked the Bureau of the Budget for $272,000 more than they had last year. The Bureau of the Budget concluded that they could not see their way clear to make that recommendation. The director of the bureau, feeling that he needed that much money, thought he should make a lump-sum reduction of about $272,000, and he discovered that the last cotton census would cost about $272,000, and therefore it occurred to him that one sum offset the other and that they could dispense with the taking of the cotton census. The committee felt that that was a very serious mistake, and after taking it up again with the director of the bureau we received a letter from him in which he stated that he had gone over the matter very carefully and that he had allotted $272,000 for taking the cotton census. So that will go on in the usual way, notwithstanding the statement you may find in the hearing, and the cotton census will be taken as usual.

I wish to call attention to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. This is one institution that I feel Congress should have a great pride in. You will recall that last year we made some additional appropriations. We gave the bureau some trade commissioners and commercial attachés and helped them in various ways. It is a great pleasure to report to the House that that money was amply justified; they have spent it in a splendid manner. They have brought back millions in trade to the United States with the use of a very small amount of money given them last year. For that reason we are going to make some slight increases this year—some that we feel that are justified.

I wish to call attention to the situation down in South America. There are increases there. While we increased the appropriation 70 per cent, their increase in actual trade inquiries is about 880 per cent. The same is true in the Far East. We increase their appropriation about 11 per cent and individual requests coming from manufacturers have increased over 400 per cent. In the same way the work from the field service has increased over 1,000 per cent. The exports have increased largely and inquiries have increased 419 per cent.

There is another matter of increase in the local office here to about 3,200 inquiries a day. You remember, before the war the principal export staples in the United States were wheat, corn, cotton, and tobacco—and not much corn. But to-day 47 per cent of the exports are manufactures and partly manufactured commodities, including manufactured flour, and so forth. This shows that we are reaching out among the small manufacturers, and it shows how they are informing themselves on the foreign trade. I might say that since the war we find that we require an entirely different kind of merchandise to what we did before the war. The inquiries come in from different parts of the country. Here is one from a paint manufacturer in regard to the restrictions on exports on English colors as compared with American colors. Here is a typographical concern asking in regard to the market for composing machines. Here is one from a bank wanting to know what effect the fluctuation of foreign currency has.

I think you all agree that export follows investment. That has been the secret of England's commercial success. The public utilities throughout the world are owned by British capital and that determines the amount of machinery that goes into these countries. British capital owns over $2,000,000,000 worth of railroads in South America, and they therefore dominate the railroad situation.

In the last year, 1921, foreign securities were sold in this country to the amount of $620,000,000. During the nine months of this year up to last month there were sold of foreign securities $1,200,000,000 in this country.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. Does the gentleman mean securities of foreign governments?

Mr. SHREVE. No. They are government securities as well as municipal securities; all kinds of securities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman five minutes of my time.

Mr. LONDON. How do they keep track of the sale of these securities?

Mr. SHREVE. It is a system of follow up. The Department of Commerce is a clearing house. Suppose a commissioner in India notifies the department that they want to build a steel bridge. They first find out the amount of money that would be expended, who is going to pay it, whether the security is safe, and all the information is forwarded to the department at Washington. They notify the steel-bridge companies in the United States that there is going to be the letting of a certain bridge contract.

Mr. LONDON. I understand that so far as the business part is concerned, but I am speaking of the actual sale of securities. How does the Government keep track of the sale of foreign securities?

Mr. SHREVE. I think the only way is through the banks.

Mr. LONDON. They get their information through the banks?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes. If there is a large issue, the matter is taken up by the Department of Commerce, but the information comes through the banks.

Mr. LONDON. The information probably is limited and is confined to that part of the information which is voluntarily furnished by interested bankers.

Mr. SHREVE. Not necessarily so.

Mr. LONDON. It is not complete.

Mr. SHREVE. It is as complete as it can be; I do not know how it can be more complete.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman speaks of some business secured in Rome. Who secured that?

Mr. SHREVE. One of our commercial trade attachés.

Mr. LITTLE. Connected with the embassy there?

Mr. SHREVE. No.

Mr. LITTLE. Connected with the consular service?

Mr. SHREVE. Not at all. He is one of the men sent out by the Department of Commerce from Washington, either a commercial attaché, or, in this case, a trade commissioner.

Mr. LITTLE. And he stops a while at one town and then goes on to another?

Mr. SHREVE. No. We have a man stationed at Rome. In nearly all of the important cities at this time we are asking for new trade commissioners. We want to place one in Budapest and another in Alexandria, Egypt, and another at Ottawa, Canada. And, by the way, we have $2,000,000,000 of invested capital in Canada. A great many Americans are wanting to invest in Canada and wondering if it is a good place to go and start a manufacturing plant. In some cases it is and in some cases it is not. Upon all of these things the department is called upon to advise the people of the United States.

Mr. LITTLE. Is there any report as to how these investments have succeeded?

Mr. SHREVE. Oh, they are entirely satisfied with the investments. I know of a case down in South America where the South American government is selling $70,000,000 worth of bonds for the purpose of electrifying some of their street railways.

Mr. LITTLE. What government?

Mr. SHREVE. I can not tell the gentleman. It is one of the South American countries. Those bonds are being sold in the United States. The United States is getting the contracts for that electrical equipment.

Mr. LITTLE. We take the bonds and get the money back by selling the material.

Mr. SHREVE. Yes; and that is something that we are doing in all of the countries. Over in Poland we helped out materially. We sold Poland this year the surplus of the war railway stock—that is, cars that could not be used in this country. We sold them several million dollars' worth of locomotives.

Mr. LITTLE. Did you sell the Government that?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes; to the Government.

Mr. LITTLE. The material was sold to private enterprise?

Mr. SHREVE. No; to the Government, but sales were also made to private enterprises.

Mr. LITTLE. Does anybody guarantee the Polish Government?

Mr. SHREVE. Oh, no. It is getting on in fine shape.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

[By unanimous consent, Mr. SHREVE was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. SHREVE. In this connection, I desire to call the attention of the Members of the House to a statement of the members of the British industries, which is as follows:

There is no organization in behalf of British firms or British associations more complete or up to date than the Commercial Bureau of the American Government trade department. No trouble is too great and expense is a secondary consideration to the securing of business to the United States of America. Whatever information an inquirer wants he gets at once, or it is obtained for him.

Without wishing to make any invidious comparisons as to the methods of America versus Great Britain—the British trade commissioners have an excellent reputation both for ability and enthusiastic devotion to duty, and British firms' representatives have a capacity and knowledge equally as great as the American—I am bound to remark that the emissaries from the United States of America carry out their missions, whether merely as investigators or actual seekers after orders, with a thoroughness, close application, and keenness that can not be denied.

The degree of American penetration into the South African field is not without its lessons.

Also, I desire to read an article published in the Times of Argentina of Monday, September 18, 1922. It is a British publication, printed in English in Buenos Aires, devoted to the interest of the British export and shipping.

The article follows:

[The Times of Argentina, Monday, September 18, 1922.]

By the miserly fashion of the upkeep of these foreign commercial services they have degenerated into something little better than a joke, while the American trade commissioners and other officials serving in the capacity of foreign trade investigators for the Department of Commerce at Washington have been increasing in numbers and usefulness. That the growth and support of American trade in Latin America owes much to the activities of American Government trade representatives abroad is now an absolutely established and recognized fact. * * *

American trade representatives acting in these Latin American countries under orders from Washington are going about their jobs in the right way. Where there is very strenuous competition in any given line the representative is very apt to be instructed to purchase a full collection of samples of the foreign articles with which the American manufacturer is required to compete. The article may, to take only one example, be shoes. * * *

Even if we had never before been disposed to attach any value to the services of commercial attachés and other Government representatives ostensibly employed for the furtherance of foreign trade our observations of the results of the strengthening of the American service of Government trade commissioners would be sufficient to convince us that if it is done properly the business has wonderful possibilities. But if British trade representatives were to attempt to keep pace with their American confrères and rivals they would have to learn first of all the gentle art of teasing money out of thin air. * * *

It is interesting to get these little tributes from our rivals. They appreciate the fact more and more that small American manufacturers are now taking advantage of our service and that the competition presented by the Americans is therefore much more than it was in the days when we just had a few larger export houses, and the following resolution was passed by the National Association of Credit Men, having a membership of 38,000, at their annual meeting at Atlantic City during the week ended September 30, 1922:

We recognize that liberal credits must be extended if we are to maintain a secure foothold in foreign trade. The exhaustion of facilities in other countries for buying of us other than on liberal credit terms must be appreciated and our arrangements accordingly made.

The intensiveness of our domestic commerce has diminished the understanding generally that an outlet is needed for some of our commodities in other countries. A careful survey, however, clearly reveals this potent fact that the maximum of our productive powers can not be absorbed in internal trade. Some of our production must find its way into other countries.

Granting the correctness of this thesis, it is desirable not alone but exceedingly wise for our Government to devote more attention and more of its resources to the cultivation of foreign trade. Congress in its appropriations should be reasonably generous to this end. The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce should be granted sufficient resources for the carrying on of its various agencies and plans without financial restrictions that our foreign trade may be effectively assisted by this governmental agency. When taking into account the appropriations made annually for the conduct of various agencies of the Government it will be clearly seen that the proportion for this particular work is much too small.

Foreign trade is an important factor in the maintaining of our prosperity and the Nation at large should become more familiar with its direct relations to our commerce.

I desire to call the attention of the gentlemen of the House to a resolution from the American Manufacturers' Export Association, which represents some 700 of the leading exporters in the country, indorsing very emphatically the work of the bureau. This resolution was passed October 26 last:

Resolved, That the American Manufacturers' Export Association in convention assembled desires to express its deep appreciation of the assistance which the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce has rendered to its various members in the development of their foreign trade. This help in all its various phases has been a vital factor in the growth of American export business. The association has noted with satisfaction the gradual expansion of the facilities of this bureau, the broadening scope of its work, and the improvements in its organization and personnel brought about under the direction of Secretary Herbert Hoover and Dr. Julius Klein, and it now desires to record its emphatic opinion that this department should receive from the Director of the Budget and the Appropriations Committees of the Congress most favorable consideration in the matter of the appropriation of funds for its maintenance and enlargement.

We urge that nothing be done to interfere with the normal expansion of the useful work of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, and that the plans of its directors to increase its scope be accorded favorable consideration.

The Steamboat Inspection Service appropriation is $900,740, which is $5,400 less than the current appropriation. This decrease is due to the reduction of several steamboat inspectors which the service could do without.

The Bureau of Navigation's appropriation is recommended at $381,390, an increase over the current appropriation of $24,200, of which $15,000 is to be used for the enforcement of navigation laws and $9,200 for the enforcement of wireless communication laws. The bureau, however, is distinctly a revenue-producing unit, the amount of revenue for 1922 totaling $2,075,219.94, and the commissioner stated that with the $15,000 increase for enforcement of navigation laws the amount of revenue would be considerably increased next year.

The appropriation for the Bureau of Standards as recommended is $1,642,360. The estimates called for an increase of $195,000, of which the committee recommended $95,000. This increase is made up of small additions of $5,000 to $20,000 to different items in the bureau to enable it to handle the increased number of investigations and studies it has been called on to undertake, and also to start several new investigations.

The Bureau of Lighthouses carries $8,266,290, which is $85,500 less than the current appropriation, and $175,500 less than the estimates called for. Fifty thousand dollars was deducted under "salaries, lighthouse vessels," due to the reduction of salary scales. Under the item "Public works" the estimate called for a lump-sum appropriation of $738,500, with an itemized statement supplementing the request showing the estimate of one tender, three light vessels, and repairs to fifth lighthouse district. After careful deliberation the committee decided, in view of the fact that last year nine vessels suitable for making over into tenders were obtained from the War Department's mine-planter service, and five light vessels appropriated for several years ago are still being built, to make an itemized appropriation, as follows:

For the completion of one light vessel, hull of which was furnished by Standard Oil Co. in replacement of light vessel sunk by one of her tankers	$90,000
For one new light vessel	150,000
Construction and repairs to depot, Portsmouth, Va., fifth lighthouse district	154,500
Standard Rock Light Station, Mich	30,000
Repairs to Barnegat Lighthouse	100,000
Erie, Pa., and vicinity, aids to navigation	38,500
Total	563,000

For the Coast and Geodetic Survey the appropriation recommended is $2,186,275, which is $26,860 less than the current appropriation and $49,740 less than the estimate. This reduction was due to the amount of $36,160 for repairs of vessels which was added last year through a deficiency for alterations and not repairs to several vessels turned over to the Coast Survey by the Navy Department.

The Bureau of Fisheries appropriation is $1,222,590, which is $39,500 less than the current appropriation and $21,500 less than the estimate. This reduction was due to the elimination of an item for constructon and repair of stations carried in a deficiency of $40,000 which was not carried in this year's bill.

For the Secretary of Labor's office there is an increase of $40,663.89, making this year's appropriation $636,480. This is due to the addition of several commissioners of conciliation.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics' appropriation remains the same, at $242,260.

The Bureau of Immigration appropriation is recommended at $3,176,766, which is $335,464 less than the current appropriation. Three hundred thousand dollars of this decrease was carried originally for the deportation of aliens. The Bureau of the Budget in making the reduction did so upon the premises that most of the seditious aliens had been deported, and that the balance of deportable aliens could be handled by the bureau at the port of arrival. The bureau did not convince the committee that they needed this amount back again.

The Bureau of Naturalization appropriation of $697,010 remains the same.

CHILDREN'S BUREAU.

Referring again to the maternity act you will all recall that the act passed in 1921 called for an appropriation of $1,240,000. The act also stipulated how this money should be divided among the States. Five thousand dollars was first to go to each State, and afterwards another $5,000, and then a division of all the funds between the States pro rata should follow.

As a matter of fact, only about $600,000 of this money was used, and when the Bureau of the Budget came to consider it they thought that if they estimated for about $800,000 it would probably cover all the requirements of this activity. But it was a very remarkable thing that no one seemed to understand the reason for this reduction, and everybody took it for granted immediately that that meant an entirely new distribution to the States and a new ratio of the money that was to be distributed, and the working out of an entirely new system. At first we thought we would like to keep within the recommendation of the Budget and keep this amount below $800,000, as recommended; but after giving the matter very careful consideration—and I will say that the whole committee are a unit on the subject—we concluded that it was a matter of such vital importance that inasmuch as we could make this appropriation of $1,240,000 and still keep within the total estimate made by the Bureau of the Budget for the two departments, it was a wise thing to do, because, when you stop to think about it for a moment, that act of Congress was a solemn and binding contract between the United States Government and the various States, and it was deemed unwise for us to begin to do anything in Congress that would look like breaking that contract. And while, as a matter of fact, we felt that the appropriation could be distributed in such a way that the act of Congress would be carried out in detail, yet, as I said, we were unable to make anybody see it, so we came to the conclusion that the wise thing under the circumstances was to include the appropriation as originally provided in the act to the amount of $1,240,000, notwithstanding we believe that a considerable portion of that money will not be used.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. How much of that money was used last year?

Mr. SHREVE. About $600,000.

Mr. LITTLE. How much do you anticipate will be used this year?

Mr. SHREVE. Around $800,000, or possibly more. Of course, there are a number of the States that have not been heard from. I think 35 States have submitted propositions through arrangements made with their governors. Later on the legislatures may not ratify the arrangements made by the governors.

Mr. LITTLE. Can the States that have not been heard from draw the remaining $600,000 later?

Mr. SHREVE. I think there is no limit as to the States whose legislatures have not met since the passage of the act.

Mr. LITTLE. Does that mean that 10 years from now the States could take this accumulated fund, if they do not draw it now?

Mr. SHREVE. The act says six months after the adjournment of the legislature. Any State whose legislature meets this year that fails to act within six months after the adjournment of the legislature would seem to be barred from any further participation in the fund, although I am not an authority on the subject.

Mr. LITTLE. Is there anything in the law which indicates that they would be barred?

Mr. SHREVE. No; except the provision I have referred to.

Mr. LITTLE. Does not the gentleman think there ought to be a definite provision on that subject?

Mr. SHREVE. We understand that they will be barred six months after the legislature adjourns, if they have taken no action.

Mr. LITTLE. Does not the gentleman think there should be legislation providing that at some time the States can not draw any more money?

Mr. SHREVE. It would seem so. I think the gentleman from Kansas is absolutely right about that proposition.

The Woman's Bureau calls for an appropriation of $105,000, which is $5,000 over last year's appropriation.

The Employment Service carries $210,000, which is $15,000 less than last year.

There is a permanent annual appropriation of $25,000 added in the estimate to the Department of Labor.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CABLE].

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the record vote in this House shows that the Members are overwhelmingly in favor of restricted immigration. A year ago the Committee on Appropriations saw fit to cut down the amount of money to be used by the Immigration Service to $3,300,000. As a result many employees were furloughed for one month without pay. Since March 4, 1921, over 400 employees have been released from the service. This year the Committee on Appropriations has seen fit to make another cut in the Immigration Service, reducing the amount from $3,300,000 to $3,000,000, as appears in line 2, page 48, of this appropriation bill. The way to kill a law is to reduce the appropriation to so small a sum the object of the law can not be carried out. This appropriation will prevent the proper enforcement of the 3 per cent law. In the first place, 228 men in that service will have to be released from the service entirely. In the second place, the 3 per cent law creates more work, because of the numerous appeals by the immigrants excluded at the ports. In addition to that, from Canada, from Cuba, from Mexico, these immigrants who were or would have been excluded at the ports are now coming into the United States. If we cut this appropriation for the Immigration Service down it will also mean that aliens in this country who have no right to be here will remain, because the Government has no money to discover these aliens who should be deported and to deport them.

I also wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that a year ago we passed a law imposing upon the Department of Labor and the Immigration Service the duty of deporting aliens found guilty of violating the narcotic law. It will mean that with the proposed appropriation the law will stand on the statute books with no force and effect, and the aliens found guilty of violating that law will not be deported. That law went into effect since the last appropriation bill, but no appropriation was ever made to carry out its provisions. Further, when the aliens come to the various ports they must be given prompt attention. It is the duty of the immigration officials to determine whether the alien should be admitted. If you are going to cut down the number of inspectors and officials at these ports, it means that the immigrants will have to stay there many days or it means that the limited number of inspectors can not give them the kind of an examination they should have before permitting them to enter or to debar them.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CABLE. Yes.

Mr. SIEGEL. The important question involved here is this: Two years ago we had 731 employees at Ellis Island, where 85 per cent of all of the immigrants come into the country. With this cut we will reduce the number by 228, in addition to having had the whole force last year put off for one month without pay. The effect probably can not be realized by merely stating that 228 men will be laid off, but they are going to be put off at Ellis Island, and when you did not have the quota law and the visé law you had 731 men.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman give the number of immigrants two years ago when we had the larger quota of 731 as compared to the restricted number to-day?

Mr. SIEGEL. We are getting approximately now 300,000 and we used to get 600,000, but that does not mean half the proposition. You have the visés and the passports to be examined, the literacy test to be fulfilled, and the quota law to be enforced. You say to these men that you are getting $1,400 a month; that you will be put off for one month without pay; and the customs men get extra pay for extra hours, and these men often work seven days a week.

Mr. CABLE. Yes; and in addition to that there are more appeals coming up to the Secretary of Labor than before, and that requires additional expense. I want to call the attention of the House to this particular thing. The Bureau of Immigration is the only bureau that I know of that is a paying concern. The immigrant pays $8 head tax, and the steamship companies are assessed fines for bringing the immigrants here illegally, and a paying proposition is certainly entitled to some consideration. If you can not enforce the law you can not restrict immigration.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CABLE. I will.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What part of the immigrants will now come in during the first five months? I refer to the months during which the quota is exhausted from the countries which send in a considerable number of immigrants now.

Mr. CABLE. I will answer the gentleman. In some countries they exhaust their quota in five, six, or seven months. What kind of men do we expect to keep? If you are going to give them a job for six months and release them for the other six months, what kind of a service do you expect? We have to keep these men and keep them for the year around. The law should be amended to admit 10 per cent instead of 20 per cent a month.

Mr. BOX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CABLE. I will.

Mr. BOX. Is it not true that the House, on the theory that the volume of business handled by this department has been increased, created an additional Assistant Secretary of Labor?

Mr. CABLE. I am glad the gentleman called attention to that. The work has increased so much we needed an additional Secretary of Labor.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, that is for appeals; not the kind of work about which the gentleman is speaking.

Mr. CABLE. The Assistant Secretary of Labor gets a regular salary, but at the same time at Ellis Island they have to make up these appeal cases. They have to take testimony and it takes many additional inspectors and officials to attend to this business. The more aliens debarred the more the appeals and the more work as a result.

Mr. BOX. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. CABLE. I will.

Mr. BOX. Is it not true that these appeals are made at the point where this work is being done and, of course, the number of appeals represents an increased amount of business to handle at those places?

Mr. CABLE. That is correct, because the more immigrants who are refused admission, the more are the employees who are required to do the work. If you can not enforce the immigration law you are going to have this country overrun with aliens here unlawfully. We have 3,000 Chinese in the city of New York alone who are there illegally competing with American labor. The question for this House to determine is, Are you going to enforce the immigration laws or will the Committee on Appropriations break them down?

Mr. MADDEN. Why does not the Department of Labor insist that the shipping companies who brought these Chinese in carry out the conditions of the bond—all these people are bonded—and not let these men escape?

Mr. CABLE. They are following our law. These Chinese sailors have a right to 60 days in port, and they escape, and many can not be located there in New York. These aliens are coming over the Canadian border, they are coming from Cuba, and they are coming from Mexico. We have to rid this country of them or the law will be broken down.

Mr. MADDEN. If we were to prevent everybody who wants to come over the Canadian border from coming in we would have to have a million inspectors.

Mr. CABLE. You do not need a million, but you should not cut down the appropriation so the few guards on the border will be relieved from the service. Then, what good would the law do?

Mr. STAFFORD. We would need a million enforcement officers to keep the bootleggers from crossing the border.

Mr. CABLE. As far as the prohibition service is concerned, we have appropriated $9,000,000, and as far as this bill is concerned, you have appropriated but $3,000,000. Let us see that our immigration laws are enforced by a fair appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time for general debate has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 13, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, Thou hast made us for Thyself and we can not rest excepting we rest in Thee. Grant that our very restlessness may appeal unto us, exhorting us to find rest in Him who hath said, "Come unto me and I will give you rest," so that amid the tumult and anxiety, the perplexity and storm of life, we may find ourselves qualified for every duty as the soul finds its poise in Thyself. We ask in Jesus' name. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. JONES of Washington and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

NOMINATION OF PIERCE BUTLER TO SUPREME COURT.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask to have read at the desk, so that it may appear in the RECORD, a short editorial which appeared this morning in the Washington Herald upon the recent appointment of Mr. Pierce Butler to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. This editorial quotes from an address recently delivered by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER], commends the portion of his address quoted, submits some general comment upon the decisions of the Supreme Court, and the need for removal measures in the public interest.

I also ask that it be printed in 8-point type.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The reading clerk read as follows:

BUTLER'S NOMINATION TO UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

[From the Washington Herald, December 13, 1922.]

"President Harding has again nominated Pierce Butler for the Supreme Court, and his nomination is again before the Senate for confirmation.

"What public service has Pierce Butler rendered? What is his real character? Whom has he served? Whom will he serve?

"Why was Pierce Butler selected to be a justice of that court which has become the most autocratic power in the world—a power that can nullify an act of Congress; a power whose decisions no other authority can overthrow?

"The leader of the bar in Pennsylvania, GEORGE WHARTON PEPPER, now United States Senator, said recently before a bar association:

"'It really should not surprise us if there are multitudes to-day who stand aghast when suddenly they realize the opinions of a bare majority of nine justices may nullify the expressed will of the National Legislature.

"'Two facts stare these earnest men in the face. One is that the Supreme Court recently declared the Federal child labor law unconstitutional. The other is that the Supreme Court recently declared the consequence of civic liability for torts attaches to unincorporated labor unions in the same way in which such liability would attach to groups of people associated for business purposes.

"'Such judicial decisions seem to many honest people symptoms of a judicial tyranny. Multitudes of people personify the judiciary and honestly think its functioning in some cases a usurpation as unjustified as any king ever attempted to do to a parliament.'

"It is true that the Federal judiciary is being attacked on many sides, justly or unjustly, and that the convention of an American organization having 3,000,000 members recently demanded practically unanimously that Congress shall be granted the same power to override a decision of the Supreme Court that it has to override a President's veto.

"Senator LA FOLLETTE has proposed a constitutional amendment to that effect.

"We firmly believe that some way must be found to curb the tendencies of reactionary judges who nullify progressive legislation simply because the judges do not approve such legislation.

"If some way is not found to curb such judges we shall all soon be in peril of revolution in this country, not from any band of 'reds' but from our judicial autocrats.

"Revolutionary acts are not less revolutionary if done by men at the top than if done by men at the bottom.

"There are three orderly ways of curbing judges who usurp the powers of legislators:

"1. By constitutional amendment.

"2. By making all judicial offices elective.

"3. By confiding to the people the power to recall reactionary judges.

"The only way to stop the present very insistent demand for one or all of these measures is to stop appointing as judges men of reactionary minds, or men so used to serving railroads, public-service corporations, or purse potentates generally that to them the rights of capital have become paramount to all other rights.

"All that the public yet knows of Pierce Butler is that he represented the railroads before the Interstate Commerce Commission in the effort to increase the so-called book value of the railroads as a basis for future rate making.

"It is entirely honorable for a lawyer to have a railroad among his clients, but no lawyer selected and recommended by the railroads or by other public-service corporations should ever be made Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

"It is, therefore, most important to know who are Mr. Pierce Butler's real sponsors and what are his real character and his fitness for the place."

Mr. PEPPER subsequently said: Mr. President, I am informed that this morning there was ordered printed in the RECORD, by unanimous consent, a newspaper editorial containing, among other things, a statement attributed to me in the course of an address delivered by me in June last before the New Hampshire Bar Association. In order that a more complete statement of what I said on that occasion may accompany the comments that were made upon it, I ask unanimous consent to have that address in its entirety printed in the RECORD in the usual RECORD type.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

LAWYERS AND SENATORS.

An address delivered by GEORGE WHARTON PEPPER before the Bar Association of New Hampshire, at Portsmouth, N. H., on June 24, 1922.

Senator PEPPER spoke as follows:

"Mr. President and members of the Bar Association, about six months ago I was as much absorbed in the practice of the profession as are any of you. There was the usual list of cases for trial and argument. If anybody had told me that I had a duty to discharge which outranked attention to these I should have laughed him to scorn. One day the Governor of Pennsylvania, without a moment's warning, drafted me for public service. Within a week thereafter I was sitting in the Senate of the United States endeavoring to discover whether I had been translated into a new world or whether I was looking at the same old world from a different point of view.

"Six months of observation have convinced me that it is the same world that I knew before, but that the angle of vision is altogether different.

"It has accordingly occurred to me that on this occasion it might be interesting to my professional brethren if for the discussion of a question of law I were to substitute a comment upon some of the points of agreement and difference between the work of a practicing lawyer and the daily task of a Senator of the United States.

"As far as one's colleagues are concerned, it is in the Senate much as it is at the bar. A picked body of American men is sure to be an agreeable group of people to work with. Of course, your intimates are apt to be men of the same political faith. Within the party there are naturally those to whom you are much more strongly drawn than others. Among those who have shown marked consideration to a new Senator and have impressed him as possessing in eminent degree all the most important senatorial qualifications I should like to mention the two distinguished Senators from New Hampshire, Senator MOSES and Senator KEYES.

"As to the manner of men who compose the Senate it would be highly improper for me to speak. I am aware of the existence of a widespread impression that Senators of to-day compare unfavorably with the great Senators of the past. This criticism has a familiar sound. We lawyers have been humbled since youth by the comforting assurance that the brightest ornaments of the bench and bar died about the time we were admitted to practice. In the case of Senators critics attribute our inferiority to the combined operation of direct primaries and the election of Senators by popular vote. Undoubtedly Senators are to-day within easy range of public opinion. They are therefore subject to powerful and constant pressure to abdicate the function of representative and to assume that of an instructed delegate. Even if at first the quick succession of campaigns has a tendency to make the senatorial mouth responsive to the popular bit, I am not at all sure that Senators are going to yield habitually to this pressure. If as a class they do not, their fiber will be the better for the test, and it is at least possible that the American people will respect and trust men with minds of their own even if the same American people choose to keep the power of direct selection in their own hands.

"In this connection it must not be forgotten that, if the senatorial type has changed, so has the world. The world of to-day differs at least as much from the world of 1850 as any present-day Senator differs from Daniel Webster. It seems to me useless to attempt comparisons between things that are so unlike. One characteristic of the earlier day was the prevalence of fixed beliefs on multitudes of subjects. This implied reverence for authority and respect for law. I remember having heard my father-in-law, Prof. George Park Fisher, say that when in his youth in Massachusetts a public question presented itself most people would hold their judgment in suspense till Mr. Webster had pronounced his opinion. To-day there is less reverence for authority and still less respect for law. Instead of being proud of yourself when you agree with your Senator you are proud of your Senator when he agrees with you.

"The truth is that dogmatism is to-day in at least partial eclipse. Relatively few people are content to accept experience at second hand. And there are multitudes whose unhappy first-hand experiences with things as they are make them most hospitable to all sorts of schemes for changing everything for the better.

"Now, this does not indicate to me that the bottom is dropping out of civilization or that there are no ultimate truths. It indicates to me that the world has changed too fast for our capacity to interpret it. The world of 1850 has been fairly well explored by able men of thought and action. They had become qualified guides because they knew the woods. They could tell you what course to follow, where to find water, and how to make camp. If you followed them, they would lead you on to civilization. But to-day the woods have changed. Scientific discovery and industrial development have made the old wood signs worthless. We have plenty of men who have the quality which makes guides reliable. But they are not yet guides; they are explorers. The public man of 1850 was the captain of a trans-Atlantic liner sailing a well-charted sea. The public man of 1922 is a Champlain feeling his way along the stern and rock-bound coast with nothing but the lead and compass to depend upon.

"All of which means that dogmatism is in eclipse because no human mind has yet comprehended the twentieth century. Therefore nobody is qualified to tell the world with valid authority just how to solve its problems. A man with fixed beliefs should reexamine them fearlessly in their application to the new environment and commend his conclusions to others, not as demonstrable but as probably true. He must be patient with those who refuse to accept them or who in the meanwhile are proclaiming their opposites. Columbus must have sympathized with his boatload of skeptics although he knew there was land ahead. I often remind myself of a wise saying of Leslie Stephen, which Mr. Balfour prints at the beginning of one of his books. 'A doctrine,' says Stephen, 'is first received as an intuitive truth, standing beyond all need of demonstration; then it becomes the object of rigid demonstration; afterwards the demonstration ceases to be conclusive and is merely probable; and, finally, the effort is limited to demonstrating that there is no conclusive reason on the other side. In the later stages of our belief the show of demonstration is mere bluster, or is useful only to trip an antagonist.'

"To us lawyers many things are self-evident which to others are far from clear.

"I try to bear this in mind as I sit in my place in the Senate and hear perhaps an attack upon the Supreme Court of the United States. You and I have what we regard as a just appreciation of the place of the judiciary in our national life. We think we know what the Supreme Court of the United States has meant to us from the beginning. Knowledge in our case has brought reverence. When somebody attacks American courts in general, or the Supreme Court in particular, we are moved to resent it almost as we would blasphemy.

"If we pause to think for a moment it would occur to us that the doctrine of Marbury against Madison is one of the doctrines to which Leslie Stephen might have applied the language which I have just quoted. Every organized government must place its ultimate trust either in the executive, or in the legislature, or in the judiciary. Germany deified the executive, with the consequences that are familiar to us. England has placed her supreme trust in Parliament, and Parliament has proved to be the palladium of English liberty. The wisdom and courage of Marshall, more than any other factors, account for the way in which we as a Nation have pinned our faith to the court. It is clear to us that nine selected men, with life tenure of office, and a written Constitution to guide them, can safely be trusted to determine the conformity or nonconformity of legislative enactments to the prescriptions of the Constitution, and may be allowed the authority to invalidate legislation found to be in conflict therewith. Yet I keep reminding myself that in the first instance it took a long while to reconcile many men trained as we are to assent to this proposition, and that it really would not surprise us if there are multitudes to-day who stand aghast when suddenly they realize that the opinions of a bare majority of nine justices may nullify the expressed will of the National Legislature. We ought not to become emotional as we read the proceedings of the last few days in the convention of the American Federation of Labor at Cincinnati. Two facts stare these earnest men in the face. One is that the Supreme Court recently declared the Federal child labor law unconstitutional; the other is that the Supreme Court recently declared that the consequence of civil liability for torts attaches to unincorporated labor unions in the same way in which such liability would attach to groups of people associated for business purposes. These judicial decisions, which seem to us so normal and inevitable, seem to them like symptoms of a judicial tyranny. They personify the judiciary and honestly think of its functioning as if it were just as much of a usurpation as anything that king ever attempted to do to parliament. Accordingly, they propose an amendment to the Constitution giving to Congress the right by a two-thirds vote to reverse a decision of the Supreme Court.

"To me as an American lawyer this is almost a challenge to fight. To me as a Senator of the United States this is a warning that I must not resort to dogmatism to win acceptance for my fixed beliefs. It is my business to reexamine the whole subject and to interpret judicial supremacy to my fellow citizens as on the whole the best solution of an inherently difficult governmental problem. Even as a practicing lawyer it seemed to me that most members of the bar were unintelligent and perverse in their refusal to see the conditions which gave rise to Theodore Roosevelt's proposal of a recall of judicial decisions. When it comes to a congressional veto of decisions of the Supreme Court I hope that American lawyers will act like statesmen with convictions rather than like old-fashioned orthodoxy in the presence of heretical utterance.

"As I sit in the Senate I am called upon from time to time to consider the possibility of political relationships with Russia. If I were to think only as an American lawyer it would be hard for me, with the precedents of our own Revolution and of the French Revolution clearly in my mind, to reach any other conclusion than that recognition of the Soviet Republic is the logical course to pursue. I must remind myself, however, that possibly a controlling consideration is in this case neither political nor legal, but economic. To what extent is international intercourse possible between a government which has nationalized property and a government in which the many are content to recognize the private property rights of those who can acquire them?

"I find myself of the fixed belief that a recognition of private rights in property has been a concomitant of the world's progress. I find myself unable to imagine satisfactory relations of any sort between those who hold this view and those who agree to Proudhon's assertion that private property is theft. Therefore I find myself approving the attitude on the question of recognition taken by our Government. At the same time I am bound to realize, if I am to understand all of my constituents and not merely some of them, that there are multitudes of people in the United States to whom you can not dogmatize in regard to private ownership. I should not be surprised to find our colleges fairly well provided with teachers and students to whom the relative advantages of property privately owned and property nationalized is a mere matter of probable opinion, together with a very considerable number who are convinced that capitalism is always and everywhere an evil. Outside of the colleges we know how widely held these opinions are. Three factors enter into the formation of such opinions. The one which the champion of private property rights delights to emphasize is coveteousness, or the desire to get something for nothing. But the other two factors are the ones which it is more wholesome for me to emphasize, namely, the tyranny and selfishness which have too often characterized the dominion of the private owner. As lawyers, we know that ownership is the word we use to describe the combination of control and enjoyment. When the lawyer in me is irritated by the propaganda of communism I try to force the Senator to remember that exaggerated control is tyranny and that immoderate enjoyment is selfishness.

"The question of law enforcement is popularly thought of just now in connection with prohibition enforcement. In considering this aspect of the matter there are three people to be taken into consideration, and not two. In addition to the lawyer and the Senator, there is the man with the thirst. It is said to be hard to stay honest when you are hungry. I am certain that it is difficult to think clearly when you are thirsty. The adoption of the eighteenth amendment by a strictly constitutional process has produced a situation with which the lawyer and the Senator ought to be content, but which is extremely unwelcome to the thirsty man. Accordingly, the thirsty man produces statistics to show the failure of prohibition, and the man who is only a lawyer remembers his oath to support the Constitution and laws, and stands committed to the policy of enforcement. It seems to me to be the business of the Senator to do what he can to insure such a long continued and honest experiment in prohibition and law enforcement as will make it reasonably possible to decide whether the thirsty man sees things as they actually are, or only as he would like to see them. It is likewise the duty of the Senator to keep his mind open for a fair consideration of any concrete proposal to amend existing enforcement legislation. I say frankly, however, that so far no concrete amendatory proposal that has been brought to my attention seems to be deserving of adoption or support.

"In this imperfect way I am rehearsing to you what has gone on in my own mind as I have sought to relate my training as a lawyer to the discharge of my duty as a Senator. I pass over without mention various minor contrasts, which have interested me greatly, between the procedure to which we have been accustomed in court and the procedure to which I suppose I shall become accustomed in the Senate. Such things are subordinate to my main purpose, which is to assert three propositions, as follows:

"My first proposition is that merely because dogmatism is for the time being in partial eclipse is no indication that there are not ultimate truths. Astronomical theories may at a given time be discredited, but the stars keep on shining.

"My second proposition is that during the eclipse of dogmatism those of us who are in senatorial office and hold fixed beliefs will do well to reexamine them for the purpose of interpreting them reasonably to people by whom they are not shared, instead of scolding vociferously those whose life problem is different from ours.

"My third proposition is that such fixed principles as the doctrine of Marbury against Madison, the right of private property, and the obligation to respect an unwelcome law, have had a sufficiently long trial in America to justify the hopeful belief that when the period of eclipse is passed the American people will announce with no uncertain voice their intention to stand fast in the ancient ways."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. JONES of Washington resumed and concluded the speech begun by him yesterday, as follows:

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, yesterday afternoon just before I concluded I had, in response to questions by the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], made some statements with reference to the discriminating-duty policy of our country and also with reference to section 34 of the merchant marine act of 1920. While the statements then made, I think, were substantially correct, I have prepared a clearer and more comprehensive statement with reference to those two propositions, and I ask unanimous consent that I may place it in my remarks, in the nature of a revision and addition to the statements made on those particular subjects.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

"For the sake of accuracy I should like to add a little to what was said last evening on the subject of discriminating import duties and tonnage dues. In the initial tariff act of July 4, 1789, provision was first made for the application of discriminating duties, first by a discount of 10 per cent of the duty on imports in American vessels, but the next year, as previously stated, this method of applying the policy was reversed, and thereafter the regular duty was collected of imports in American vessels, but in addition to that an increase of 10 per cent of the duty was added to imports in foreign vessels. The effect of this change was to prevent any depletion of the National Treasury through the operation of the law. Subsequently, and the same year, 1789, the tonnage dues imposed on American vessels was 6 cents per gross ton and on foreign vessels 50 cents a ton, or more than eight times more on foreign than on American vessels. For a time this foreign rate was made $1 per ton, and during Jefferson's first administration for a brief time the rate on foreign vessels was fixed at $2 a ton, but all the while it remained constant at 6 cents a ton on American vessels.

"When this policy was first applied, American vessels were carrying but 23 per cent of the foreign commerce of the United States. But with the application of the discriminating-duty policy in five years American vessels were carrying 90 per cent of our imports and exports, and but for the brief period of the War of 1812 American ships carried 90 per cent of the foreign trade of the United States until 1830, a period of 35 years.

"It should be said that the early tariff laws provided particularly heavy discriminatory rates on imports of teas of different kinds, and so great was the disparity between the duties on imports of teas in American vessels as compared with the rates on foreign vessels that the report of the American Institute in 1826 declared that not a single pound of tea had entered the ports of the United States except in vessels of the United States since the first discriminating duty was applied, 37 years previously.

"In respect to the commercial convention exchanged between the United States and Great Britain in 1815, it is worthy of note that its adoption effected practically no change in the proportion of carriage of American foreign commerce in American vessels. That is explained in this way: The convention confined the suspension of the application of the discriminating duty policy merely to imports into the ports of the United States from 'His Brittanic Majesty's possessions of Europe'—practically speaking, Great Britain—and, vice versa, in the ports of Great Britain no discrimination was made against American vessels carrying from the United States goods, wares, and merchandise that were the growth, production, and manufacture of the United States. In short, the convention limited the 'reciprocal liberty of commerce,' which was the reverse of the discriminating-duty policy, merely to the direct trade between the United States and British European ports.

"The fact that the discrimination was lifted from imports from British ports of Europe when brought in British vessels, it should be recalled, was applicable only to imports from such possessions that were the growth, production, and manufacture thereof. As Great Britain then was, even more so than now, the great transshipment country of the world, from which goods that were the growth, production, and manufacture of all parts of the world were reexported, it followed that large quantities of the goods brought to this country in British vessels were not the growth, production, and manufacture of British possessions of Europe, and were not, therefore, entitled to exemption from the discriminating duty. It is this fact that accounts for the convention of 1815 doing so little—nothing at all, in fact—to increase British proportional carriage of our imports and exports.

"In 1828 Congress passed an act providing for the suspension of the collection of discriminating duties through a proclamation to be issued by the President whenever he became satisfied that the ships of other nations had ceased to discriminate against American vessels and their goods in the ports of other nations. From time to time other nations took advantage of that act of 1828, and not only was this followed by the issuance of the President's proclamation suspending the collection of discriminating duties in all such specific cases but this was followed by the exchange of trade treaties—all terminable trade treaties, by the way—by which this Nation bound itself no longer to discriminate against foreign ships and their goods in our ports in respect to all such nations as agreed to treat our vessels and their goods in their ports the same as they treated their own.

"It is worth noting that British ships during all of the years from the adoption of our first tariff act in 1789 until 1840 carried an average of 80 per cent of all of the imports and exports of the United States carried by foreign vessels; and even after 1840 the share of our foreign trade carried by foreign ships was three-fourths British and but one-fourth in other foreign ships. British ships were unable to take advantage of our act of 1828 until 1850, because Great Britain did not cease to discriminate against American ships and their goods—except in the direct trade as provided in the convention of 1815—until January 1, 1850. At that time American ships were carrying nearly 75 per cent of the imports and exports of the United States. As a matter of fact, from 1789 until 1861 the average of our foreign commerce carried in American ships was 80 per cent. For 72 years four-fifths of the entire foreign commerce of the United States was carried in American vessels.

"At the outbreak of the Civil War in 1861 American ships were even then carrying two-thirds of all of our imports and exports. The reason there was not a greater decline in the proportion of our foreign commerce in American vessels after Great Britain ceased to discriminate against our ships and their goods from all parts of the world was due to the great impetus given to our shipping during practically 61 successive years of the application of protection to our shipping through the policy of discriminating import duties and tonnage dues. In addition, there was a great demand for the fine clippers of the United States during the decade from 1850 to 1860, because of the discovery of gold in California, afterwards in Australia; and, besides, British merchant ships were diverted during the period of the Crimean War from commercial to war service. All of these different circumstances prevented a more rapid decline of the proportion of our foreign trade carried in our own ships.

"Another factor that helped to disguise our proportional losses of our own foreign carrying was the fact that there was during the last decade before the outbreak of the Civil War a large increase in our tonnage in foreign trade—it nearly doubled, in fact—although we were steadily but gradually losing out in percentage of our own foreign carrying in our own ships.

"Even in those ante-bellum days American ships cost more to build than the ships of most other countries; but they sailed faster and made much quicker voyages, and they carried their cargoes so free from damages that for many years American ships enjoyed higher freight rates than their foreign rivals. Our ships always cost more to operate than foreign ships cost. But the protection the discriminating-duty policy gave to our ships more than offset all of the losses due to higher cost of construction and operation under the American flag.

"Of course, it is but proper to say that beginning in 1847, due to an act passed in 1845 and subsequent acts of the same kind, subsidies were applied to regular liners under the American flag in trans-Atlantic trade until just before the outbreak of the Civil War, and American ships quickly achieved and thereafter maintained a superiority that their foreign rivals vainly sought to equal. The early subsidy acts, of course, materially helped our ships during the last dozen years preceding the outbreak of the Civil War. But their great backlog of protection had been due to discriminating import duties and tonnage dues.

"A word or two in respect to section 34 of the merchant marine act, 1920, is desirable in order to make the record accurate and clear. That section did not provide for the abrogation, denunciation, or cancellation of our terminable trade treaties and conventions; it merely provided for their modification in so far as such treaties restrained this country from readopting the discriminating import duty and tonnage dues policy of the fathers of the Republic. All that was intended by section 34 of the merchant marine act, 1920, was to clear the decks, so to speak, for congressional consideration thereafter of the wisdom of the readoption of the old discriminating duty policy, unhampered by any restraining provisions of trade treaties and conventions, which latter, in fact, have been the great drawback during the past 25 years to the readoption of that early successful American maritime policy. President Wilson approved of the merchant marine act on June 5, 1920, and section 34 gave him 90 days in which to give the notices to other countries of our intention so to modify—not to abrogate—existing trade treaties and conventions, as to relieve us of restraint in respect to our readoption or not as we thereafter saw fit of the policy of discriminating import duties and tonnage dues. But when the 90 days expired Secretary of State Colby announced that the President declined to give the notices to other nations required by section 34 of the act he had approved of on June 5, 1920, on the ground that Congress exceeded its rights in attempting to direct Executive action in the matter of treaties. It is worthy of note, however, that the seamen's act, which President Wilson approved of on March 4, 1915, also required the modification of these self-same trade treaties and conventions, and he was given 90 days in which to give other nations notices of our intention to modify them. This President Wilson proceeded to do, and in due course the provision in the several trade treaties and conventions that it was necessary to remove to give full effect to the seamen's act were all removed through diplomatic arrangement. It was not until 1920 that President Wilson found Congress encroaching on his prerogatives in respect to treaties.

"As a matter of fact, Title III of the bill we are now advocating—sections 301, 302, 303, and 304, pages 21 and 22—contemplates the possibility of our provision in respect to 50 per cent of the immigrants coming in American vessels being in conflict with these very same existing commercial treaties and conventions, and the President is directed to remove the conflict wherever he discovers it; that is to say, to proceed to have the treaties and conventions so modified as to give this country the right to require that 50 per cent of the immigrants entering the United States shall come in American vessels. It may be and I hope it will be that, when this bill becomes law and the President proceeds to remove the conflict between commercial treaty provisions and that of Title III of this bill, he will, at the same time, give notice as required in section 34 of the merchant marine act, 1920, of our intention so to modify the treaties to leave us free, if we wish to, to readopt the early successful policy of discriminating import duties and tonnage dues."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, when I was interrupted on yesterday afternoon by the Senator from Ohio, I had just started to read an extract from a work by Bernard N. Baker, a leading shipping man, reminding our people of the condition that confronted us in 1916 and in prior years and after the war began by reason of our lack of a merchant marine. As I said on yesterday, it is unnecessary to remind Senators of these facts; our recollection is, no doubt, very vivid with reference to the conditions of the country at that time; but we are forgetful of such things, and with the lapse of years we do not recall them unless they are brought especially to our attention; we overlook them; and the people of the country often overlook those conditions that affected their interests so vitally, even when legislation for the benefit of their interests is before the Congress for consideration. So this morning I wish to read an extract from Mr. Baker's book and to call attention to the fact that it was written in 1916, when the conditions were fresh not only in the minds of the people but when the people were actually passing through the conditions that the author describes. Mr. Baker says:

> The distressing experience of American business during the two years past—and American business is the very life of the American Nation—has brought home to us the blundering policy of the past. It has demonstrated the supreme folly of placing our foreign trade at the mercy of alien ships. It has shown us what a loss we sustained when we surrendered our merchant marine and retired as a factor in the world's overseas shipping.
> For many years it was difficult to arouse widespread interest in this question. The interior element of our people regarded it as a sectional problem.

And there are indications, Mr. President, that this question is being treated as a sectional problem now. We hear on this floor and we see in the press and in interviews statements that certain sections of the country are very much opposed to this legislation. I was told the other day by a prominent man that the West is substantially solid against it. Mr. Baker continues:

> They left its solution to the seaboard States. The farmer was unable to see wherein it concerned him. The merchant and the manufacturer of the midsections had a like point of view. They refused to be concerned about the ocean transportation so long as the goods they bought or the products they sold were delivered. Ways and means were questions too remote to enter into their calculations.
> When, however, the shock of a world war came, paralyzing almost over night the trade channels of two continents; when every vessel flying the German or the Austrian flag was withdrawn from the seas; when half a thousand British ships were commandeered for military purposes; when grain and cotton, and even manufactures were refused bottoms at our ports; when domestic stagnation followed and financial ruin threatened the tens of thousands of producers within our borders; when these things came to pass, all because we had no merchant marine of our own, only then did the question of shipping become a personal matter at every fireside on this continent.

Mr. President, my contention is that this question is one that affects every fireside in the country; it means something to every home in this land; and the settlement of it means more of benefit or more of woe than almost any other question that confronts Congress.

Mr. Baker continues:

It touched the pocketbook of every American citizen and involved the prosperity and happiness of every American home. It is that circumstance which has compelled a reopening of the question with a renewed effort to find a remedy and to put that remedy into immediate effect.

Mr. President, there was another book published in 1916 which also dealt with the conditions of that time. It is entitled "The Heritage of Tyre." It is very interesting, in fact almost fascinating, because of the manner in which it deals with the merchant marine of the country. I wish to read an extract from it with reference to the conditions of business in the country.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Who is the author?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The author is William Brown Meloney. I read, beginning at page 9:

No nation can endure half free and half slave commercially any more than it can socially. In the sixties we had to prove for ourselves the social side of that theorem in the hell-fire of fratricidal strife. Since 1914 nearly a half of the rest of civilization at death grips has been proving the commercial equation.

No sooner had the United States burst the bonds of physical slavery 50 years ago than she supinely submitted herself to the gyves of a commercial serfdom equally as intolerable.

Mr. President, some may think that statement is stronger than the facts will warrant; and yet it seems to me that in the light of history and in the light of our experience it is not too strong a statement of the situation.

We freed a section only to enslave the whole Commonwealth. No hour, no day has passed since then that has not beheld the forging of some new rivet, some new link in the shackles. In this year of 1916 the United States, without a merchant marine, bereft of ships, is more than half the slave that she was in 1861. What boots it that labor is free if the products of its industry and enterprise are denied their market?

Mr. President, that is a suggestion which, it seems to me, labor should carefully consider. We receive communications indicating that labor is against this bill. The American Federation of Labor, one of the great organizations of labor, one of the greatest instruments of benefit to labor, in my judgment, in the country, has taken a position against this measure. I shall not discuss its position at this time; I will probably do that later on in a discussion of the measure; but, as I said in the beginning, I believe that this proposed legislation is peculiarly of benefit to the laboring people of this country, and the question asked here, "What boots it that labor is free if the products of its industry and enterprise are denied their market?" is one that labor should well ponder in making up its judgment on this legislation.

Turn where one will and it is to behold the evidence of this vassalage. Leave any one of our glutted seaports, with piers and warehouses and freight terminals burdened beyond capacity by an immovable commerce, and follow the railroad lines into the interior, across the continent; go North, go South, go East, go West, and there is not a mile that has not a chapter to contribute to this tale. All of the conceivable products of a hundred millions of people lie along those steel arteries arrested by embargoes. What moves is what the warring nations choose to buy and will receive from the railroads at tidewater. All else must abide its time or rot; for, as Europe controls the world's deep-water tonnage, so our market is limited to her will. It matters not that there are other markets in which we could sell and intrench ourselves to the advantage of future trade and expansion. We haven't the ships to reach them.

Turn from the railroads and go into the orchards of the West and Northwest, and it is to find the fruit of last season mattressing the earth against the shaking down of the worthless crops of the coming one. Hearken for the sound of ax and saw in the lumber regions of Oregon and Washington and California, and hearken in vain. An army of labor stands idle; its accumulated product lies shipless in gorged outposts.

This condition, Mr. President, continued until we entered the war and the imperative necessities of war directed our people into the channels of production, where, under the control of the Government, all processes and avenues of transportation were centered upon conveying to the battle front those materials which were necessary to carry on war and maintain our troops.

Nor are there cars to move a cutting for domestic use. The Middle West and the South are utilising the rolling stock of our rails as granaries and warehouses, and New England's depleted forests—the conservations of 25 years—are being slaughtered to supply the needs of the eastern seaboard.

* * * * * * *

Turn from field and plain and orchard and forest to the manufacturing centers, and it is to find the same paralysis of industry, for industry lives by import as well as by export. Here a factory stands silent because it can not get tin from England; there a silk loom lies manacled because it can not obtain the raw product from China. As Britain controls her shipping, so does Japan control hers. Japan has but to say to her merchant marine, "Our ships will carry Japanese exports from December to May and imports for Japanese consumption only from June to November," and that is sufficient. The rest of the world may whistle. What is true of those two nations is likewise true of all others.

As this is being set down comes news that Britain is promulgating an order in council prohibiting, among other things, the importation of automobiles for private use, fruit, musical instruments, cutlery of all kinds, hardware, yarns, chinaware, fancy goods, and even soaps. And it is explained that this is being done, not as a matter of policy, but because of a shortage of ships; that Britain must have American wheat and corn and meat and that other things can not be permitted to take up the space of her vessels. Yet wheat and corn and meat and munitions of war are but a part of American commerce.

At peace and neutral though we are, belligerency in the present situation could exact no more of us.

Mr. President, I submit that our memories will verify this statement of the conditions of that time. It is really not overdrawn.

As I said yesterday, it is stated that the farmers of the country are opposed to this proposed legislation; that the farmers of the Middle West are practically solid in opposition to it. That may be true, but in my judgment, when the farmers of the country understand and appreciate what an adequate merchant marine means to them and when they recall the conditions that confronted us when the war broke out in 1914, they will not only be perfectly willing but will urge that whatever steps are deemed necessary to establish a merchant marine upon a permanent basis shall be taken.

Mr. President, it may be that the farmers do not favor this particular measure. That may be true, but they want us to do something. I do not believe that the farmers of the country take the position that nothing should be done by Congress to establish upon a permanent basis, in private hands, in private operation, an American merchant marine.

This is the only concrete proposition that is submitted to the Congress. In another body through which this measure has passed no suggestion of another proposition was presented. As I said yesterday, I am in favor of this proposition because it seems to be the only concrete suggestion made to bring us a permanent American merchant marine to meet the demands and the needs of our commerce. If anyone will present anything that is better than this, that holds out better hopes of establishing a permanent American merchant marine, I will gladly welcome it; I will gladly favor it. As I say, however, this is the only concrete suggestion, and I believe that the farmers of the country, recognizing what an American merchant marine means to them, would prefer that we pass this measure than to pass none at all under the present condition of things, especially if the condition that confronts us is made plain to them.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do.

Mr. DIAL. I understood the Senator yesterday to say that the railroads had contracts with foreign shipowners. What is the tendency now? Are they disposed to patronize our own ships?

Mr. JONES of Washington. My understanding now is that practically all the railroads have abrogated the contracts with foreign ships to which I referred. In the case of one or two of the railroads crossing the continent, I do not know that they have done so yet, but they are anxious to do it; and those companies, if they are satisfied that American ships will connect with their lines and carry imports and exports and furnish them the business as they have had it heretofore, will be ready to abrogate those contracts.

One thing that I should like to see under this bill is this: I should like to see some of the railroads of the country actually interested in shipping lines across the sea, so that every railroad agent would be interested in furnishing cargoes for American ships. I believe that one of the surest ways for us to maintain an American merchant marine on a permanent basis, especially on the Pacific, is to have some of the great continental lines interested in shipping companies for the transportation of products across the sea. Then they will get cargoes, they will maintain the ships, and they will maintain them permanently in the American trade.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. A moment ago the Senator said that no other concrete suggestion had been made with reference to this shipping problem, and I think he is right about that; but I inferred, from the way in which the Senator made that statement, that he perhaps had some other suggestion or plan in mind, though it may not have been matured. Am I right about that, or not?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No, Mr. President. I had considerable to do with the framing of the merchant marine act of 1920, and I am going to say frankly that I believe that if that measure had been carried out and could be carried out as it was passed, there is very little of this bill that we would need; but that, apparently, can not be done.

Mr. POMERENE. In the judgment of the Senator—and I know he has given many months of very careful, close study to this problem—if that plan had been carried out, would it be necessary to provide for these subsidies?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think so.

Mr. POMERENE. I assume that because the Senator suggested the plan which is contained in the commerce act of 1920, he at that time thought that that plan would meet the situation, and that it would be preferable to the subsidy plan.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I did, although that bill was not like I wanted in many particulars. I want to say frankly to the Senator that I never have been very friendly to subsidies as such. I have felt for many years that the policy of discriminating duties would be far more effective toward building up the American merchant marine than subsidies; but it seems that it is impossible to get that, and I am so earnestly in favor of doing something to build up the American merchant marine that, as I said yesterday, I have reached the point where I will vote for any measure that gives any reasonable promise of establishing upon a permanent basis an adequate American merchant marine.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I never have voted for a subsidy, and I do not favor subsidies, largely for the reason that if you start to give a subsidy to build up one institution you have to follow it to others; but I am in thorough accord with what the Senator says about building up an American merchant marine. I was as far back as 1913, when the last tariff bill was written; and on my motion a discriminating duty was placed in that tariff bill, as the Senator knows.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes, sir.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It was an amendment in the Senate that prevented it from becoming effective. The Senator, in the act of 1920, followed that plan, and I was glad to support him in that plan to give discriminating duties; and he provided for the cancellation of foreign-trade contracts that interfered with its taking effect. The Senator still believes, does he not, that it is perfectly legitimate for this Government by law to wipe out those foreign-trade contracts that are sometimes called treaties?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And the only reason why it has not been done is because the Executive would not follow the will of the Congress. Is not that all?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is true.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, it seems to me it is time for the Congress to assert itself again and see if we can not convince the Executive that he should cancel contracts that are subject to cancellation when it is the will of the representatives of the American people that they should be canceled. I agree with the Senator thoroughly in the proposition that when you give a subvention by giving discriminating duties to ships that are carrying American cargoes there is nothing wasteful about it. You only pay as you go, and no ship gets anything that it does not earn; but when you enter the domain of a subsidy very often you pay for something for which the American people do not get value received; and I think there is where the very grave distinction comes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I agree absolutely with the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if I may follow out a step further the suggestion made by the Senator from Alabama, when you have these preferential duties on cargoes that come over in American bottoms, the benefit of those preferential duties goes to all importers and to all buyers of those cargoes, whether sold at wholesale or at retail. Under the scheme provided for in this bill, whatever subsidy is granted goes directly to the shipowner. It may be that it will trickle out through his fingers to somebody else, but we have some mental reservation as to the extent to which that may go.

I am not saying this as indicating that I am going to vote either for or against this bill, but I am seeking light on this subject. If there is any other way to bring about this merchant marine than what we have here, I should like to know what it is; and it has been my hope that in the course of this debate some other concrete plans may be suggested.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should like to have them suggested. As I said awhile ago, if any other concrete plan is suggested that gives us better promise than this of building up a merchant marine, nobody will welcome it more cheerfully and gladly than I will.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, why not single out or ascertain these treaties or contracts and put them in the bill, and specifically put an end to them, as the Congress has a right to do?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I do not want to be diverted into that now, because I consider it a closed proposition so far as the present is concerned, and I consider it imperative that some early and prompt action shall be taken. I think we are going to suffer millions and hundreds of millions of loss if this bill fails. I am going to point out, probably, before I get through, why I think that.

Now, just a word about this other matter. We have to give from six months' to a year's notice, under the terms of these treaties, before they can be canceled—that is, before the abrogation takes effect.

I think there are about 25 or 30 of those treaties—25 or 37; I do not remember the exact number, but it is something like that. As I say, if we were to provide for their abrogation in this bill we would have to give from six months to a year's notice. That of itself would not put into effect the discriminating duty policy. Congress would then have to enact the legislation, which would have to originate in the House of Representatives, and Senators know what a time we would have over a proposition like that, involving the tariff and the discriminating duty question. If it were not for that fact, I believe that plan could be worked out in a very efficient way, and, as the Senator from Alabama suggested, they would not get the benefit unless they rendered the service, and the shippers of the country would distinctly get the benefit from it, probably in the reduction of freight rates, in addition to the general benefit that comes from having an agency of transportation always ready to carry off their products. That will be the great benefit that will come to the shippers of this country if this bill is enacted—to insure that we will not be confronted again with the condition that we had in 1914, where they will suffer tremendous loss through not having the necessary transportation facilities.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, the Senator has just suggested that notice of six months or a year would have to be given to the other signatories to these various treaties before we could have any discriminating legislation with respect to our tariff; also, that it would be necessary to enact additional legislation. All of that is granted. But the Senator has made it very clear to the Senate, I think, that he prefers the scheme contemplated in the marine act of 1920, which bears his name. If the Congress should adopt this legislation before the Senate as it now appears, as I understand it, it would fasten the system upon this country for a period of at least 10 years; that is, the bill provides for these subsidies for the period of 10 years. If this seems to the Senator to be an unwise scheme, or if there is some other plan that is better, it seems to me we ought to hesitate a good while before we adopt a plan whose life will be 10 years.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think it is unwise from the standpoint of the situation that confronts us now. I anticipate that it will probably take us 10 years to get rid of these treaties and to enact legislation under them—judging the future by the past. I frankly say that I prefer the other policy, but I think this is the best policy at the present time that we can put into effect under the present conditions and in the present situation.

We could abrogate those treaties, and I think the chances are that the only way they will ever be abrogated will be through direct action by Congress. It is not a partisan proposition either. The Senator knows that a Democratic President refused to carry out the mandates of Congress. Maybe he was justified in that position. I think he took the position that Congress did not have any right to give him that direction; that it was purely an executive, diplomatic matter which the Congress had no power to control or interfere with. Of course, I do not think there is any question about our having the right to pass legislation contrary to treaties, if we see fit to do it; but we did not want to do that. That is the harsh remedy. So we took the other course, and the Democratic President said he would not follow that mandate. Then a Republican President said he would not. So there we are.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I presume these treaties provide by their own terms a method by which they may be denounced, so there would not be any bad faith on the part of any government in terminating the treaties according to the very expressed language of the pacts.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think not. Some of them, I will say to the Senator, do not provide for notice of termination, say nothing about termination, and I think there is some contention as to whether or not those are not agreements which can not be abrogated without the consent of both parties. I can not conceive, however, that our Nation is absolutely tied up by a treaty or agreement the termination of which rests wholly with some foreign country. But there is some contention about that.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is largely a question, probably, of our departments not wanting to take the trouble to negotiate new contracts and make new arrangements. It is largely a question of detailed work in thrushing out new arrangements. But it seems to me clear, and I have always contended, that those treaties, those conventions and agreements, commercial or otherwise, ought to be gotten rid of, so that we shall have the right of free action in respect to discriminating duties.

Mr. JONES of Washington. In 1896 the Republican Party declared emphatically for the discriminating duty policy, and, as far as I can find, the only reason given in the Gallinger report why we did not adopt it was the existence of these treaties, the time it would take to abrogate them, the difficulties, and so forth. I never sympathized with that myself.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I agree entirely with what the Senator has said to the effect that these were merely trade agreements which this Government has a right to cancel whenever it pleases; and most of them have a date of termination. But whether they do or not, if there is one principle that is fixed in international law, about which there is no dispute, it is that on proper notice a trade contract can be canceled by either party.

A year ago, when the armament conference was meeting in Washington, and the question of the cancellation of the trade contracts with China in reference to her tariff was before that armament conference, although we renewed the contracts about the Chinese tariff, because China desired to have us do so at the time, I took the position before that conference that a trade contract could be canceled and abrogated on notice, and that China had a right to cancel and abrogate these trade contracts in reference to her tariff whenever she desired to do so, which position was not disputed or challenged by a single member of that conference; and they had great questions involved.

So I do not think there is any reason in the world, from an international standpoint, why we can not, on proper and just notice, cancel these contracts. The real truth about it is that there is a vast number of American citizens who are interested financially in British ships, and they have always stood in the way of any legislation which would build American ships and maintain American ships, owned by Americans, and flying the American flag.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in order to get something practical, I am wondering if the Senator from Washington would be willing to accept an amendment to this bill, as far as he might do so, setting out these contracts, giving the proper notice, and abrogating them.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That, Mr. President, I will consider when it is presented. I do not know whether it would be a practical proposition now in the situation which confronts us. I doubt it very much. Under the conditions which confront us, in the situation we must meet, and in view of the legislation already passed, and in the face of the failure of both administrations to carry it out, I do not feel that we ought now to complicate this proposition with a discriminating duty matter.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, we did not hesitate to denounce a treaty with Russia a few years ago because they were not treating some of our citizens properly; and now, in view of the fact that discriminating freight rates are given foreign manufacturers who ship their goods in export trade, I see no reason why we might not do something looking to the denouncing of these treaties, which at the present time are seemingly tying America's hands.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, there is another phase to that question, of course. There is a lot of difference of opinion upon what might be termed the merits of the proposition. We have at once the cry of retaliation raised against us, the assertion that other countries would retaliate, and there are many who believe that they would follow a retaliation policy which would be very injurious to us. Personally, I believe there is no country on the face of the earth that is better situated to engage in a war of retaliation than we are. I do not think we have much to fear from retaliation. But that is a debatable proposition, and I do not propose to take it up.

As far as the abrogation of the treaties is concerned, in the seamen's act we expressly provided for the abrogation of certain treaties at the expiration of a certain time, so that the provisions of that act should go into effect. There was no question raised by the administration at that time as to that provision. We have a provision in this bill for the abrogation by the President of provisions of certain treaties with reference to immigration, and so on. Of course, I do not think there can be any question but that Congress can by legislation abrogate a treaty, but it is not the diplomatic way to do it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will prepare an amendment along that line providing for the abrogation of these trade conventions, and I trust the Senator will consider it, in view of what has been said here, and I hope to have his approval when the matter comes up for a vote.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Personally, as I have said, I am in favor of it; but I might not be willing to have it cumber the pending bill. Of course, I could not prevent the Senator from offering the amendment.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. It has not been stated, but is it not a fact that these so-called clauses in treaties by which we agree that there shall be no discriminating duties are contained in our commercial treaties covering many other subjects, and exist in treaties with practically all the countries in the world?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think these treaties perhaps contain other provisions, of course; but the idea was that there would not be any difficulty about framing a treaty reiterating those questions about which there was no controversy. But, as I said awhile ago, I do not care to go into that question myself. I think it is not involved here. I think the situation is such that we can not from a practical standpoint take it up. It would lead to all sorts of discussion, of course.

Mr. KELLOGG. It is involved here if it is a very simple matter for us to abrogate those treaties and pass a discriminating duty.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think anybody has suggested that it is a simple matter to do it.

Mr. KELLOGG. It seems to have been suggested that it is a very simple matter.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I stated awhile ago that I thought it would take probably about 10 years, judging by the past, to put it into effect.

Mr. KELLOGG. As a matter of fact, every other country would be at liberty to impose the same kind of discriminating duties.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. In which event they would offset ours.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not agree to that; but I am not going into the argument of it at all.

Coming back now to the thread of my discussion, I pointed out yesterday many of the disastrous results that came to our farmers by reason of a lack of ships when we got into the war, quoting statements from Secretary McAdoo. I am not going to reiterate those at this time, but I have another statement here which goes a little bit into detail and calls attention to the actual facts which confronted us at the various periods, which I am going to read to the Senate. I have put it in the form of a memorandum, because I find I can generally make a statement much more concise in that way than in any other way, and wherever I have had the opportunity and time to do it I have done that.

The Boer War came on in 1899, and during the summer of 1899 the withdrawal of ships by the British first began. We were almost wholly dependent on the British for the transportation of our commerce at that time. The Boer War was many miles away from Great Britain, of course, but they had to take their ships to carry troops, supplies, and provisions there, so they took many of those ships from the lines of transportation upon which our farmers were dependent.

During the summer of 1899, when the withdrawal first began, the grain rates ran from 1 shilling 9 pence to 2 shillings 3 pence. By January, 1900, the requisitioned fleet had reached a total of 1,200,000 gross tons, and the grain rate was 2 shillings and 10 pence. By February the rate had gone up to 3 shillings. The farmer had to pay that, very largely, and it was reflected in reduced prices for his grain. While he had been getting, as I said yesterday, probably cheap transportation before that, the losses that he sustained more than overbalanced the many years of cheap rate.

By February the rate had gone up to 3 shillings 3 pence, and by the 1st of March the British Government had absorbed an additional 200,000 tons, making a total of 260 vessels, aggregating 1,400,000 gross tons. The grain rate continued to mount until on the 1st of March it reached 3 shillings 4 pence halfpenny. The great British shipping journal, Fairplay, in its issue of August 2, 1900, states:

We can scarcely remember a time when there was such an all-round inquiry for boats, now emanating from every quarter of the world. No sooner does a slightly easier tone come over this direction than America wakes up, coming into the market for August and September grain tonnage at a good advance over what was obtainable a few weeks previously. This demand has yet to be satisfied, but at present there are not the boats in sight to meet it, so rates will have to be advanced until tonnage is drawn from other directions.

At that time the grain rate was 3 shillings 6 pence. A month later it had gone to 3 shillings 8 pence, and by October it was up to 3 shillings 10 pence half penny. This was a hundred per cent advance in about a year. This was caused by a relatively slight withdrawal of tonnage.

I have taken an extract from a statement by Hon. Carl Vrooman, who, I think, under the Democratic administration was Assistant Secretary of Agriculture and who is now, I understand, especially looking after the interests of the farmers of the country, representing the farmers of the country in various associations and organizations and expressing their views upon various questions, a very fine man, a very able man, an earnest and sincere man, earnestly and sincerely working for the interests of the farmer. What does he say with reference to the conditions when the World War began and how they affected the farmer? The quotation is from Senate Document No. 395, first session, Sixty-fourth Congress. It is entitled "The farmer and the shipping bill," relating of course to the shipping bill pending at that time; but the conditions so far as the farmer is concerned are the same and the interests of the farmer are just as great now as they were at that time. This is what he said:

At the beginning of the war it cost about 5 cents a bushel to ship wheat from New York to Liverpool, but during the last few months it has cost over 40 cents. The rate is now 48 cents.

There was an increase of almost 800 per cent, an actual increase of over 700 per cent.

Mr. POMERENE. In what year was that?

Mr. JONES of Washington. This was during the Sixty-fourth Congress, about 1915 or 1916, I think.

At the beginning of the war it cost about one-fourth cent per pound to ship cotton across the Atlantic. To-day it costs in the neighborhood of 3 cents a pound. Other products of our farms and factories are paying similar extortionate freight rates.

As the world price of wheat is determined by the law of supply and demand and is established at Liverpool rather than at your local market or mine, it is clear that if the cost of ocean transportation were to-day 8 cents instead of 48 cents, the wheat growers of this country would receive a substantial part of this difference in a higher price for their wheat.

Conversely, by reason of the lack of ships our wheat growers lost that difference in the price of the wheat which they received.

It is a highly significant fact that on February 15, 1916, the cash price of No. 2 hard winter wheat was 49 cents higher in Liverpool than in New York, while on the same day the ocean freight rate for wheat from New York to Liverpool was 47.9 cents. With facts like this staring us in the face it is not difficult to see the close connection existing between ocean freight rates and the price the American farmer gets for his wheat.

Yet it is contended that the American farmer is not interested in legislation of this sort.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REED of Pennsylvania in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will pardon me for another interruption, I would like to say that, although I am not for the subsidy proposed in the bill, I have a great deal of sympathy for what the Senator is striving to accomplish. I want to call to his attention that which he undoubtedly knows, that in the summer of 1914, when the great World War broke, cotton was selling for 14 cents a pound. In October of 1914 it had fallen to 5 cents a pound and below, and to a large extent it could not be sold at all. It cost the cotton farmers of the South not less than a billion dollars, due entirely to the fact that the ocean liners of Great Britain were diverted from our ports and we had no ships in which to carry our cotton crop to the markets of the world.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is true, and it seems to me it is pertinent to say right here that if it cost the farmers of the South a billion dollars because we did not have American ships, unless it is clear that the expenditure of $300,000,000 will not produce a permanent American merchant marine, is not that sufficient warrant for us to take a chance and vote for a bill which will impose, if you please, a subsidy of not more than $30,000,000 a year and see to it that the cotton growers of the South and the grain growers of the West and the business interests of the entire country shall not be confronted by a condition like that in the near future? Why, Mr. President, we do not know when war is going to break out. We hope it will not break out to involve this country, but we do not have to be involved directly to suffer the consequences. If England should be involved in war it would affect us. We have already seen the effect upon us. It seems to me that no more striking argument could be presented to the Congress for the enactment of this legislation, or something better if anybody can suggest it, to help build up a permanent American merchant marine than the fact stated by the great Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. A billion dollars was lost by the farmers of the South. I called attention yesterday to that condition and to the fact that on the floor of the Senate southern Senators were urging legislation authorizing the Government to make loans directly to the cotton growers of the South because they could not market their cotton.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. One of the main troubles with us at that time was that England had issued an embargo against cotton going to Germany. The year previous to that Germany had bought about 3,000,000 bales of cotton from us. The war conditions brought on that situation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I dislike to take issue with my colleague, but the facts do not sustain him. During the summer of 1914 and up to October, 1914, cotton dropped from 14 cents a pound to 5 cents a pound. Up to that time there had been no embargo issued. It is true that it was said by all that this condition was due to war conditions, and we swallowed it, but we afterwards found out that war conditions stimulated the price of cotton, and under war conditions it went from 5 cents, to which it had dropped in 1914, to 40 cents a pound when we got transportation before the war was ended, so that it was not war conditions that brought on that situation. It was due solely and alone to the fact that we did not have ships in which to carry our cotton to the markets of the world. Of course, I agree that later on there were other causes that affected it, but up to October, 1914, there was no cause in the world except the diversion of the ships.

Mr. HEFLIN. What I meant was that we did not have the ships to carry our cotton because of the war. The allied Governments were using the ships that in peace times had carried our cotton and other products to foreign countries.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If we had had ships of our own, then we would have had transportation facilities all right. But because we did not have the ships, and the other countries had ships and used the ships somewhere else or in something else, we were compelled to sustain that enormous loss.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. It might be well to say in this connection that the amount which the bill would call for annually from the Treasury of the United States would not be more than $25,000,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Or possibly $30,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Say $25,000,000 in round numbers. The loss on cotton alone for the one year was $1,000,000,000, and it would take 40 years at $25,000,000 to equal the loss upon that one item alone to the farmer.

Mr. HEFLIN. If the Senator from Washington will permit me——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not want to be discourteous, but I asked when I started that I be not interrupted except for a question.

Mr. HEFLIN. Just one moment, if the Senator will permit me. We had 6,000,000 tons of coastwise tonnage at the time this thing occurred of which the Senator speaks, and that shipping could have been applied in the carriage of the cotton crop if they had not been afraid to go into the overseas business on account of German submarines.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, no, Mr. President. The Senator does not mean that, or if he does he has not looked into the matter. There were very few of the coastwise vessels that were suitable for ocean transportation trade. They were not built for that purpose and could not be used for that purpose at all.

That, Mr. President, illustrates the difficulties under which we are trying to legislate to build up our shipping—the lack of real practical knowledge with reference to shipping and the shipping business. That is one reason why I expressed my regrets in the opening of the discussion that we did not have some practical shipping men here on the floor of the Senate, so they could speak from personal knowledge.

Mr. President, I want to say that I am considering the legislation not from the standpoint of trying to find objections to it, not from the standpoint of trying to find reasons to oppose it or to vote against it, but I am trying to find the valid reasons for supporting it and enacting it. It is not a perfect measure. There is no doubt about that. It is not probably what any one of us would approve in every particular. I think probably I could have written some provisions which I would like better than some of the provisions now in the bill; but, Mr. President, as I expected to state a little later on, it represents the combined views of practical, experienced shipping men and operators and experts, and of men who are honestly seeking a concrete solution of the problem. Probably it does not satisfy any one of them in every particular. So, Mr. President, I am trying to find a justification for supporting the measure rather than a justification for defeating it.

Now, I wish to read further from Mr. Vrooman:

It is true that we are getting good prices for wheat now, but, as Liverpool is paying enormously higher prices, there seems to be no good reason for allowing the international shipping combine—

Note that, Mr. President, the international shipping combine—to take advantage of the crop shortage in Europe and the ship shortage on the high seas to boost the freight rates 100 to 1,600 per cent.

Call to the attention of the farmers of the Middle West that by reason of the lack of our shipping the foreign combine increased the freight rates from 100 to 1,600 per cent on their wheat and their grain of every character and their products of all kinds to go to the foreign markets, and then tell me that those farmers would be against legislation that gives fair promise to meet a condition of that kind. I do not believe it. I would not fear to stand before any audience of farmers and explain the conditions and explain the provisions of the bill and the purposes to be attained.

As a result of the present effort on the part of the Federal Department of Agriculture to popularize and render practical and efficient its scientific teachings, the agricultural output of this country is already appreciably on the increase. This means that if the farmers are to continue to get good prices for their products they must find foreign markets. It is hard to say what the price of wheat would have been during the past two years had we not been able to dispose of several hundred million bushels each year to foreign countries. The farmers of the Middle West are especially interested in securing foreign markets, since the southern farmers, who in the past have taken millions of dollars' worth of northern crops every year, gradually are learning to raise their own corn, oats, hay, and live stock. Last year the South put in 1,827,000 acres of oats, 8,751,000 acres of corn, and 400,000 acres of hay more than the year before, which resulted in an increase in production of 44,709,000 bushels of oats, 201,132,000 bushels of corn, and 1,696,000 tons of hay over the year before. If this process continues, it will mean that the Middle Western States must find a foreign outlet for a portion of their grain or pay the penalty in lower prices.

Now, listen to what Mr. Vrooman says:

In the past the average farmer has not considered a merchant marine necessary to his happiness or his financial welfare. Our farmers have never been slow to make use of the most up-to-date agricultural implements, of the automobile, or of the tractor. Nor have they been at all backward about fighting for what they considered to be their rights in the matter of railway freight rates. But up to date most of our farmers, particularly in the Middle West, have paid little or no attention to their commercial rights and requirements in the way of ocean transportation. This is not because the question is not to them a vital one, but merely because the facts about it have not been brought to their attention.

I agree with Mr. Vrooman in that respect.

If for any unforeseen reason Congress should fail to take steps at this session to provide the country with an independent American merchant marine, it would pay the farmers of America, and "pay them big," to chip in and build a merchant marine for themselves. Our farmers could readily afford to spend not merely the $50,000,000 called for by the pending shipping bill but $100,000,000 or even $200,000,000 in such an enterprise. If it were necessary, which it would not be, they could run such ships at a yearly loss of from 5 to 10 per cent on the last-named sum and still profit by the undertaking.

In other words, Mr. Vrooman contends that they could run the ships at a loss and still have a profit on account of the increased prices for the grain which they would receive by being able to get it to market.

In other words, it is a fact capable of demonstration that the most crying need of agriculture in this country to-day is for an independent American merchant marine.

During the World War almost all ocean carriers of belligerent nations were controlled by their governments. For this reason freight rates are difficult to cite. House of Representatives Report of the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry, No. 408, first session, Sixty-seventh Congress, gives, on page 372, part 3, Table I-6, typical freight rates during the period of 1912–1921. For flour, for instance, between the North Atlantic ports and United Kingdom the rate per hundred pounds was 15 cents in 1912, 17 cents in 1913, 19 cents in 1914. During the war rates are not quoted for the reason above given. In 1919 and in 1920 the rate of $1 per hundred pounds is given. In 1921 it had dropped to 19 cents per hundred pounds.

Why had it dropped from $1 a hundred pounds to 19 cents? The reason for this drop in cost was that an American merchant marine was on the seas and that the British merchant marine was released from its Government control, under which it had been rigidly directed for the purpose of repatriating the troops gathered from all parts of the British Empire. This is the difficulty when depending upon foreign carriers. In time of their national need it is but natural that the foreign producers, even though entirely dependent for their markets upon such carriers, must be left to shift for themselves while the national tonnage is used to the best advantage of its own government.

If we lose our shipping, in the near future the farmer will feel the effects in lower prices by reason of advanced freights, and this loss in one year, in my judgment, will be far greater than the entire amount paid out under this bill if the maximum should be paid each year. Will the farmers of the country approve standing by a political fetish that means such a probable loss to them? I may be mistaken, but I do not think they will; at any rate, I so firmly believe that this bill is in their interest that I am willing to leave my action to their good judgment at any time it may be questioned.

Mr. President, I called attention yesterday to the condition that confronted the Nation when the Spanish-American War was in progress and when we wished to send our fleet around the world, and also the condition when we became involved in the World War; but I have here a little memorandum that speaks volumes to me as to the needs from a national standpoint of an American merchant marine.

Mr. President, if we had had to depend upon American ships and upon American-built ships when we entered into the World War, in my judgment the outcome of that war would have been very different from what it was. I do not believe that it is an overstatement to say that the German merchant marine won the World War for the Allies.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does not the Senator mean the English merchant marine?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I mean the German merchant marine won the World War for the Allies. I will tell Senators why I make that statement. All our troops were transported to Europe by merchant ships. The seized German tonnage after we became participants in the war transported over 600,000 of our soldiers to Europe. The fleets of the world were taxed to the utmost to carry our troops over there, and to carry supplies, and so on, and if we had not had those German ships on which to transport 600,000 of our soldiers over there the outcome of the World War might have been very different. That is the reason why I say that possibly the German merchant marine won the war for the Allies. Oh, Mr. President, it was a mighty fortunate thing for civilization that German merchant ships were in our ports when the World War broke out, that they were interned there until we got into the war, and that they were available to us to carry our troops across the sea.

The result of the war would have been different if we had had to depend upon American ships alone. How did we get our troops across the sea to the battle front? One million six thousand nine hundred and eighty-seven were carried in British ships; 68,246 in British chartered ships; 51,866 in other foreign ships. In other words, over 1,127,000 men of the 2,079,000 that we sent across the sea were transported in foreign ships other than German ships. Taking the number of troops transported entirely by foreign ships there are left only about 248,000 who were transported in our own ships. Oh, Mr. President, if we had only sent 240,000 men to Europe in the crucial period of the war in my judgment the result of that war would have been different from what it was. See what it meant for this country to lack American ships and to be absolutely dependent upon foreign ships to carry our troops across the sea to fight the battles of the Republic and the battles of civilization.

Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the Record at this point the memorandum from which I have taken the figures which I have called to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The memorandum also shows how our troops were brought home. It sets forth that we brought back, on purely foreign ships, 799,000 of our men. If we had been compelled to depend upon our own American-built ships, it would have been a long time—much longer than it was—before we got our men home. We brought back, in German and Dutch ships, 555,000 of our soldiers. The great Leviathan, which is now being reconditioned at Newport News, brought back to this country more of our troops than all other ships under the American flag.

Mr. President, this bill seeks to aid in the building up of a permanent American merchant marine. I am not for this bill because it may help the shipowner; I am not for this bill because it may help the ship operator. Not at all; I am for this bill because I believe that it will be of tremendous benefit to the farmer, to the laborer, to the business man, and to the Nation as a nation. If no one were to get benefit out of it but those interested directly in shipping I would not be for it at all. It is the great resulting good which I have in mind. If the expenditure of a few million dollars, even though that money may go to some private individuals, will result in bringing billions of dollars of benefit to the people as a whole, it seems to me that, as a representative of the people, I am fully justified in supporting such legislation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator take the position that the farmer's difficulty in selling his surplus to Europe now is due to the lack of shipping?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, not necessarily now. It is not the present situation that we have in mind by this bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is it due to high freight rates?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The freight rates are coming down.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I can not quite see the point, then, of the Senator's argument.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; that is the trouble. I may be very deficient in expressing myself, but I am not considering the present so far as the farmer and the business man are concerned, because this bill is not intended to accomplish so much for the present, except in this way—and I will come to that a little later on—namely, to expedite placing in private ownership the ships that we now have. That is one purpose of the bill; but its main and primary purpose is to promote the establishment of a merchant marine upon a permanent basis for years to come, so that if our country should be confronted by the conditions which confronted us in 1914, we will not be lacking in ships. That is the primary purpose of the bill, and that is principally what I have in mind. I do not know that this bill will affect present ocean freight rates; I have not that in mind; but I do have in mind that under this bill we prepare for and guard against the future; that we prepare for and guard against an increase in ocean transportation rates such as was brought about in 1914.

So far as the present situation is concerned, ocean freight rates do not go up now on account of the lack of transportation, because it is known that American ships are ready, when the conditions warrant, to go to sea. We have those ships now; that is true; it cost us $3,000,000,000 to acquire them; they were built under the stress and needs of war, but, as I said yesterday, they are not going to last forever; they are wearing out; they are deteriorating, and the process of deterioration is proceeding more rapidly with the ships tied up at the docks than if they were in active operation.

It is estimated that the life of a ship is about 20 years. We are doing nothing looking toward the replacement of these ships; and if we do not do something that will lead to their replacement when the ships are worn out, we will have no merchant marine and we will have no ships. One of the primary purposes of this bill is to adopt a policy under which these ships will be replaced by private enterprise. Of course, they could be replaced by appropriations out of the Government Treasury, but I think Congress is determinedly opposed to the appropriation of any more money for the building of merchant ships unless we embark upon the governmental policy of building and operating the merchant marine.

I do not know that I can make this any clearer, but I do hope that that will be understood by those who are considering this measure. It is not intended as a temporary proposition. It is not intended to meet the present situation with reference to shipping, except as we hope through this measure to get into private hands the ships that the Government owns. Then, further, when they get into private hands we will have such a policy as will encourage these private owners to replace them as they need replacement, and not only to replace these ships but to build additional ships to round out our fleet and make of it what the shipping men refer to as a well-balanced fleet. There is no rebuilding of ships now. There is no replacement of ships now. Why, it was announced in one branch of Congress two or three years ago that not another dollar should be appropriated for the building of ships by the Government.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, taking the Senator's statement that the life of a ship is 20 years, these ships have been in existence only a few years. There is no great hurry, is there, about replacement at this time, considering the fact that there is not enough commerce to keep busy those that we now have?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, all the shipping people say that these ships are deteriorating very fast. I do not know whether the Senator is in favor of the Government continuing in the operation of these ships as a Government or not. If he is, well and good; that is his belief as to what is the wise thing to be done. I have come to an opposite conclusion, and I want to adopt some policy that will induce private parties to take these ships just as fast as possible. I do not expect them to take the ships right away. The Shipping Board people estimate that it will take about three years to dispose of the good tonnage that we have. I am not a practical shipping man, but I doubt if we will get these ships disposed of for five years.

I remember that when we first began to work on this problem, after the war, I was working on the proposition of constructing legislation to provide for the disposition of these ships. I had the idea that it would take 10 years to dispose of these ships without serious loss to the Government. My idea was that we should handle these ships in a businesslike way, as it seemed to me; that we should handle them as a solvent firm or company would handle property that it wanted to dispose of, but did not have to dispose of as a bankrupt. I thought it would take about 10 years to do it. I talked with some very experienced shipping men, and I remember a conversation with one of them, I think one of the best shipping men in this country. He said: "Why, Senator JONES, we will get rid of these ships in two years." Here it has been very nearly five years now, and we are not through with them yet—nothing like it. We can not sell them to private parties now. So, Mr. President, in my judgment we will not have these ships out of the hands of the Government for four or five years, unless world conditions should get such that there is a tremendous demand for all the shipping that may be available. Then, of course, if that time arrives they will be disposed of rapidly and at good prices; but there are not many indications of that condition of things coming about.

Now, Mr. President, I want to refer briefly to some contentions that are made about this bill.

It is contended that we are going to pay out $30,000,000; that it is going into the hands of private shipowners to enrich their coffers, and apparently an appeal is made to the prejudices of the people. This is true: The experts who have worked out this bill, and who framed it, estimate that by the expenditure of this $30,000,000 we will have 7,500,000 tons of shipping under the American flag, privately operated, and that that is sufficient to carry one-half of our commerce, imports and exports. That is the primary purpose of the bill—to develop an American merchant marine that will transport at least half of our commerce. We do not seek to take all the commerce of the world. We do not seek by this bill to take all the commerce of this country and carry it in American ships. It was the declared policy of the merchant marine act of 1920, which is really taken as the foundation of our policy, that we should have an American merchant marine sufficient to carry at least one-half of our commerce. That is the purpose of this bill; and under the terms of the bill, as worked out by the experts, they figure that if the time comes when we spend under the provisions of the bill $30,000,000 in a year we will then have 7,500,000 tons of shipping under the American flag.

This is true, Mr. President: If we do not have that 7,500,000 tons of shipping, we will not spend $30,000,000. This is true, Mr. President: We do not spend the money unless we get the service; we do not spend the money unless we get the ships; and I hope the people of the country will get that statement. Unless these experts are all wrong, unless those who framed this bill are all wrong, then when we spend thirty millions a year we will have an adequate American merchant marine.

If that is true, I want to ask any Senator if it is not worth the price? I want to ask Southern Senators if it is not worth $30,000,000 to insure to your cotton crop tonnage sufficient to make you independent of the world's tonnage and save you from the loss of a billion dollars within the period of a few months, as mentioned by the Senator from Alabama awhile ago? I want to know from the wheat farmers and raisers of the country if it is not worth $30,000,000 out of the Treasury to insure to them a merchant marine that will protect them from the exorbitant prices of the combine of international shipping of the world?

This is true, Mr. President: While prices of freight may be low now, if the time comes when the American shipping is gone—as it will come unless we provide some way or some policy under which it will be replaced—when that times comes, freight rates are going up, and the American farmer and the American business man, and the American laborer will have to pay the price, just as we had to pay it in the early period of the World War when we were not in it. We will not have to wait 20 years for it either. Our ships will be outclassed long before 20 years by up-to-date and more efficient ships.

As far as I am concerned, I firmly believe that if we get this shipping—and, if we do not, we will not have to pay out the $30,000,000—if we get this shipping into private hands and under the American flag, we will have gotten it very, very cheaply.

Mr. President, let us pass this bill. It may not give us an American merchant marine. It is only a matter of opinion. Nobody can issue any guaranty, but we believe that it will give it. We believe that it will aid in providing for a permanent merchant marine, but, as I said a moment ago, and I want to emphasize it, if we do not get the American merchant marine—if we do not get, for instance, 7,500,000 tons under this policy in the hands of private parties—then we will not spend the $30,000,000 a year, and we will spend only the proportional part corresponding with the shipping that we get. Refuse to pass it, fail to pass it, and our shipping may disappear. It probably will disappear unless we can get, very soon, some other policy. Then all of our war expenditures will be gone, failure will be written on one of the most important pages of our history, and we will have become the laughingstock of the people of the world.

Do the American people want that? I do not think so. Does any class of the American people want that? I do not think so. They all want an American merchant marine, and I believe that they are willing to have enacted and will sustain any measure that reasonably promises to bring about an ample American merchant marine.

Who prepared this bill, Mr. President? I did not prepare it. The committee did not prepare it. It was prepared by the Shipping Board, men that we have charged with the custody of American shipping, men that we have intrusted with that great power and that great responsibility and that great task, and men who know the situation and have been in direct contact with our problems for the last two years. I am not going to take the time to point out the difficulties that confronted the Shipping Board. I may take occasion to do it some time in the future if it is considered necessary, but I want to say that in my judgment no body of men in the history of this country ever were placed in charge of such a difficult task as the Shipping Board had to face. Whether or not they worked out their problem and solved their problem as well as anybody else would have done it I shall not say, but I believe that when we understand what they have accomplished and the difficulties under which it has been done, the wonder will be that they have really done so well rather than that they have done ill.

But who are the men who prepared this bill? They are honest men. They are sincere men. They are men of high character. They are men of fine ability. They are men of experience in business affairs and in legislative affairs. They are men acquainted with the needs of the Government from the standpoint of the national defense. They are men acquainted with the needs and the hopes and the aspirations of labor, and they are men just as patriotic and sincere as any men in this Chamber or elsewhere. They have had only the interest of the American people and the American Government and the merchant marine at heart

How did they prepare it? Mr. President, they did not depend upon their own knowledge, upon their own wisdom, upon their own experience, but they called together representatives of labor, representatives of business, representatives of the farmer, practical shipping men, operators, shipbuilders, shipowners, and experts in these various lines. They conferred with them and counseled with them, and worked with them for weeks and weeks. Then they conferred with members of the committees of the two Houses of Congress and with the President of the United States to harmonize their differences, and this bill is largely the product of that study, work, and effort.

Mr. President, the bill probably does not suit any one of those men in every particular, but it is presented to Congress with the unanimous recommendation of that board—Democrats and Republicans alike. The board treated this measure as a nonpartisan measure. It seems to me that under those circumstances the bill ought to come to us with the presumption, at any rate, that it is a pretty good bill; with the presumption, at any rate, that it is an honest, sincere effort to do what everybody professes to want done; and with the presumption that it is needed.

I have treated this measure from the broad standpoint of the need and importance of an American merchant marine. As I said awhile ago, to my mind the primary, fundamental purpose of this bill looks to the future; it is to aid in the establishment of a permanent merchant marine.

There is another very important purpose of this bill, of more immediate concern, although, as I said, I do not consider it the most important; that is, it looks toward the profitable disposal of the present shipping which the Government has, getting that shipping into private hands, and bringing to the people of the country just as much of the war cost as possible.

The President of the United States covered this phase of the question fully and splendidly, far better than I can. I can only emphasize what he so well and clearly presented. What have we? We have something like 1,400 ships; 400 of them, in round numbers, are in trade now, running upon the sea on routes of trade. The other thousand ships are tied up at the docks; they are idle; there is no business for them; they are not running; they are depreciating very rapidly; they are deteriorating more rapidly than if they were in actual operation. We have to guard them and protect them at expensive rates.

What did that shipping cost? It cost us over $3,000,000,000. During the war we built over 12,000,000 tons, built under war stress and war needs. Much of it is not really suitable for commercial purposes, and will not do to put in competition with the fleets of the world.

I have no reason to question the figures of the Shipping Board, and they estimate that of this 12,500,000 tons of shipping there are about 5,000,000 tons of good, high-class ships, which probably will compete fairly well with similar types and similar shipping of the world. There are about two million and a half tons running upon routes established by the Shipping Board. There are about 80 of those routes. Those ships are running to-day at a loss to the Government of $50,000,000 a year, not taking into account depreciation and deterioration.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. Is not one reason why they are running at such a great loss the fact that our operators of ships have not tried to get cargoes for Government ships?

Mr. JONES of Washington. There may be something in that, because this is the situation; they are running under contracts under which the operators have but very little responsibility. They are paid a commission whether the ship makes money or not.

The Senator is a great business man, and he knows that if men are not especially interested in making a profit they are not going to make extra efforts. I know that the Shipping Board has taken away Shipping Board ships from some companies which have large fleets of their own because they felt that they would naturally favor their own ships every time they had an opportunity. But the general proposition which the Senator suggests I do not think is correct.

Mr. DIAL. My understanding, from reading the report of the Shipping Board, was that the idea was not to let Government ships compete with individual operators; that they were holding their ships back to let the individual operators carry the cargoes, wherever there were individual operators to do that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that is not exactly a correct statement of the situation. I think it is true that the Shipping Board has not followed the policy of putting Government ships in direct competition with private lines and private ships, because they felt that that would drive the private shipping out of the business and that we would have a great loss in that way. I think Congress has intimated to them very clearly, not by positive declaration of Congress, yet through discussion on the floor and in other ways, that Congress is very much opposed to the Shipping Board using the Government Treasury and the Government ships to drive private shipping out of business. We want to encourage private shipping as much as possible, because it is through the private ship companies that we expect to sell our ships, and if we drive them out of business, then we will have no private people we can expect to buy our ships.

I think I saw in the minority report, at least I saw it somewhere, a criticism of the Shipping Board because they are continuing the contracts known as the MO 4 contracts for the operation of ships, and it is pointed out that Chairman Lasker denounced that form of contract soon after he first took charge of the Shipping Board. It is true, he did denounce it in unmeasured terms. Mr. Lasker was not a practical shipping man. He was a good business man, and he knew that, as a general proposition, it was not good business to handle ships or anything else in that sort of manner. But when he came down to the practical proposition he found that he could not operate them in any other way. He came to us and frankly told us why he did not stop those contracts.

Briefly, the MO 4 contract is something like this: The operator does not assume any responsibility about losses and profits, but he gets a commission for operating a ship, and the Government takes care of the expense, very largely. Of course, the operator has no inducement to hunt up cargoes; he has no inducement to make special efforts to supply cargoes for his ships, because he knows that he gets his commission whether he gets a profit or not. But the board tried to let these ships out to people who would take them on what is called a bareboat charter plan and could not get anybody to take them. I think only about 20 charters of this kind were made. People would not take our ships and run them that way. So Mr. Lasker and the board found that if they were going to maintain any of these routes the only way to do it was under these contracts, much as they disliked to operate under them.

Mr. President, I want to give an illustration which came under my own personal observation. One who had operated Shipping Board ships came to Washington from Seattle. I think he had made either 14 or 16 voyages, and he had made a profit for the Shipping Board on every voyage except two. He wanted to get another ship, or some more ships, from the Shipping Board; I do not know how many. He wanted to get more liberal terms than they thought they could offer, and he came to my office. I had had the same impression Mr. Lasker had; I thought we ought to get these ships into the hands of people who would have some responsibility, who would have an interest in making them profitable, who would have to share the loss in case there was a loss, and so forth. So I said to this man, "Suppose the Government would give you its ship, tell you that it would keep it insured, and not charge you any fees for running it, give you everything you could make out of it until your profits came up to 5 per cent, and then above that divide the profits; would you not take the ship?" He said, "No; I would not."

Mr. President, there is no way to make him do it. He was a practical shipping man. Do not Senators think that if he had thought there was any money in it for him he would have done it? He felt that under the policy of this country and under the conditions which confront American shipping he could not afford to do it, and he did not propose to take the risk of running the ship in that way, notwithstanding the fact that he had made a profit for the Government on nearly every voyage he had undertaken.

I have just briefly told what interest the Government had. We have these 10,000,000 tons of shipping, in round numbers, 5,000,000 tons of it fine shipping. It is wasting away. The whole 12,500,000 tons cost us $3,000,000,000. Who owns this shipping? The Government of the United States. Who is the Government? The citizens of the country—the laborers, farmers, and business men. They own this shipping. They paid for it. They put up this $3,000,000,000. It is their property. We are their agents. We are their representatives. We are charged with the duty and responsibility of handling this property in the best possible way for them. It is our duty and our responsibility to do whatever we can to bring the greatest possible return to these farmers and laborers and business men, the citizens of this country, whose property we are handling.

What is the purpose of this bill? One of the purposes of this bill is to dispose of this property, if possible, as quickly as we can, in a reasonable and businesslike way, and get it into private hands and bring back just as much of that $3,000,000,000 as we can possibly get, and put it into the Treasury of the United States, thereby relieving the people of the country of that much of the burden of taxation.

Of course we do not expect to take the money we get for these ships and go around and distribute it to each citizen of the country to put in his pocket; we do expect to put it into the Treasury of the United States and thereby diminish the demands upon the taxpayers of the country for money to defray the expenses of the Government.

Ah, every farmer in my State, every laborer in my State, every business man in my State, is interested in the benefits which may come from this legislation. He is interested in having this property bring just as great a return as possible. He expects me to do what I think is for his best interest. He has a right to assume that I know more about these conditions, the details of these conditions, than he does. I would not be fit to be here if I did not. It is part of my sacred duty to look into these things. He is plowing his field, putting in his crop, he is tired at night, and has not the means to acquaint himself with the details of this situation. He expects me to do it.

Mr. President, it is in the discharge of that duty and that responsibility that I am urging the passage of this measure. As I said yesterday, if I did not believe that it was beneficial to him, if I did not believe it would be beneficial to every one of my constituents and all the constituency of the country, I would not be in favor of it. I may be wrong, but there is no man who opposes the bill who is any more sincere with reference to it than I am in favoring it. I want to discuss the measure and I want to consider the measure in that spirit and in that way. It seems to me, Mr. President, it is not a time to appeal to prejudice or passion or anything of that sort. We are all seeking, or at least we all ought to be seeking—and I think we are—the best interests of our constituents and the people of the country. Of course, if there is any man who has given it a careful, unbiased study and consideration who thinks it is an unwise measure, that it is not a good measure, it is his duty to vote against it, and I would think much less of him if he did not vote against it than I would if he voted for it under those circumstances.

Mr. President, we could not give our ships away now under the condition that they be operated under the American flag. There is no man in the country who would take the ships, unless it would be for some special route, with the condition imposed that he must operate them under the American flag, even though they did not cost him a cent. That is true, probably, largely because of world conditions. Not only do present conditions hinder and interfere with the disposal of those ships, but so would the conditions that would confront us even if business conditions would get better. They know that without legislation of this kind they would have to come in competition with the ships of the world, and as Americans did not go into this business prior to 1914, we have no reason to think they would make a success of it now. But if we put upon the statute books legislation under which American shippers would feel that under normal conditions they could compete with their competitors in the world trade, then they would be willing to pay more for the ships in order to have them.

It seems to me that is a business proposition. It seems to me a ship man would look at it in that way. Through that principle we believe that if the legislation is put upon the statute books, whenever we can sell the ships we will get a better price for them than if we do not enact the legislation. In my judgment, though I may be entirely wrong about it, we would recover in increased prices for those ships when they are sold more than enough money to compensate for the subsidy that we would pay out. Of course that is only an opinion; that is only a judgment; and it may be wrong. I think we can well afford in handling this great property of the people to take the chance. Every one of the ships we are operating now that we can get in private hands relieves us of a part of the $50,000,000 loss we are bearing now.

We often hear of men saying, "I do not propose to send good money after bad," and it may be the wise policy to lose what has been put in rather than to put some more money in. That may be wise for the Government. It may be wise for us to say, "Oh, it is $3,000,000,000 worth of property, but let it go. Do not sink any more money in it." If that be thought the wise thing, if that be thought the best for our constituency, let us do it. The framers of the bill and the supporters of the bill do not think that is the wise thing to do. We believe that by putting a comparatively small sum of money—because $30,000,000 is very small compared with $3,000,000,000, $300,000,000 in 10 years is very small compared with $3,000,000,000—we will get even that much more out of it.

As I said—and I do not want this to be overlooked—we will not spend the $30,000,000 if we do not sell the ships and get them into private hands and operating under the American flag. So, Mr. President, it seems to me we take very little chance in the matter; that it is almost a sure thing that we shall not lose any money.

That is the way it seems to me. We take the chance of bringing back to our people millions of dollars that they otherwise would not get and we have the absolutely sure thing that we will not spend this money if we do not get the ships under private operation under the American flag. There are no other ships to go under the American flag than the ships which the Government now owns. Of course the measure is so favorable that it may induce people to build some new ships, which would be a great thing, and get them under the American flag. That is where they will go. There is where they will have to go to get any of the benefits of the measure, and under our law they could not transfer ships from the American flag to any other flag without the Shipping Board's consent.

So, Mr. President, from the standpoint of logic and reason and what appears to me to be good business sense, our constituency would deem us recreant to our duty if we should not try to make something for them out of the tremendous expenditure of $3,000,000,000 which they have invested in these ships. Of course they expect to charge off a great deal of it because of war conditions or war profits. There is no doubt about that. But that is no excuse for us not to try to get everything we possibly can out of it for them.

Now, Mr. President, I want to discuss just a moment the subsidy feature. This, in my judgment, is no new thing in governmental action. If what we are doing in the pending bill is a subsidy, then all parties have favored subsidies at one time and another. To call one thing a subsidy and a similar thing governmental aid or governmental encouragement does not make the latter any less a subsidy any more than calling a cow in one pasture a cow and calling a cow in another pasture a horse makes the latter cow a horse.

When a great public good is sought we do not hesitate to use some of the taxes paid by all the people to pay a few to bring about that good, and I think we are justified in doing it in all proper cases. I have voted for those things when they appealed to me as necessary to accomplish a great governmental good for the people of the country.

Call it subsidy or whatever you please, to my mind it is the exercise of one of the great responsibilities of government to promote the good of the people. We took the money of all the people and put it in the reclamation fund to reclaim desert lands which we turned over to a few upon the repayment of the cost of reclamation, without interest and without charge for the use of the land pending repayment. If that is not a subsidy, I do not know what it is. I was heartily in favor of such legislation and of such a policy and I think it has fully justified itself. A great public good has been served through a comparatively small outlay of the people's money and all the people of the country have gotten tremendous benefits out of it.

I called attention some time ago to the condition out in some of the Western States. I had the good fortune and the pleasure to begin my life in the West in a desert section of that great country. The Government came in by and by, put in a few millions of dollars to reclaim the desert land which was producing nothing, which was absolutely just as barren as the desert of Sahara. When the World War came on thousands of boys went to the front from that desert territory who would not have been there if we had not reclaimed the land, and millions of dollars now come into the Treasury in income taxes that would not come if that land had not been reclaimed. There is wealth and property producing taxes to defray the expenses of county, State, and National Governments that would not have been there if the Government had not put its money in to reclaim the lands.

Special benefit to that community? Yes. Special benefit to the individuals and farmers who went in there? Yes. But the tremendous benefits to the Nation, to the State, and to the county are benefits, Mr. President, which in my judgment fully justify the action of those who voted for that policy.

Second-class mail matter is carried for publishers at less than cost. It is estimated that they get a benefit of millions and millions of dollars a year, more than the $30,000,000 which we propose to provide for shipping. Why? While this is a direct benefit to the few, there is a resultant public good that is thought to justify it, and which the Congress clearly believes justifies it, because we make no effort to do away with it. But, Mr. President, we consider that the enlightenment and education of the people far outweighs and outmeasures the little money we might get in as revenue if we charged them the full cost of transportation.

We take from the taxes of all the people to build public roads that serve a few of the people. The direct benefit is to the few and to some particular community, but there is a public good that justifies our action. How those who oppose this measure, designed as it is to serve a great public good, and how one standing upon principles can justify voting for these other things I can not understand. I do not question their honesty or their sincerity, but I do not want them to charge me with being in league with the shipping trust and the shipping interests because I support the measure.

We donated hundreds of millions of acres of land to aid in the construction of railroads across the country. We may now think it was unwise to have done so, but those who did it did so to induce men to put their money in an uncertain enterprise, because of the great national good to be served; otherwise no plans would have been made. I believe that history has justified that legislation. The building up of the country and the development of our resources would have been delayed many, many years had not that great thing been done.

Mr. President, we are now paying out $50,000,000 a year more than we receive for the service rendered for the running of about 400 of our ships.

These ships are operated on routes to serve particular communities and a particular portion of our people; but a great public good is served, however. It is strange to me, however, that those who oppose a subsidy in principle favor continuing this policy. This $50,000,000 annual outlay, to my mind, is just as much a subsidy as is the proposal in this bill, without accomplishing nearly so much as we think the bill, if enacted, will accomplish. This $50,000,000 outlay simply serves to keep the service going while the ships last. When the ships play out, as they will soon, there will be none to take their places; that is, there will be none unless we provide legislation of this kind or unless out of the Public Treasury we appropriate money to build ships to replace them as they wear out. They will be dropped, and a great disaster will come to communities and to individuals and to business. Under this bill, if the money is paid out, not only will the service be rendered and the ships be put under the American flag in private ownership but provision will be made to replace the worn-out ships with new ones. That will be a public good that will more than justify the expenditure of this money.

Mr. President, as I have said, this is an honest, patriotic effort to save to the people of the country as much as possible of the $3,000,000,000 war expenditure for shipping and at the same time permanently to establish and maintain a merchant marine under the American flag sufficient to carry one-half of our foreign commerce and thereby aid in the development and expansion of our foreign trade, protect our people and industries from the exorbitant and ruinous freight exactions to which they have been subjected in the war emergencies of the past, provide greatly for the national defense, and thus avoid the humiliating as well as the dangerous situations which have confronted us in years gone by. We propose to expend in 10 years but little, if any, more than we shall spend in one year on our Navy; for if we expend this sum we shall have a merchant fleet that will make unnecessary the expenditure of many millions of dollars for naval ships alone, guarantee our farmers and business men against the exactions of foreign shipping, and put the Nation upon an equality in naval strength with Great Britain.

I am not a naval expert, but I understand from naval men, and I think everybody understands, that we must in time of war or in case of a national emergency of that sort have some fast merchant ships in order to take care of the fleet battleships, cruisers, and other naval vessels that may be necessary. We have ratified what is known as the "four-power pact"; I was for it; I believe it is a great thing for the peace of the world, though some do not; but it is certain that unless we have a merchant marine we shall practically be helpless on the sea. Talk about equality of navies! Unless we establish and build up our merchant marine we shall be absolutely at the mercy of some navies of the world. Many of the British merchant ships can be transformed into agencies of war almost overnight; and unless we have an adequate, well-balanced fleet not only will England dominate the navies of the world but she will dominate the merchant fleets of the world, and thus our commerce and business and the commerce and business of the world will be at her will. We must have ships of that kind not only for our foreign commerce but in order to meet national emergencies, to make it possible to defend ourselves and to protect our rights among the nations of the world and upon the sea.

Mr. President, the writer from whom I have quoted well said that a nation without a merchant marine is "half slave and half free." If we expend $30,000,000 under the pending bill, we shall guarantee 7,500,000 tons of merchant shipping under the American flag. With that, then, indeed, will we cease to be "half slave and half free" commercially. Then we shall take our rightful place and our independent place among the nations of the earth.

Mr. President, to-day special legislation is being pressed for the farmers of the country. Agriculture is in a deplorable condition; there is no question about that, and Congress is going to pass whatever legislation it may deem necessary or that it may consider necessary in order to aid agriculture; but agriculture is in no more deplorable condition than is shipping in the country. While we gladly and cheerfully aid agriculture and the farmers of the country, why should we not also help and aid this other great handmaiden not only of agriculture but of business of every kind and character as well as a great instrument of national defense?

Mr. President, I wish to close this general discussion of the pending measure with this language:

> If the shipping bill is objected to by our opponents, what practical suggestion or remedy have they to offer? The American people will not be content with academic objections. They do not want a practical plan rejected unless a better substitute is offered. Let the opponents of this bill present such a substitute, or let them hold their peace.
> Will the Republicans, Democrats, and Progressives in Congress meet the cry of the American manufacturer, the American business man, and the American banker by immediately passing this measure, which will set our great country upon a new career of world influence? Will they vote now to carry out their long-neglected pledges to the people?

And I might add, will they vote now to provide a means of realizing the greatest possible sum out of the three billions of taxes paid into the Treasury from the pockets of the people of every class and of every section of our country?

> Will they emancipate American commerce from the dependence upon foreign vessels and set it safely on the highway of peaceful conquest, under the American flag, of the open markets of the world?

The language I have quoted, Mr. President, is that of Hon. William G. McAdoo before the Commercial Club at Chicago on January 9, 1915.

Mr. President, I wish to note briefly one or two of the points made in the views of the minority, prepared by my good friend the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], who I know is just as devoted to the upbuilding of an American merchant marine as I am. I regret more than I can say that he and I could not agree in support of the pending measure. I remember how in the framing of the act of 1920 Democrats and Republicans worked in the utmost harmony, and I remember how a subcommittee, composed of Democrats and Republicans, unanimously agreed upon the terms of that measure. I recall also that it came from the Commerce Committee with practically the unanimous support of all that committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does not the Senator also remember that at that moment the whole world was engaged in a great war?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No, Mr. President; the war had been concluded.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And it devolved upon the Government to transport troops and munitions of war across the sea?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was referring to the act of 1920, when, as the Senator knows, the war had closed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Great War had barely ceased.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It had been over for a couple of years.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Efforts to help the American merchant marine did not begin in 1920.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But I am for the moment talking about the act of 1920.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator was talking about the merchant marine.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was at the time the Senator interrupted me paying a very nice compliment, I thought, to my friend from Florida. Does not the Senator want me to do that? I was also trying to pay a compliment to my Democratic friends on the other side of the Chamber. Does not the Senator from Mississippi want me to do that?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am afraid the "hand is the hand of Esau, but the voice is the voice of Jacob."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think, Mr. President, anybody but the Senator from Mississippi would so think. I believe my friends, at least those on the Committee on Commerce, know that I have acted in a patriotic sort of a way, and I have, I think, treated them with absolute fairness and with the greatest consideration, which is no more than they were entitled to. In the consideration of the measure to which I referred politics were set aside and we worked together, framed that measure, reported it out, and it passed the Senate practically without any party division. I had hoped that, as a Democratic administration and a Republican administration had failed or refused to carry out what I consider one of the most fundamental features of the law, we could go on now and frame this legislation entirely free from partisanship, for there ought not to be any partisanship in a measure that deals so vitally with the property and the future prosperity and happiness of the American people. However, we could not agree, and so we in a friendly way disagreed with reference to it.

I have not had the time to go into detail in reference to the views of the minority submitted by my friend from Florida, but I notice therein some statements which I think are wrong. I know that he does not intend to mislead the Senate or the country, for there is not a more conscientious man on this floor than is the Senator from Florida; but hurriedly last night I examined the views of the minority, and there are two or three statements contained in that document to which I desire to call attention. The Senator from Florida states in the minority views on the shipping bill which were published December 10:

> Regarding the alleged losses now experienced by the Shipping Board from operations we have no accurate data.

Mr. President, the Senator, I am sure, is mistaken about that. I have here a letter from Mr. Sinclair, comptroller of the Shipping Board, dated November 24, 1922, addressed to Hon. GEORGE W. EDMONDS, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., which gives in detail the expenses and receipts from the operation of ships by the Shipping Board. The letter demonstrates beyond controversy that we are losing over $50,000,000 a year. The letter has been printed in the RECORD in the proceedings of the House of Representatives, but I think that it would be wise to put it in the RECORD here, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD, together with the table which accompanies it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

NOVEMBER 24, 1922.

Hon. GEORGE W. EDMONDS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Pursuant to your telephone request, I herein beg to inclose statement of estimated operating results of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation for the four months from July to October, 1922, inclusive.

The word "estimated" is used only because certain portions of certain voyages which have been terminated have not, as to their expenses, yet been confirmed by vouchers which must be received from abroad. That amounts to a very small percentage of the total, and our experience is such that we can very closely gauge what it should be, but for purposes of accuracy we term the statements as "estimated." In fact, they are actual.

You will note that the total loss (without, of course, taking into account anything for capital charges, to wit: Interest, insurance, or depreciation) amounts to $13,058,593.37. Out of this, however, there is a general and administrative expense not directly applicable to operation of vessels of $2,197,513.24 for the period. This general and administrative expense is in connection with the liquidation of the assets that remained over in plant and material from the previous board, as well as expense in connection with settlement of tens of millions of dollars of construction claims.

You will note from the summary that this total loss is divided as follows:

	Loss on operations	Total loss.
July	$2,242,714.14	$2,783,096.13
August	2,662,728.62	3,268,507.76
September	3,140,860.53	3,652,789.81
October	2,814,776.84	3,354,219.67
Total	10,861,080 13	13,058,593.37

For purposes of round figuring, we will say that the loss for the period of four months has been $11,000,000. As this is one-third of the year, should the loss keep on this basis it would be $33,000,000 for the year, but anyone who estimates that the loss of the Shipping Board for the year will be $33,000,000 deceives himself. In the first place, the four months covered are the most favorable months in the year as to passenger earnings. I estimate within that period almost half of the passenger earnings of the whole 12 months accrue. It must be remembered that the summer is the great ocean passenger traveling period. The result is that, while in so far as cash outlay goes the operations of passenger ships have shown very little loss in the period covered, for most of the ensuing eight months of the fiscal year the loss will be, we estimate, $1,800,000 more than it was for the first four months.

Our total loss of the Shipping Board has been $13,058,593.37 for the first four months. During that period we not only had the peak of passenger earnings, but we spent practically no moneys in extraordinary repair of ships. We now find that there are absolutely necessary structural changes which must be made in our twenty-three 535-foot passenger ships within the next four months which will amount to $3,000,000. These extraordinary structural changes are imperative. There were no sums expended for extraordinary changes in any of our ships in the first four months; thus this constitutes an additional loss.

Because of adverse operating conditions during the next six months, our monthly operating loss will increase by $500,000 for that period. The months of May, June, July, August, September, and October are favorable to operation. From November 1 to May 1 are the months of storms on the seas, when the operating expenses increase. So that for the six months' period to come, if we operate on the same economical basis as the last four months, the normal increase for the six months in loss for this item will be $3,000,000.

Our fuel-oil contract on the eastern coast expired November 11. We advertised for bids and had all companies in America bid for renewal of the contract for a year. Beginning with November 12, we had to make a new contract at the lowest price we got as a result of advertised bids, wherein our cost for oil was increased 50 cents per barrel. We are using 1,000,000 barrels of oil per month, so you see that even with the same economical operations as the last four months the increased cost at the increase of 50 cents per barrel will amount to a total of $4,000,000.

Thus we came to the following totals:

Our loss for the first four months, including $2,197,513.24 for expenses not directly applicable to operation, was		$13,058,000
The immediate expenditures for structural changes to be made within the next four months on the twenty-three 535-foot passenger ships will be		3,000,000
Additional losses due to adverse operating conditions for the six months, at $500,000 per month		3,000,000
Increased cost of oil, based upon increase of 50 cents per barrel, and the use of 1,000,000 barrels monthly for eight months		4,000,000
Decrease in passenger earnings for winter months, six months at $300,000 per month		1,800,000
Estimated losses for eight months, November to June, inclusive, on the basis of the loss for the past four months, but not including the four added items immediately given above		26,116,000
Total estimated losses for the fiscal year 1923		50,974,000

Of course, in this loss is included the general and administrative expense not directly applicable to operation of vessels. As this was $2,197,513.24 for the first four months, if it kept on at the same rate it would be approximately $6,600,000 for the year. So, taking this off of the total estimate of $50,974,000, the total loss for the year would give us an operating loss of approximately $44,000,000. However, the loss for the current fiscal year will come nearer to $50,000,000 for the reason that freight rates are constantly dropping. Our total estimated loss of $44,000,000 for operating alone is based on the experience now of recorded results to such an extent that as comptroller I do not hesitate to aver that it can not be less, and that the estimate constitutes the only proper and correct forecast obtainable for the Shipping Board's operations for this year. I do not allow myself any appreciable latitude to be wrong.

However, what the decrease in freight rates will be is not within the purview of a comptroller. The figures I am about to give come from our operating officials, who, after we arrived at the forecast of losses given above, brought to my attention the constant drop in freight rates and insisted that we must allow an additional $6,000,000 to $10,000,000 for decrease in this direction.

To give you some actual figures, let me state that in July of this fiscal year the Shipping Board ships carried 794,447 tons of freight, for which they received $5,693,012.86, or $7.18 average revenue per ton.

In August we carried 976,236 tons, for which we received $6,524,620.57, or $6.68 average per ton. In September, the last figures available, we carried 1,029,185 tons, for which we received only $5,614,665.58, or merely $5.45 per ton.

The most interesting part of this is that in the months of August and September of this year we carried the same number of tons, practically, as last year. We received almost $22,000,000 for the tonnage carried for the two months last year, as against a little over $12,000,000 for the same tonnage this year.

You can thus see that with the constant monthly drop in freight rates the loss for the next eight months, even with increased efficiencies in management, must be larger than for the four months actually given here.

The Shipping Board is not cutting rates. Most of the rates are the same on all lines. The decrease in freight rates is due to decrease in general cargoes offered though the Shipping Board fortunately has been able, in face of these hard times, to maintain its volume of business carried.

To sum up, the four months just passed were extremely favorable to the best possible showing, for passenger earnings were at their peak, the season of the year was favorable from weather conditions for ship operations, oil was being purchased at two-thirds of the price on the east coast that will be paid for the balance of the year, and there were no extraordinary expenditures for structural repairs. Further, fortunately in those four months we had not felt the full effect of declining freight rates. So that, based on the actual losses during the four months just closed, a conservative estimate of the losses for the fiscal year still remains at $50,000,000, in spite of every effort in efficiency that may be made or retained to hold same low.

That the board is making every effort to make the losses as small as possible is evidenced by the fact that the losses from April to September of this year, the last figures available, are something over $30,000,000 less than the losses for the same six months of last year. Of the six months covered last year, three months were under the present board, and the major share of the losses occurred under the prior board. Thus the board's record of successful endeavor to curtail losses is attested in the actual audited figures of results. But even with this aggressive curtailment, the present fiscal year will show a loss of at least $50,000,000.

It might be of interest for me to call to your attention that the losses in the last fiscal year, November to June, inclusive (during which period the present Shipping Board has gotten operations pretty well in hand), were approximately $30,000,000. The loss for the same period this year must be greater, because of the unbelievably unfavorable freight market now operating—the lowest, possibly, ever known in modern ship operations. It is obvious to see that no economies, no matter now great, can overcome the more than 40 per cent decline in freight rates this year as against last year. When rates will harden is not to be estimated; the disjointing of world trade, the excess of tonnage existing through the war, Germany's present building program, and the extensive Government operations by the United States are all given by expert shipping men as contributing to the unfortunate situation.

Of course, even if freight rates should improve some time within the next 24 months, the losses of the Shipping Board would not be comparably reduced, for it must be remembered that the fleet is constantly getting older and that the Shipping Board has not spent nearly enough in upkeep and repairs. Upkeep and repairs have been neglected, because the board had to operate within its appropriations, and the entire appropriation it received from the Congress has been used in operations. As soon as freight rates get at all better, the board must spend large sums in keeping up its ships, if the deterioration is not to be ridiculously fast. Thus, for some period to come, if the assets under the board are to be properly cared for, there is no relief in sight from the losses now being recorded.

If there is any further illumination or explanation needed by you or any Members of the House, it will be my pleasure to promptly furnish same.

Very truly yours,

P. SINCLAIR, Comptroller.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the Senator from Florida, when he examines that, will see that that statement is hardly correct.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. I want to say in that connection that I am perfectly willing for the letter to go in the RECORD again, although it has already gone in the RECORD; but I differ with the Senator in his conclusion that it shows beyond question what the losses are, and I defy anybody to read that letter and do any more than does the author of the letter—guess at what the possible losses may be. The letter speaks for itself. I am going to discuss it when my time comes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The letter will speak for itself. I do not profess to be an expert. I do not know anything about the operation of these ships and the revenues that come in. Of course, if the comptroller in charge of these things can not give us any definite information I do not know where anybody can get it. I think the letter will speak for itself:

> One thing is certain, and that is there is no occasion for continuing these losses.

That is the conclusion of my friend from Florida, and I suppose he will amplify it when he presents his argument to the Senate. If it is certain that there is no occasion for continuing these losses, then, indeed, the Shipping Board is recreant to its duty and has demonstrated its absolute unfitness for the place it is in. Not only that, but it shows that it is probably willfully wasting the people's money. I can not think that that is true, Mr. President, especially in view of the record that, I think, its members have made of a far more efficient organization and more economical operation of the Shipping Board than had ever been carried on before they went into office.

> If the Shipping Board can not escape them, then let them turn the ships over to the Panama Steamship Co. or to the United States Line, under Mr. Rossbottom, these two concerns alone now being guilty of the offense of Government operation, and we have no doubt we will share in the experience which these lines have enjoyed up to this time, namely, a profitable and successful business.

Mr. President, what are the facts about that? Let us see about this "profitable and successful business."

The Panama Railroad Steamship Co. has just published its annual report for the year ended June, 1922. I have this report here. It states, on page 23:

> The operations of the Panama Railroad Steamship Line during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922, although more favorable than for the preceding year, resulted in a deficit of $587,332.45 after charging to operating expenses $358,429.44 account of depreciation and general and extraordinary repairs.

It is to be borne in mind that this statement does not include the charges for taxes, interest, and insurance which have to be borne by all privately owned American steamship companies operating to the Panama Canal region. It does cover depreciation, which is usually not taken into account by the Government. These charges, if allowed for, would increase the deficit to several hundred thousand dollars more.

Mr. WATSON. How many ships do they operate?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know how many ships they operate.

In the fiscal year ended June 30, 1921, the deficit of the Panama Railroad Steamship Line, as stated in its annual report for that year, was $700,810.22. That does not look like a very "profitable and successful business," as stated in the report. It is explained in this year's report that the carriage of Government freight and passengers, a virtual monopoly of this company—and that must not be forgotten; the Panama Railroad Steamship Line has practically a monopoly of the Government business between this country and Panama—was conducted "at material reductions from the regular tariff rates. Had the steamship line received tariff rates for such services, its deficit of $587,332.45 would have been reduced to approximately $125,000." But this available Government business would normally have to be divided with the privately owned American steamship lines to Panama instead of being monopolized, under the present arrangement, by the Government line alone. That the Government owns and operates the Panama Railroad Steamship Line not as "a profitable and successful business" but at a very heavy present annual loss it seems to me is sufficiently demonstrated by these figures.

As to the United States Lines, operating passenger ships from New York to Bremen, also described by the Senator from Florida as conducting "a profitable and successful business," those are the lines under Mr. Rossbottom. An official communication signed by T. H. Rossbottom, general manager, and his colleagues to Chairman Lasker, of the Shipping Board, is published on page 228 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for Tuesday, November 28, 1922. Here is what they state about it:

> It must be borne in mind that the results of the present operations of the United States Lines would show a loss of items of insurance, depreciation, and interest were charged against operating income. This situation would be aggravated if the anticipated reduction in passenger rates takes place.
> We can not impress upon you too forcibly the necessity for the enactment of the "alien" provision in the shipping bill in order to accomplish the purpose of the Shipping Board to have a privately owned, permanent merchant marine established and in successful operation upon the North Atlantic.

It must not be forgotten that the ships referred to are operating in probably the most profitable line across the Atlantic Ocean. They have every possible advantage to make them a success, and yet—

> Unless that or some equivalent method is adopted, the steamers at present being operated by the United States Lines must continue to be run by the Shipping Board, with a probable drain on the Treasury until the vessels become obsolete, when the United States Lines will automatically retire from the North Atlantic passenger trade, leaving that service to be maintained by steamships of foreign registry.

And yet the proposal of my good friend from Florida is to turn all these Shipping Board vessels over to that line because it is so "profitable"; and yet this is signed:

> Respectfully submitted.
> UNITED STATES LINES,
> By T. H. ROSSBOTTOM,
> General Manager.
> MOORE & MCCORMACK (INC.),
> By A. V. MOORE, President.
> By E. J. MCCORMACK, Treasurer.
> ROOSEVELT STEAMSHIP CO. (INC.),
> By KERMIT ROOSEVELT.
> By A. E. CLEGG,
> Operating Managers, United States Lines.

Mr. President, this would appear to be an authoritative and convincing statement of the present condition and prospects of the United States Lines without some such powerful national encouragement as this bill provides.

The Senator from Florida, in his minority report, refers to cargo ships and liners, and he says:

> It is alleged that the subsidy is intended for the benefit of a suitable fleet to carry American grain and provisions and cotton to markets in foreign lands. These are described as "the farmers' kind of ships."
> It is perfectly plain, on the other hand, that the ships which would chiefly be benefited are not the cargo ships at all, but passenger ships and those of other types.
> For instance, a cargo ship of 5,500 gross tons, such as those vessels built at Hog Island, would receive a minimum compensation. Such a ship, along with practically 1,200 others, composing our cargo carriers, would have about 200 steaming days a year, and make about 200 miles a day, and receive the one-half cent rate, which would amount to about $11,000 per annum.

Mr. President, it is true that the rate specified for the cargo ships is not as great in figures as that specified for the liners, and yet the experts before the committee testified that proportionately and relatively a greater benefit goes to the cargo ships than to the liners because they are less expensive to operate, have smaller crews, and take less coal or oil, and so forth; so the fact that there is a higher rate of cents per ton for the liners than for the cargo ships does not show that more favors are rendered to the liner than to the cargo ship. As I said, the experts say that there is less favor to the liner proportionately and relatively than to the cargo ship; but the purpose of the subsidy payment to cargo ships is entirely to meet the difference in wages between the American ship and her foreign, particularly her British, competitor of like type and tonnage, because that is the main difference.

The following is an exact comparison of wages paid on the American steamer Hog Island and the British steamer Cornish Point, of nearly equal dead-weight tonnage, the American ship being an economical oil burner and the British ship a coal burner, the American ship having a speed of 10 knots and the British ship a speed of 13 knots.

Mr. President, I ask permission to print this table here. It shows the specific charges and rates. It shows that the difference in cost of American wages over the English wages per month is $735, or per year $8,820. In other words, it costs that much more to operate that American ship than it does to operate that corresponding British ship.

There being no objection, the table referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Difference in cost American wages over English:
Per month $735
Per year 8,820

Mr. JONES of Washington. Now, what about the subsidy? If, as is stated in the minority report, the Hog Island under this bill were to receive a subsidy of $11,000 a year, this would adequately cover the annual difference in the pay of the crew, which would be $8,820, and a further difference that exists in the cost of feeding the officers and seamen. This is all that would be required, for American and British cargo ships purchase their fuel and general stores and supplies on the world's level of markets. The higher wage and subsistence cost of the American crew is, therefore, the only factor that needs to be covered by a subsidy or compensation. There would be hundreds of American cargo steamers, like the Hog Island, afloat and in active service in the hands of American owners if they were given a rate of compensation of $11,000 a year; that would virtually equalize their wage-operating costs with the costs of their British competitors. This $11,000, it is true, is not a large subsidy, but it is all that the distinctive cargo steamer needs. It covers the difference in the cost of operation and a little bit more; but that is all that we ask for. That is all that anybody could expect.

The minority report emphasizes the fact that the great fast ships will receive a higher rate of subsidy because of their superior size and speed combined. The truth is that because of their size and speed and, therefore, of the larger crews which they demand, especially for the proper care of passengers, they actually require a very much larger compensation from the Government in order to be able to meet their foreign competitors on anything like equal terms. In other words, the differential is greater, and, of course, a larger subsidy in amount must be raised to cover that differential.

The minority report cites the steamers George Washington and America, of the United States lines, declaring that the America would receive a "gift of $300,000 under this bill." But, again, it is easy to demonstrate from official facts that the higher compensation for the large, swift American passenger ships is necessary and justifiable. In a comparison of the wage roll of the America and of a similar British steamer, the Baltic, both well-known mail, passenger, and cargo carriers in the trans-Atlantic trade—the America, of 21,114 gross tons, 17 knots, burning coal, and the Baltic, of 23,884 gross tons, 17 knots, also burning coal—the differential in the American pay roll over the British pay roll for each month is $19,451.50, or, for the entire year, $233,468.

As in the case of the Hog Island and the Cornish Point, there must be also an allowance for the difference in the cost of subsistence of the American and British crews. Allowing for this subsistence of the 300 or 400 men usually carried on the America and Baltic, it is manifest that a compensation of the $300,000 a year mentioned in the minority report will approximately put the American liner on an equality with the British liner, exactly as the $11,000 a year would place the American freight ship on approximately even conditions with the British freight ship. Therefore, in proportion to the requirements of the case, the American cargo ship is just as well protected by a subsidy of $11,000 a year as the American mail, passenger, and freight liner is protected by a subsidy of $300,000.

The shipping bill does not discriminate against the cargo ship. It gives that ship exactly the same good, fair American chance that it gives the liner. As a matter of fact, it gives it a little bit better chance, and we can well afford to give more to the liners as a measure of national defense. We will be fully justified in doing that.

Another point of the minority views as presented by the Senator from Florida on the shipping bill is to this effect:

> It is argued that we must have a subsidy because our competitors subsidize shipping and shipyards.
>
> These competitors are named as Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan.
> The entire aggregate provision made for subsidies, subventions, and other aids in those countries amounts all told—Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan—to approximately seventeen million dollars per annum.

It happens that Mr. E. T. Chamberlain, long the United States Commissioner of Navigation, and still connected with the Department of Commerce in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, has lately completed a compendium of the subsidies, subventions, and other national aids to shipping now being provided by foreign governments. This compendium, as published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD Tuesday, November 28, 1922, pages 224–225, which I hold in my hand, shows that the present aids to shipping of the various governments of the world have been authorized at the rate of several times $17,000,000.

Manifestly foreign governments have learned out of the Great War to realise more vividly than ever the commercial and defensive value of a strong merchant shipping industry.

Following is the compendium of foreign subsidies and subventions at the present time as presented by Mr. Chamberlain:

Mr. FLETCHER. Under that Australia item alone, see how absurd and ridiculous is the statement, when we know that charged against subsidy there is the amount of $32,093,334, which the statement itself specifies as what the Government fleet cost Australia. That is the total cost of the fleet.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is the Government aid, just like the $50,000,000 we are paying out now. It is "subsidies, subventions, and Government aid." That is the way I read it, and that is the way I put it, and that is what it is. I will ask to have this printed in the RECORD, and it will speak for itself.

Mr. FLETCHER. We are talking now about paying out so much a year as subsidy, compensation, or whatever you call it——

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator says in his minority report:

> The entire aggregate provision made for subsidies, subventions, and other aids.

Mr. FLETCHER. Indirect aid. I do not mean to include in that the total cost of the fleet to Australia. She paid out so much and built so many ships. That is not to be classed here in the statement of what countries are paying out as subsidies.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What does the Senator say about Italy, with $28,576,000?

Mr. FLETCHER. I say that the evidence which I have here clearly and absolutely contradicts that, and shows that Italy has not only made smaller appropriations for subsidies recently than she ever made before but that she is abandoning the whole policy of subsidies.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have not that information, I must say. I ask that this may be printed in the RECORD. Although it is in the RECORD in the House proceedings I think it would be well to have it in here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REED of Pennsylvania in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Spanish cabinet in March, 1922, decided to increase subsidies to an amount not to exceed 50,000,000 pesetas ($7,650,000), and as Spanish subsidies are revised every two years, it is assumed that the revision is under consideration and will take effect in 1923.

Belgium.

The Belgian Government, by the act of July 16, 1916, is authorized to guarantee interest and amortization on 100,000,000 francs of bonds issued by the Lloyd Royal Belge Steamship Co. and to take over 75,000,000 of these bonds issued in 1920 and 25,000,000 francs issued in 1921.

Germany.

[Mark: Par value, 23.8 cents; current exchange fluctuation at between one and two hundredths of a cent.]

The German Government appropriated in February, 1921, 12,000,000,000 marks to German shipowners to pay for their ships surrendered, on the basis of the subsidy law of November, 1917. At the time it was believed this amount would rebuild in German yards 2,500,000 gross tons. Since then the Government has printed paper marks so fast that shipowners and shipbuilders, through the bank which distributes the fund, demanded, in September, 1922, an additional 24,000,000,000 marks, and the arbitration court has decided the Government must add 18,000,000,000 marks to the shipowners' subsidy between September, 1922, and March, 1923. This additional amount, however, has not yet been voted by the Reichstag and printed by the presses. The Berliner Tageblatt says German shipowners insist on freight rates and passenger fares being paid in foreign exchange, while they pay wages and general costs of operation, where possible, in paper marks.

Summary.

In the following summary of the above item it should be noted:

1. That the amount for Australia is very large, because a main item is a statement of the difference between the first cost of the Commonwealth fleet and the amount of net earnings from 1916 to July, 1922, used by Premier Hughes to show the fleet could probably be sold for the amount of the difference. The actual loss or subsidy could be determined only by selling the fleet.

2. The largest Canadian amount is for losses on the Government fleet for several years, carried to the account for the past year.

3. British naval reserve appropriations are included in naval estimates.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This compilation shows for the British Empire total national aid to shipping of all kinds for the current year of $59,529,778, including, as it should, the losses paid out of the public treasury for the Government-owned British fleets of Canada and Australia. France in this current year had subsidies of $5,107,000; Italy, $28,576,000; Japan, $4,833,000; and so on. Included rightly also is the $2,760,000 of mail subsidies paid to Norwegian coastal steamers. The total amount made available in this current year for shipping aid of one kind and another by the British Empire and other nations is stated by Mr. Chamberlain to be $108,398,409.

I want now briefly to point out what the bill provides for, and then I will be through. I shall not go into it at any great length.

TITLE 1 CONSISTS OF AMENDMENTS TO THE MERCHANT MARINE ACT OF 1920—SALES.

The amendment broadens the power of the board to make sales, but limits the minimum rate of interest to 4½ per cent, the maximum period of time over which payments are to be distributed to 15 years, and provides that the payments must at all times cover the depreciation of the vessel. The Leviathan may not be sold for less than the cost of reconditioning.

That is one provision put in in the House. There probably will be considerable discussion about that. It is going to cost about $9,000,000 to recondition the Leviathan. Her sister ships were reconditioned by the British Government and turned over to the British companies for $4,000,000. How we can hope anybody would take the Leviathan and pay the $9,000,000 for her and then compete with these sister ships I do not know, but the Senate committee did not see fit to strike out that provision.

The sales policy is also amended to emphasize the desirability of maintaining routes from outports and of giving the domestic communities primarily interested the first opportunity for two years to purchase such routes. Domestic communities are defined. The bill affirms the purpose of discouraging monopoly in shipping.

INSURANCE.

Purchasers on the deferred-payment plan are required to keep the equity of the United States insured, protected by hull insurance, and, if the board so requires, by protection and indemnity insurance. The board may create an insurance fund in which it may insure any plant or materials owned by the board or the equity of the United States on any vessel or in which a purchaser may insure the equity of the United States if he is unable to insure such equity in the American insurance market at as low a price as it could be placed abroad.

CONSTRUCTION LOAN FUND.

The act of 1920 is amended so that the construction loan fund of $125,000,000 may be created as the money becomes available instead of at the rate of $25,000,000 per year. The loan may be used for the construction of the most efficient types of vessels or the installing of efficient machinery in existing hulls.

The loan is limited to an amount of two-thirds of the value of the ship constructed or reequipped, and may not be loaned for longer than 15 years nor at less than 4½ per cent interest.

The Senate committee reported a proviso prohibiting the loan of this money to companies or corporations for the building of ships for the carrying of their own products. The committee thought it was wise to make that limitation on that fund.

MAIL.

The act of 1920 is amended by withdrawing the power which it gave to the Postmaster General in conjunction with the chairman of the Shipping Board to make contracts for the carriage of ocean mails. The ocean mail act of 1891 is repealed.

Title 2 of the bill concerns taxation, and there were two provisions in that as it passed the House providing for an exemption from income tax on the operation of the ship and on the sale of ships. Those were provisions which were in the act of 1920, and it was hoped that under the conditions existing at that time many new ships would be built under those provisions, but for some reason the Treasury Department rules and regulations authorized in that act have not yet been made and approved, and so those provisions have not been put into operation. It was stated by the experts that there would be no practical benefits from those provisions at this time under the present laws and in present conditions, and so the committee struck out those two provisions from the bill as it passed the House.

TONNAGE DUTIES.

Tonnage taxes are doubled for all vessels of such size as to make them, if otherwise eligible, recipients of direct aid.

TITLE 3 CONCERNS IMMIGRATION.

This title declares the policy of the United States to be that one-half of our immigrants shall be carried in American bottoms. The President is directed to take such steps as may remove treaty stipulations conflicting with this policy. When no conflict exists, the policy is to be carried out under regulations approved by the Secretary of Labor and Secretary of State.

TITLE 4 CONCERNS DIRECT AID.

MERCHANT MARINE FUND.

A merchant marine fund is created from all tonnage taxes, 10 per cent of all customs duties, and the direct aid refunded by owners who have made 10 per cent profit or more in any one year. Appropriation is to be sought annually for the necessary amount of direct aid.

THE CONTRACT.

Section 403 authorizes the Shipping Board to enter into contracts for the payment of compensation. The contracts may run for 10 years and compensation shall be paid at reasonable intervals, not exceeding six months. The board may refuse for good reasons to enter into a contract on a vote of not less than five members.

The committee put in a proviso to that amendment relating to contracts, expressly providing that no contract shall extend beyond a period of 15 years from the enactment of this act. It was pointed out that under the language of the bill a contract might be made for 9½ years, and then renewed for 10 years, so that a contract might run for nearly 20 years. The committee inserted a proviso stating that no contract shall extend beyond the period of 15 years from the enactment of this act, which cuts out that possibility.

DETERMINATION OF AMOUNT OF COMPENSATION.

The amount of compensation is based upon the distance steamed and the rate allowed per hundred nautical miles. The rate depends upon the size of the vessel and the speed of which she is capable, in the case of power-driven vessels, and upon the size alone in the case of sailing craft. Mileage is based upon chart distance between ports, except that a different distance may be allowed in special cases if the board deems it necessary.

The following requirements must be met by the vessels:

She must be maintained in the highest classification in the American Bureau of Shipping.

Two-thirds of her unlicensed crew must, after three years, be composed of American citizens, and the remainder must be eligible for citizenship. In the case of passenger vessels this does not extend to the steward's department.

She must be self-propelled over the mileage covered, except in cases of distress or in navigating harbors or inland waterways.

She must be built in the United States, except that certain vessels built before the enactment of the act may be admitted to compensation if registered under the American flag within three years and if five members of the board so vote.

She must be engaged in foreign trade as defined by the bill.

Certain feeder ships primarily serving the foreign trade of the United States are also eligible.

Three-fourths of the total fleet, owned, operated, or chartered by an owner receiving compensation, must be American.

VARIANCE OF RATE.

The board may vary the rate of compensation set by the bill within limits of 100 per cent either way upon a vote of not less than five members of the board.

OBLIGATIONS OF COMPENSATED OWNER.

An owner receiving compensation agrees that his vessels may be requisitioned in time of emergency upon a fair preemergency value. Sale of the vessel carries this obligation with it to the new owner. All repairs and renewals, other than distress repairs, are to be made in American ports.

The owner contracts to repay to the Treasury half of the amount by which in any one year his net income exceeds 10 per cent on his invested capital until the amount of aid received by him in that year shall have been refunded. Detailed provisions are included for the administration of this section.

That, briefly, explaining it a little more, means this: Of course, it is not desirable, and it ought not to be the case, that compensation would be given to a vessel owner who is making a large profit in the operation of the ship. The committee does not desire that to be done. So we have provided that where the profit of the ship operator exceeds 10 per cent in any year one-half of the excess comes back into the Treasury of the United States up to the amount of the compensation that may be paid.

Mr. POMERENE. Ten per cent figured on what?

Mr. JONES of Washington. We tried to work it out upon the actual value of the property invested. In other words, the experts have tried to devise every possible way to prevent evasion or what you might term inflation.

Mr. POMERENE. Let me put a hypothetical case. Suppose a man buys ships from the Shipping Board which cost him $5,000,000, and then proceeds to organize a company, and in having these ships appraised it develops that it would cost him $10,000,000 to duplicate that $5,000,000 worth of ships. Would he be limited to 10 per cent on the five million he paid for the ships, or would he get 10 per cent on the $10,000,000 worth of ships?

Mr. JONES of Washington. As I understand, under the bill he would be entitled to 10 per cent on the $5,000,000 actually invested.

Mr. POMERENE. Not on the actual worth of the ships?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No, not on the actual worth of the ships as may be determined from time to time in the market, but on the actual money invested in the ships.

Mr. POMERENE. Let me put another question. Is there anything to prevent his turning the ships over to a corporation, assuming they were worth $10,000,000, and issuing therefor $10,000,000 worth of stock in the new shipping company?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think there is, and if there is not, if the Senator from Ohio will frame a provision covering that I will not object to its going in the bill. But I asked the experts particularly if they had tried to cover every possible means of evasion, and they said they had. They studied the matter for weeks, and tried to anticipate every possible way which might be taken to evade.

Mr. POMERENE. Let me put another question which has occurred to me, but which is not directly related to what the Senator is now discussing. There is a provision in the bill which prohibits any member of the Shipping Board from having any interest in these ships which are sold.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It goes further than that, I think, covering not only a member of the Shipping Board but anyone who has been employed by it. It is broader than that.

Mr. POMERENE. I think the Senator is right about that. Suppose a man buys $5,000,000 worth of ships and organizes a $10,000,000 corporation to take over the ships. Is there anything in this bill which would prevent that corporation from employing a member of this Shipping Board after the holidays, or electing him as an officer, or permitting him to become a stockholder in that company?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am not sure that it goes as far as would be indicated by the Senator's question; but here is the language of the bill:

Provided, however, That no employee of the Government shall in any way be interested as a vendee in any purchase made from the Shipping Board.

Mr. POMERENE. He is not interested in the purchase, but he might be after the purchase is in fact made.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The question would be how far we would want to go with that proposition.

Mr. WATSON. I suppose the language limits it to the purchase made from the Shipping Board, because it says so. It would not mean subsequent sales.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I suppose not.

Mr. POMERENE. But, assuming that the purchaser of the ships organized his corporation and transferred the property to the corporation, of course the corporation is a different legal entity, but in effect the owner is one and the same, whether it is the individual who made the original purchase or the individual who organized the corporation and has the stock.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That would certainly be a fraud upon the law. Whether or not the court would hold it a fraud that would bring it within the terms of the proviso, I am not prepared to say.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not believe it was the intention of the committee to permit such a palpable evasion of the law to be made.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; it was not the intention of the committee to permit that.

Mr. WATSON. But, after all, permit me to suggest, if the original purchases were made for $5,000,000 and no person connected with the Shipping Board was connected with the corporation that made the purchase, it would not matter after that if a $10,000,000 corporation were organized to take over the vessels, because the 10 per cent is to be paid on the original purchase.

Mr. POMERENE. No; it would not make a great deal of difference, because, under the statement made by the Senator from Washington, only one half of the excess above 10 per cent would go to the Government and the other half would go to the stockholders. It is possible that a member or employee of the Shipping Board might anticipate some future relation to some shipping company. I do not know about that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the same reason that would prevent him from being interested in the original company would prevent him from being interested in the other company, as stated by the Senator from Ohio. That is, the same reason would apply.

Mr. POMERENE. I think so.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It would be a palpable fraud simply to evade the law. Whether or not the language prevents that, I hope Senators will consider very carefully. Personally, I would be perfectly willing to accept, so far as I could, any amendment that would prevent any such thing as that.

Mr. POMERENE. There is a Federal statute which prevents any employee of a department of the Government from acting as attorney or agent for anyone who may have a claim before that department which originated during the time that he was in that department. I think that is prohibited for a period of two years, as I now recall.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think so.

Mr. POMERENE. It would seem to me there ought to be some similar safeguard in this measure.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Something of that kind, I think, might be provided.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. I hope Senators do not take that provision very seriously. It might as well be stricken out. We would be very innocent, indeed, if Senators believed it would be enforcible. Often stock is purchased by the ladies in the family or by friends, and thereby such a provision evaded. It would not be very difficult for some member of the family or friend to purchase in this case, as is often done in order to evade similar provisions of the law.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, there is one further provision over which there will probably be considerable controversy. The House put in a provision that no money could be paid out on a contract except upon direct appropriation by Congress. That looked all right on its face. I suppose there is no Senator here but that believes Congress would appropriate the necessary money to carry out any contract that is made pursuant to law, but investors who put their money into these matters do not understand the situation as we do, and they would no doubt have a fear that Congress might fail or refuse to appropriate the money to carry out their contract, and if so they would not invest. Therefore it was urged very strongly and very earnestly by the Shipping Board people, and by persons interested in the success of the legislation, that the provision would practically nullify the act, and that no investment would be made under it. So the committee struck out that provision. We did, however, put in a proviso with reference to the increase of compensation after a contract was made, which is in the discretion of the Shipping Board, so that no such increase could be paid except upon appropriation by Congress.

TITLE 5 PERTAINS TO THE ARMY AND NAVY TRANSPORT SERVICE.

Section 501 provides that where adequate commercial transportation exists military services may be discontinued by the President. The military departments are authorized to contract up to 10 years with commercial organizations for such services.

TITLE 6 PERTAINS TO RAIL AND WATER TRAFFIC.

CREATION OF THE JOINT BOARD.

The creation of a joint board from the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Shipping Board is authorized. Such board is to make recommendations looking to the correlation of rail and water traffic.

I will say for myself that I feel that that is one of the most important provisions in the bill. I feel that if we are going to have a merchant marine upon a permanent basis, even with the aid here given, we must coordinate and bring into close cooperation the railroad and water lines of the country.

EXPORT BILLS OF LADING.

The Shipping Board is to authorize the form of bills of lading for the water-borne portion of a through shipment of goods where the Interstate Commerce Commission establishes the form for that portion of the shipment over American railroads.

RAIL-OWNED WATER LINES.

This section amends paragraph 9 of section 5 of the Interstate Commerce Commission act to the end that railroads may own steamship lines where the latter do not come into possible competition with any rail lines.

AGREEMENTS BETWEEN CARRIERS.

Section 605 amends the shipping act of 1916 so as to amplify the power of the board to investigate agreements between common carriers or between common carriers and terminals.

JOINT OR PROPORTIONAL RATES.

Section 607 amends section 28 of the merchant marine act by making it mandatory on the Interstate Commerce Commission to invoke or suspend section 28 as the Shipping Board certifies adequate or inadequate American transportation is available. Where the board and the commission are of the opinion that section 28 will cause congestion or will deflect unduly the natural channels of trade, the section shall be suspended.

TITLE 7 COMPRISES MISCELLANEOUS DIVISIONS.

OFFICIAL TRANSPORTATION.

Section 701 provides that the transportation of passengers and commodities paid for by the United States Government shall so far as practical be in American bottoms.

REPORT BY THE SHIPPING BOARD.

The shipping act of 1916 is amended to include in the required annual report a complete report of the board's transactions with regard to the merchant-marine fund and the construction-loan fund.

One of the principal objections I have seen urged to the bill has been the failure to require the board to make these reports, but that provision was put in on the floor of the House, I think, and came over as a part of the House bill requiring them to submit the report.

HOME PORTS OF UNITED STATES VESSELS.

The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to designate the port of documentation of American vessels, and such ports shall be the ports where the greater part of the vessels' business is conducted.

SURRENDERED DOCUMENTS.

The shipping act of 1916 is amended so that documents can not be surrendered in time of peace without the approval of the board.

REGULATIONS.

Section 703 authorizes the Shipping Board to make the necessary regulations to carry out the provisions of the act.

Mr. President, I think that is all I care to say at this time. I appreciate very much the patient and considerate hearing the Senate has given me.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington, the chairman of the Commerce Committee, who has just closed his argument in support of the bill, made reference to a disposition in some quarters to question the motives of Senators who are supporting the bill and also to some attacks that had been made upon those who are opposed to the bill. I wish to say at the outset that I do not for a moment question the motives of the Senator from Washington in connection with his attitude regarding the bill. I am absolutely satisfied that he is entirely conscientious about the matter, as he is as to all measures he passes upon in this body. I am satisfied he was entirely conscientious in 1914 and in 1915 when he opposed legislation looking to the creation of a merchant marine at that time. He frankly admits now that he was mistaken then, and I think he is mistaken now.

It is not a question of motive; it is not a question of a conscientious discharge of duty that is involved in this discussion at all. I freely accord to the Senator from Washington, with whom I have been associated for so many years on the Commerce Committee, absolute purity of motive and I know that his conscience and his best judgment have controlled him in this matter, as in other matters with which he deals. Primarily, the question here is whether the pending measure will accomplish what the Senator from Washington so earnestly urges is important, namely, the establishment of an adequate American merchant marine. The question here is one of ways and means; it is simply whether this is the proper course to pursue in order to achieve the end which the Senator from Washington and all of us desire, or whether, on the other hand, it is more likely to circumvent than to defeat its own object, to retard rather than to help in the development of an American merchant marine.

My contention is that there is no justification whatever for launching now upon a policy which has heretofore been rejected over and over again by Congress, and planting ourselves upon a principle which is unwise, unsafe, and unsound even as a temporary expedient, and to write into law that policy and that principle which in the whole history of shipping have never created a merchant marine in any country; an undertaking which, in our own experience, has been a total failure when we have approached it in the past; from which those countries which have adopted it have experienced the least accomplishment; in fact, those which have been the most liberal with subsidies make the poorest showing as to merchant shipping; while the great maritime powers of the world long since abandoned and threw overboard the policy and practice as wasteful and ineffective, affording no reliable or worthy dependence upon which to base any hope for benefiting their shipping.

The Senator from Washington need not spend two minutes, although three-fourths of his argument apparently was addressed to that one point, to impress upon the Senate the importance, and I will go further and say the necessity, of having a merchant marine under our flag carrying our commerce, serving our trade and the interests of all our people, adequate in its extent and efficient in its operation. For 10 years, here and elsewhere, I have argued over and over again for the creation and establishment of an adequate American merchant marine. Back in 1914, in 1915, and in 1916 I recall perfectly well what was then taking place here in the Senate and throughout the country and throughout the world. Perhaps I may be pardoned if I indulge in a little reminiscence, even to the extent of making some slight personal reference.

I recall the time when former Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo was making those strong arguments to which the Senator referred and was pointing out the necessity for action by Congress to build ships and to provide carriers. I remember also the time when the Senators on this side of the Chamber, such Senators, for instance, as the senior Senator from Missouri at that time, Mr. Stone, the senior Senator from Virginia at that time, Mr. Martin, and the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], and I night after night had conferences with the then Secretary of the Treasury and the former Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Redfield, in an earnest effort to devise some way, some plan, some means for providing merchant ships for this country. We contended then—and that was undoubtedly the case—that, so far as our overseas shipping was concerned, not only had private enterprise failed to increase it during the past 50 years but that it was actually decreasing; that in 1914 we were only carrying in American bottoms, overseas, 9.7 of the commerce of the United States, covering our exports and imports; that instead of accomplishing anything toward the building of a merchant marine, as I say, by private enterprise we were losing ground in that direction. It was perfectly plain that something had to be done; that the Government had to devise some way or some means of building ships. So the shipping bill was then introduced.

I recall that the then chairman of the Committee on Commerce, the late Senator from Arkansas, Mr. Clarke, was really opposed to the principle at the time; that he himself felt that this was a field for private enterprise, and he was opposed to the Government undertaking anything which, in his judgment, individuals ought to do.

Finally he said, "I will make no opposition, but you must take charge of the bill; you will have to take the responsibility; I shall not interfere; do the best you can." That threw the responsibility upon me, and I remember perfectly well the Senator from Washington spending some nine hours in an address here, and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] spending some eight hours on one occasion in opposition to the bill when I was able to keep the Senate continuously in session for 65 hours without recess or adjournment in an effort to secure a vote on the bill which was aimed and intended to lay the foundation for the establishment of a decent merchant marine, but there was a filibuster inaugurated, as great as was ever conducted in the Senate, to prevent a vote upon and the passage of the bill. The result was that the bill failed of passage.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida does not mean to say that the bill to which he refers was a ship subsidy bill? That bill provided for the purchase of some German ships. I do not know that it is necessary to go into details of why Senators on this side of the Chamber opposed the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. No.

Mr. SMOOT. I was opposed to the graft that was in it. There were millions and tens of millions of dollars of graft in the bill. That is the kind of bill it was.

Mr. FLETCHER. There was not a single provision in the bill looking to a subsidy, of course. Nobody ever said there was; nobody ever claimed there was. There was, however, authority in the bill to build, construct, acquire, or purchase ships. The primary purpose was to build ships.

The Senator from Utah ought to know, and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], who was the chairman of the committee which investigated the matter of the purchase of the German ships, would tell him if he were present, that it was testified before his committee that there was not a German ship for sale; that we could not if we wished have bought a single German ship. Where was there any graft in the proposition when no one could purchase German ships, because there was nobody who had any authority to sell them and nobody wished to sell any of them?

Mr. SMOOT. But the Senator from Florida must know that the whole object of the bill was to purchase the interned German ships.

Mr. FLETCHER. Not at all.

Mr. SMOOT. And not only that, but I have information in my possession that it was all agreed as to how the ships should be disposed of later. It would not be a very nice story to tell.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to the Senator from Utah telling it. I do not believe anything more about it than what I have read in the record and what was testified to by witnesses under oath. The testimony of record is that there was not one German ship for sale; that there was nobody here who was authorized to sell German ships; and that they could not be purchased if anybody had desired to purchase them.

Mr. POMERENE. It seems to me if there was any crookedness or graft connected with that proposition, the Senator from Utah owes it to the American people to make it public.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is all beside the question. I am not raising the point that the Senator from Utah was wholly in error in opposing that bill. I am simply referring to this little history by way of emphasizing the fact that in those days I was quoting from Secretary McAdoo, just as the Senator from Washington has done to-day, and I was using identically the same arguments that he has used here in support of the proposition that this country ought to have a decent and adequate American merchant marine; and I take the same position to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that I have always been in favor of a ship subsidy bill; I was in favor of it long before the war.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not question that.

Mr. SMOOT. I supported every proposition that was ever presented to the Senate since I have been a Member of the Senate with the exception of that vicious bill that was brought in here for an un-American purpose. I know what I am talking about, and I never would have stood upon this floor and spoken for over 13 hours against it if I had not known what I was talking about.

Mr. FLETCHER. I gave the Senator credit for only eight hours. I am sorry I missed it by five hours.

Mr. SMOOT. I was perfectly ready to talk 13 hours more, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. And it provided an appropriation of $50,000,000, creating a Shipping Board for the purpose of building ships, because private enterprise would not build them.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if there was anything crooked in that proposition, I should like to know what it was, because it might help me to vote for this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think it would, because of the fact that this bill has no more comparison with that measure than the heavens and the earth.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course it has not.

Mr. SMOOT. Not a particle. There was no ship subsidy provision attached to it. There was no question of that kind at all.

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly not. Nobody ever imagined that that was so. Nobody ever claimed such a thing. I know that there was no subsidy attached to that bill. That was a bill to build ships. This is a bill to operate ships.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill never would have come before this body in the world if it had not been for the purchase and sale ultimately of those interned German ships.

Mr. FLETCHER. That question came up after the bill was introduced. I was present at the beginning of discussions on the subject, and I know the purpose was to have the Government begin the creation of an adequate merchant marine by constructing ships. It was thought enough to cover acquiring ships by purchase, but I never heard German ships mentioned until the bill was under debate; and the Senator draws on his imagination.

Mr. SMOOT. I know it.

Mr. FLETCHER. The friends of the measure were willing, if we could acquire ships by purchase, that the Government might acquire some wherever they could get them. We needed ships. The proposition was to appropriate $50,000,000 to begin the construction of ships and for the purpose of having the Government create somehow, either by building or by purchase, some merchant ships that we saw the country was in desperate need of, and we knew that in every probability what did subsequently happen would happen. We did need them in a most pressing way.

That was the purpose of the bill, but what happened was this: It was the short session ending on March 4, 1915. This filibuster was on. The appropriation bills had not been passed. Finally, the chairman of the committee rose and moved to recommit the bill. By a majority of one or two, he was able to accomplish that. Senators on the other side unanimously, without any exception so far as I know now—certainly not more than one or two—opposed the bill from start to finish and conducted that filibuster against it, and this was the result: On the heels of that short session the bill was about to be recommitted and would have been recommitted, which meant its death; and upon the announcement of so many speakers upon the other side who expected to discuss it, showing that all the rest of the session would have been taken up in debate, the further consideration of the bill was postponed.

What followed? The war was declared in July, 1914, in Europe. Soon thereafter the German ships were out of commission, tied up in our ports and other ports all over the world. The British ships were largely commandeered for war uses. The French and Italian ships were confined to their own waters. Our manufactured goods and the products of our farms burdened and loaded down our warehouses and docks upon the Atlantic, the Pacific, the Gulf, and the Great Lakes, unable to reach the waiting markets overseas at all. Congress met in 1916. That condition became so alarming, and all over the country the pressure became so great upon Congress to do something in that emergency, that practically the same bill was introduced in 1916 and, with some extensions and enlargements as to scope, but upon the same principle as that involved in the bill introduced in 1914, was passed in September, 1916; and Senators on the other side, responding to the pressure of overwhelming public demand, ceased their opposition. They saw that this country needed ships and that there was no way on earth for it to get them except to pass that legislation and enable the Government to build or acquire ships in any way we could.

We went on under that act, proceeding to construct the ships that we now have on hand, and we spent millions and millions of dollars. If that legislation had passed in 1914, or even in 1915, this country would have saved $100 a ton upon every ship that has been built since. Having to build in war times, under war conditions, paying enormous prices for labor, with the transportation of material hindered on every hand, unable to make contracts except on the cost-plus basis because the people who took the contracts did not even know when they could get the material to go into the ships by reason of the complication with reference to transportation, the cost has been something like $200 a ton where the ships could have been built in 1914 under contract for $75 or $80 a ton. Still there was nothing to do but to build the ships, build them without regard to economies, build them simply with the one idea, namely, speed, at the sacrifice of every ordinary business consideration.

Very well. The same arguments which the Senator has employed in connection with this bill we had to make with reference to that legislation. There was that opposition I have mentioned to the first bill; and there was that relaxing of opposition in response to public opinion and in recognition of the public need, and the bill of September, 1916, was passed.

So I say that there is no use in arguing with this side of the Chamber or with anybody, so far as I know, as to the importance of having an adequate merchant marine. There was demonstrated just exactly what we predicted in 1914 would happen. Our products could not move. Freight rates went up 1,000 or 1,100 per cent subsequently; and it was also demonstrated during that war that merchant ships are just as essential in time of emergency as are cruisers and battleships and floating batteries generally. Without merchant ships England could not have remained in that war, by reason of the depredations of the German submarine.

I concede all that. I admit that we do need these ships. I admit that we need them in time of peace to serve our commerce. I admit that we need them in time of war as a part of the Navy. This bill does not create any shipping. We have the ships. They talk about the importance of having a merchant marine. The first step in achieving that end is to have ships. You can not have a merchant marine without ships. The first proposition is to build the ships or to get them somehow. We have built them at great expense, at great cost, at terrible waste, under conditions which are wholly unbusinesslike, I admit; but they had to be built under those conditions or not built at all. We have the ships. This bill does not propose to build ships, except possibly it may provide aid to that end as an incidental matter. This bill proposes to pay people to operate our ships. It offers a subsidy, a direct drain upon the Treasury of the Government, to induce people to take over these ships that we own, which we have built, and operate them under our flag. That is the proposition.

Is it necessary to do that? Is it wise to do that? Is it not perfectly plain that that is simply placing a premium on inefficiency? Is it not perfectly plain that it is a demoralizing, unsound, self-defeating proposition to pay people to do what they have to learn to do and ought to learn to do without that, especially when you are offering them the ships at about one-tenth what they cost?

Again, I want to say that I indorse fully every argument the Senator has offered in support of the proposition that this country ought to have a merchant marine. The only difference between us is the question of how to establish that merchant marine upon a permanent basis.

The old argument for a subsidy—and I have heard it ever since I came here—was, first, it was claimed the cost of construction in this country was a great deal higher than the cost of construction in foreign yards. There was some force in that argument. The facts were that you could build ships on the Clyde or in Germany or in Belfast for about $45 a ton that would cost you from $60 to $75 a ton to build in the United States.

There was a difference in the cost of construction. There was a difference in the capital required to be invested in the business; and in order to equalize that difference between the foreigner and the American it was argued that we must compensate the American so as to cover it. There was something rather plausible in that argument. I always believed it was fallacious, in the last analysis, but it had some basis then. The basis for that argument absolutely fails in this case, because we are offering these ships at $30 a ton, when they were never built in any country, in any yard, anywhere, at that price, and never will be built in any yard, in any country hereafter at that price. We are offering them 10,000,000 tons of them at $30 a ton—and I suspect that you can get them for less if you want to make a real big business transaction—and on terms of slow pay, with a very low rate of interest on the balance of the payments and a proportionately small amount of cash.

I am perfectly willing that the board should make any sort of terms with reference to the disposition of these ships—I mean by that, take as low as 25 per cent cash and spread the balance over a period of 5 or 10 years and let it bear a rate of 4 or 4½ per cent—just so the Government is not out anything on the proposition as far as the rate of interest is concerned. Let us give them ample time. These are good, new, steel ships, the finest fleet that ever floated on the seas. There never were such offers made before at $30 a ton. They are not any of them five years old. They are steel ships.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Is there authority under the present law to sell these ships on the terms indicated by the Senator?

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the Senator that that is another reason why I oppose this legislation. The Senator from Washington labored most earnestly and diligently and intelligently in shaping up the merchant marine act of 1920, and when we finished that bill we thought we had solved this whole question and laid down a law which gives to the Shipping Board the absolute power and authority to dispose of these ships on practically any terms they might see proper. The merchant marine act of 1920 does not restrict them, except that we suggest that they ought to exercise business judgment; but really it is a matter of discretion in the board as to price and as to terms with reference to the sale of these ships. We settled this question then. There is no need to do any more about it. There is no need of this legislation. That board has full authority to sell and dispose of these ships under the act of 1920.

As I said, having that authority, let them go on with it. If for some reason or other they do not exercise the power and will not execute the law, the remedy is not to enact new legislation. We must find some other way of accomplishing results. They have ample authority to dispose of these ships.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, what is the change in the proposed bill from the law of 1920 as to the disposition of the ships? What material change is made? The Senator says they are practically the same.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not consider that there is any material difference.

Mr. McKELLAR. In other words, this bill is just a repetition of the law of 1920 on that subject?

Mr. FLETCHER. Let us see. I will refer to the act of 1920 so as to make no mistake about it. Section 5 provides:

That in order to accomplish the declared purposes of this act and to carry out the policy declared in section 1 hereof—

And that is our policy still. We are not modifying that policy, I take it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will follow the Senator with the pending bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. The act reads:

That in order to accomplish the declared purposes of this act, and to carry out the policy declared in section 1 hereof, the board is authorized and directed to sell, as soon as practicable consistent with good business methods and the objects and purposes to be attained by this act, at public or private competitive sale, after appraisement and due advertisement, to persons who are citizens of the United States except as provided in section 6 of this act, all of the vessels referred to in section 4 of this act or otherwise acquired by the board. Such sale shall be made at such prices and on such terms and conditions as the board may prescribe.

Mr. McKELLAR. The only difference is that in the pending bill it is provided that—

(b) Any sale under this section shall be made at such prices.

Now, the Senator may go ahead.

Mr. FLETCHER. It continues:

Such sale shall be made at such prices and on such terms and conditions as the board may prescribe, but the completion of the payment of the purchase price and interest shall not be deferred more than 15 years after the making of the contract of sale. The board in fixing or accepting the sale price of such vessels shall take into consideration the prevailing domestic and foreign market price of, the available supply of, and the demand for vessels——

Mr. McKELLAR. That is left out.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is simply something they ought to do anyhow. That is simply common sense. It does not really change this act of 1920. They ought to take into consideration the world market, and the supply and demand of shipping, when they sell the ships, whether they are told by law to do it or not. They shall take into consideration—existing freight rates and prospects of their maintenance, the cost of constructing vessels of similar types under prevailing conditions, as well as the cost of the construction or purchase price of the vessels to be sold, and any other facts or conditions that would influence a prudent, solvent business man in the sale of similar vessels or property which he is not forced to sell.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is left out.

Mr. FLETCHER. They ought to consider those matters, anyhow. It is a good part of the law, but is merely directory and recites what they ought to do and, I think, they will do, whether it is expressed in the act or not. It only shows that under the act of 1920 they have all the authority proposed to be given them now. The act continues:

All sales made under the authority of this act shall be subject to the limitations and restrictions of section 9 of the "shipping act, 1916," as amended.

That is the whole of that section.

The restriction mentioned refers to sales to aliens, which must have the consent of the board.

Mr. McKELLAR. There are two additional provisions here. One is:

Interest on the unpaid purchase price shall be payable at least annually at a rate of not less than 4½ per cent per annum.

The other is a proviso:

That no employee of the Government shall in any way be interested as a vendee in any purchase made from the Shipping Board.

There seems to be very little difference.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is no material difference.

Mr. McKELLAR. Except for the proviso, which apparently is without force, because if an employee desired he could resign and immediately buy all the ships he wanted to.

Mr. FLETCHER. The bill was really introduced in the House without that provision in it. It was put in in the House as an amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. A valueless amendment, apparently.

Mr. FLETCHER. Apparently valueless. There is no need to discuss the merit of it. We have not changed it. It is in the bill, so we need not go into that. I think certain conditions arose, and there were rumors and statements in the newspapers—I have a clipping in my pocket—showing that certain gentlemen connected now with the fleet corporation were about to become associated with others to form a trust or syndicate to take over the United States Line and probably get benefits under this legislation. There was talk of that sort. I do not say it was true, I do not know what the foundation for it was; but that was the reason, I surmise, why the House thought it well to put that provision in the bill, so that gentlemen could not be going around advocating the passage of this bill with the expectation and the opportunity of benefiting by it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, this would not have the effect of preventing what it is desired to prevent, evidently, but the proviso could be very easily changed so as to prohibit anyone who has anything to do with the Shipping Board in the sale of these ships from hereafter, within a certain period, acquiring an interest in them, which ought to be done.

Mr. FLETCHER. I hope the Senator will think that out, and offer his suggestion, if we come to that in the consideration of this bill.

One other ground for subsidy heretofore urged by those who favor the establishment of that system, and the adoption of that policy in this country, was that the cost of operating ships under the American flag was a great deal higher than the cost of operating ships under a foreign flag. So they said, "Why should we invest our money in American ships, and fly the American flag, when it costs us a good deal more to operate those ships than if we invested our money under the British flag, or the flag of some other foreign country? We then could have our costs of operation less."

That argument has been wholly exploded. In the first place, the effect of the seamen's act, which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], whom I see sitting here now, so ardently championed, and with such success, has been to raise the standard of wages on foreign ships to American standards, instead of allowing American standards to be reduced to foreign standards, which would have been done without that law. The effect of it is that to-day, as we have shown in the minority views, there is practically no difference between the cost of operating vessels under the American flag, as far as wages are concerned, and the cost of operating under foreign flags.

In the minority views on this bill we refer to statements by the chairman of the Shipping Board himself. I always like to refer to the testimony and statements given by gentlemen on the other side of a question if I can, because then they can not argue the thing any further. They ought to be precluded by their own assertions, and we reach an end of the discussion, if we are ever going to reach it, when we can cite their own statements to sustain what we are claiming.

Mr. Lasker himself stated at the hearings before the joint committee of the House and Senate, when this bill was before them, on page 43, volume 1 of the hearings, as follows:

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand from the President's address to Congress, and also from the statement that you have made, that you do not undertake to recommend or urge any material change in the seamen's act that now exists?

Mr. LASKER. You are right. I want to take occasion to say here that I think the seamen's act has been one of the most misrepresented acts of which I have ever heard. I came down to Washington believing, as most people in my part of the country do, if you repeal the seamen's act you would have a merchant marine. That is pure bunk.

Mr. POMERENE. That is Mr. Lasker's statement?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is his statement. I read further:

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the reason I asked the question, because for a long time those who were undertaking to give reasons why we could not operate successfully with our foreign competitors based their assertions exclusively on the discrimination caused by the seamen's act.

Mr. LASKER. I think they have gotten worn out on those representations.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am glad to hear that.

At these hearings Captain Furuseth, who knows more about this subject of wages than perhaps any other man in the country, a man who devotes his whole life to that problem, testified. The Shipping Board had made certain reductions in wages and certain reductions in numbers of men on their ships, as they show in their last report. They boast of it very pointedly in their last annual report, which Senators have recently found on their desks, showing the savings they have made by reducing wages and reducing the number of men on vessels. Captain Furuseth refers to that in this language:

As a result of these reductions the wages of American seamen are now much lower than the wages of Canadian and Australian seamen; are practically on a level with British wages; and are substantially higher than the wages only of Japanese among the principal maritime nations.

So that the other argument for a subsidy proves absolutely valueless, because there is practically no difference between the cost of operating vessels under the American flag and the cost of operating them under foreign flags.

Mr. POMERENE. As I understand, the Senator just read from the testimony of Mr. Lasker?

Mr. FLETCHER. And of Mr. Furuseth.

Mr. POMERENE. Have any of these shipping companies taken issue with those statements?

Mr. FLETCHER. There is a very involved and long statement set forth in these hearings, and I would not venture to analyze that whole statement now, but I presume the effect of it is to raise some question about that. Perhaps in some instances the wages are higher for certain officers and men on the vessels. But taking the whole operation through, the thing evens up about as stated by Mr. Furuseth and as admitted by Mr. Lasker.

Mr. WATSON. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON. Does that have reference to competition with England or with other nations?

Mr. FLETCHER. It has reference to the whole question of wages on American vessels and foreign vessels. He said that they are about on a level with British vessels, less than Australia, and only greater than practically one country of the maritime powers of the world, and that is Japan.

Mr. WATSON. What is the difference relatively between this country and Japan in the cost of operating vessels of equal tonnage?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have not figured that out and I do not know that I can. I think perhaps I might look over the tables and investigate the question, but I was contenting myself with Mr. Lasker's assurance that the whole proposition was bunk, practically stating there was nothing in the claim that there was a difference on American and foreign vessels.

Mr. WATSON. There is some difference, is there not?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is so immaterial that it cuts no figure really in the total cost of operating ships.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will yield to me for a moment, I can explain just what Mr. Lasker meant. While the Japanese wages were lower, the Japanese employed more men on their ships.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; that is true.

Mr. McKELLAR. And the resulting cost is about on a level. The Americans employ fewer men and pay slightly higher wages. The Japanese employ more men to the ship and pay less wages, but it about evens up. The wage question is practically the same.

While I am on my feet I will ask the Senator from Florida if it is not also true that the cost of subsistence on the ships is practically the same?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is quite true. I think we have generally better accommodations for officers and crews on our ships, but supplies are always purchased where they can be had at lowest prices, and there is practically no difference in that respect. Originally, according to the best authority on the subject, the wage cost of operating vessels under the American flag was about 2 per cent of the total cost of operation. Now the difference in the wage cost on the foreign ship and the American ship was the difference between 2 and 1, or 1½, or something like that, that it cost the foreigner in wages as a part of his operation. The total wage cost of operating a ship is about 2 per cent of the total or aggregate cost of operation. The difference in the wage cost between an American ship and a foreign ship was the difference between 2 per cent of the total cost and whatever the foreigner had to pay, whether it was 1 or 1½ per cent. So that the whole difference sums up practically negligible when it comes to considering the total operating expense of a ship.

Mr. WATSON. In order that I may get the Senator's viewpoint, am I to understand him to say that there is no difference in the cost of construction as between this and competing countries?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have not said that. What I said was that it cuts no figure with reference to the pending bill, because we are offering ships, new ships, steel ships, at a figure at which they never were built in any country, and never will be built hereafter in any country, namely, $30 a ton. So there can not be any difference in the capital cost to the purchaser of those ships and the capital cost to the builder of such ships abroad except in favor of the American purchaser.

Mr. WATSON. But, of course, that would not apply if those ships were to be worn out or because of depreciation become useless in a little while. However, I merely wanted the Senator's idea as to whether or not there was a difference in the cost of construction between this and competing countries. The Senator is familiar with the subject, and I ask him as an expert.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think likely that the wages are higher in the shipyards in this country than they are abroad. I think also that the people in our shipyards are more efficient, that we can accomplish more in an American shipyard than can be accomplished in any other shipyard anywhere when our people set in to do it. The reason why I say that is that we laid down a keel at Hog Island of a 7,500 dead-weight ton ship on one day and we launched that ship on the twenty-seventh day thereafter.

I have before me at this moment the last annual report of the Shipping Board in which, at page 158, it is stated:

The last keel was laid March 15, 1921; the final launching took place September 19, 1921; and the construction was completed with the delivery of the steamship Western World, a 13,000-ton passenger and cargo vessel, on May 9, 1922.

The number of ships and dead-weight tonnage delivered during each fiscal year of the corporation's existence follows:

Year.	Number of ships.	Dead-weight tonnage.
1917-18	214	1,374,406
1918-19	854	4,553,298
1919-20	1,002	5,694,567
1920-21	218	1,737,550
1921-22	23	267,490
Total	2,311	13,627,311

We have sold probably 100 of those ships. A little later on I shall place in the RECORD a statement with reference to that, but most of those vessels we still have on hand. The report continues:

A general summary of keels laid, ships launched, and ships delivered for each month and year will be found in the appendix.

Among the many notable records—

This is on the point about which the Senator asked and to which I call his particular attention.

Among the many notable records achieved by the shipbuilders during the war, perhaps none is more worthy of mention than the building of the steamship Crawl Keys, a 3,350-ton steel cargo vessel constructed on the Great Lakes by the Great Lakes Engineering Works. Keel was laid on July 11, 1918, and the vessel was launched just 16 days later on July 27, 1918. The completed ship was delivered to the corporation on August 14, 1918, 34 days after work started.

Closely rivaling the above-mentioned event was the performance of the New York Shipbuilding Corporation in the construction of the steamship Tuckahoe, a 4,900-ton steel collier, on which the keel was laid April 8, 1918. The vessel was launched 27 days later, on May 5, 1918, and delivered to the corporation on May 15, 1918, 37 days after the keel was laid.

A wonderful record was also established in wood ship construction by the Grays Harbor Motorship Corporation in building the steamship Aberdeen. The keel was laid September 9, 1918, and the vessel launched 19 days after, on September 28, 1918. Delivery was consummated October 6, 1918, just 27 days after keel laying.

I am simply referring to that to show that we can, in my judgment, accomplish in American shipyards, by the use of machinery and appliances and the skill and energy and efficiency of our workmen, sufficient to offset any difference in the cost of wages in yards abroad and in this country. These achievements show it because we absolutely set the high marks for the world during our construction of ships in the time of the war.

The American shipyards are not idle. It is said that one thing wanted in connection with the subsidy is to keep the yards open and to help them, because they are not doing anything of any consequence in the way of construction of ships. In that connection let me quote from Commerce Reports, of the Department of Commerce, of December 11, 1922, at page 675, where is given the following statement with reference to current American shipbuilding:

On November 1, 1922, American shipyards were building or under contract to build for private shipowners 197 steel vessels of 258,373 gross tons compared with 198 steel vessels of 255,431 gross tons on October 1, 1922.

These figures do not include Government ships or ships building or contracted for by the United States Shipping Board.

Then follows a summary of the report giving the names of the yards now busy. Of course, we can not build an American merchant marine and we can not have shipyards operating successfully in the United States if for some minor reason, some reason that ought not to obtain, American citizens patronize foreign ships and foreign shipyards with their business and their work. In the report we recite that Wilson & Co., of Chicago, for instance, and no doubt the same thing applies to other large packers in Chicago, are shipping trainloads of goods to New York by rail and thence by Cunard Lines to Liverpool. Why not patronize American ships? Why should American citizens patronize foreign ships when American ships are at the docks idle? There may be some reason about which I have no knowledge in that connection.

It may be possible that the purchasers of goods in Liverpool specify that they should come in British bottoms. There may be a reason of that sort. But if our people would do what the British do, in their spirit of cooperation and in their effort to stand by their industries, that would be a good way to solve the question—not by appropriating money out of the Federal Treasury. That will not accomplish it. We have to cooperate. For instance, the United Fruit Co. is building a motor ship on the Clyde. The Bethlehem Steel Co. is building a motor ship now in Germany. Why not patronize American shipyards, even if it costs a little more to do it?

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. And yet they are doing that. That is what is happening in this country. American citizens are shipping their goods in foreign ships, constantly patronizing foreign ships, and now the excuse is offered that the foreign ship is wet and the American ship is dry as a reason for having the passenger business go the same way. Then, too, there are American people in the shipping business building their own ships in foreign yards instead of building them in yards in the United States, equipped as they are with skilled workers and with a record such as I have indicated here behind these yards.

I yield now to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. Is it not true that a great number of the officials of the United States Government, perhaps a majority of them, travel on the ships of other nations in preference to traveling on our own ships?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it is a quite common practice. We have not yet learned the game. A merchant marine is something that we can not create by appropriating money out of the Treasury. We have to build up from the ground. There is something more fundamental, something deeper than the question of a subsidy. That is a merely superficial treatment. It is a stimulant that does not create life or restore health. It is a temporary thing, an external application when the trouble is an internal disease. Underneath all this are the basic principles upon which a merchant marine must be built, and the spirit of cooperation is one of them, the spirit of standing together and helping the industries of our own country. Mr. Ferguson goes to the root of the matter when he says: "England's superiority in maritime affairs is due to her shipowners and traders being expert in all branches of the shipping business, while ours are not." We can and must have the branches as well as the main business. You can not purchase that knowledge or those facilities by money out of the Treasury.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WATSON. I am assuming it is safe to say that American citizens are building ships abroad for the reason that they can build them more cheaply there than they can here. Is that the fact?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know what the fact is; I am only citing it as an instance of the absence of the public spirit or patriotic spirit that it seems to me ought to actuate American citizens in connection with their shipyards, their shipping, and this great industry generally. I say that that is something we have never yet learned in this country. It is possible that a few hundred dollars can be saved to American owners on ships built abroad. We ought to cultivate a different spirit, in my judgment.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will yield to me, I have a quotation here from Mr. George J. Baldwin, chairman of the New York Shipbuilding Corporation and president of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co., which will answer the question of the Senator from Indiana. I read as follows:

AMERICAN YARDS MEET FOREIGN COMPETITION.

Mr. George J. Baldwin, chairman of the New York Shipbuilding Corporation and president of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co., recently pointed out some of the encouraging points sometimes overlooked by American shipbuilders in these days of depression, which it will be well to bear in mind.

"Our yards," says Mr. Baldwin, "attract the best type of workmen at high wages; gives them the most modern tools to work with, and can now successfully meet the low-wage competition of foreign countries by the greater speed and, therefore, lowered unit cost of production. The result is that the American yards can turn out ships capable of the most economical operation and can deliver them with a promptness which is a valuable asset in the calculations of the owner or operator."

In this connection it is noted that a British oil-transport company that formerly placed all its orders at home found construction so slow in England that it contracted for six tankers from American shipyards. And, better still, the results have been so satisfactory, both as to quality and speed of delivery, that other orders are likely to come to this country.

One of the past handicaps—the lack of a bureau of shipping—has been happily solved by the rejuvenation, expansion, and modernization of the American Bureau of Shipping, which now bids fair to be the best of the classification societies, and, moreover, a thoroughly American institution. (From Bulletin of the Atlantic Coast Shipbuilders' Association, July 15, 1921.)

I think that answers the question of the Senator from Indiana, and from a very high authority.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am obliged to the Senator from Tennessee for referring to that matter. My recollection is that Mr. Baldwin's statement was made before the Committee on Commerce when we were acting under a resolution directing us to look into the affairs of the Shipping Board.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] referred to people in high places, as he said, being guilty of making statements which had misled the public. I can not imagine just what statements he had in mind, but he will excuse me if I mention an activity which has had the effect of shaping the opinions of people in this country and which has been very persistent and, I might say, pernicious, in its character; that is the propaganda which has been conducted through Mr. Lasker, of the Shipping Board, and spread throughout the length and breadth of this country in support of the pending measure. The Shipping Board have filled the newspapers, they have distributed speeches, and they have resorted to every possible means of creating an opinion in support of the bill, and much of their solicitation and much of their propaganda have not dealt with the fundamental facts underlying the measure.

The Senator from Washington also has stated that he believes in protection, and that the pending bill is a means of protecting ships. I do not agree with him on the subject of protection, but I fail to see how this bill even measures up to that sort of a principle.

I can understand how Congress may impose duties, for instance, on lemons so high as to force the American consumer to buy only American-grown lemons; I can see how Congress may impose duties so high on oranges that everybody in this country will have to buy the American-grown oranges, because we should thereby shut out the foreign-grown oranges or lemons, as the case might be; but Congress can not pass any law that will compel American citizens to transport their products in American ships; Congress can not pass any law that can compel American citizens to build their ships in American shipyards; Congress can not pass any law that will exclude foreign ships from our ports and harbors and upon the high seas. There is no character of legislation which Congress can enact which will accomplish any such result. Treaties and international maritime laws as old as the seas make abortive any such attempt even if one so foolish can be found to propose it. I do not see that it is possible for Congress to enact legislation certainly of that kind or of any kind operating in the manner in which protection is claimed to operate under the tariff laws.

The Senator from Washington has also referred to the enormous amount which has been paid for freight to foreign ships on goods which are brought into this country. Of course, that has not all been thrown away; it is not as though we were estimating money which was lost or wasted, because if the freight had not been paid to foreign ships it would have been paid to our own ships; a good deal of that money it would have been necessary to pay for freight, no matter how the goods were brought in or how they were shipped.

I have no doubt that in many instances the ocean freight rates imposed by foreign ships have been exorbitant, that they have been high, for one reason or another. I have no doubt that American commerce and business have been taxed very heavily by reason of the fact that prices and rates have been fixed by conference agreement and have been enforced by fighting ships, just as the Senator from Washington has stated. We tried to get rid of such practices in the shipping bill, as far as possible, and in the merchant marine act of 1920. I do not know whether it would be possible to inaugurate such practices as have obtained in years gone by, but we can prevent that sort of thing happening without paying any subsidy or without paying anybody any money to prevent it. We have the ships here; the people own them.

I have stated in the views of the minority that the losses incurred by the Shipping Board, which they have estimated at $50,000,000 a year, can be stopped. I have not contended that all losses might be stopped, but I have stated that any such losses as they have set up could be stopped. They could be stopped by tying up the ships; that would be one way of doing it. They could also be stopped by turning the ships over to the Panama Canal Co., a Government-owned and operated corporation, or they could be turned over to the United States Line, which has an organization for operating ships and is a Government-operated line. Let Mr. Lasker get rid of the ships that are causing the loss in that way. Certainly, at least some of the losses could be obviated by tying up the unprofitable ships. However, the fact that these ships are here in our harbors, fit to go to sea upon short notice, capable of carrying our commerce as they may be needed, is a consideration worth while.

The latest demonstration of that fact occurred a few months ago, when the coal mines were closed down and the railroads could not move coal to the markets, when, indeed, it looked as if our people would suffer from the cold, and perhaps many of them die. In that emergency we had to bring coal from England. Think of it! This great country with enough coal to last a million years lying right here at our doors, and yet our people being put in such a position that it became necessary to import coal from England. Of course, the British ships immediately raised the rate of freight on coal. What did we do? I am very glad that the Shipping Board was prompted to take the action which they did take. I do not know who stirred them up and got them to take it, but their action was commendable. Immediately there were brought out 108 of the idle ships that are such a curse, according to Mr. Lasker's view, and those ships were put into that coal-carrying trade. On yesterday I asked Mr. Merrill, who was here on the floor at the invitation of the Senator from Washington, to give me the facts about that. I knew some of the vessels of the Shipping Board had been put in that trade and had rendered a very important service. This is what Mr. Merrill says:

Complying with your oral request of yesterday afternoon, I have pleasure in submitting the following facts with regard to the coal import movement during the recent coal strike in this country.

A total of 2,500,000 tons of coal were brought into this country, which employed approximately 400 steamers. One hundred and eight of these were Shipping Board vessels, and the greater part of the remainder were British. The Shipping Board itself transported in its vessels 702,000 tons. This movement was accomplished in a large measure with the ships regularly on the United Kingdom berth, but an additional vessels and in order to substitute for vessels on regular lines who had lost their position on the schedule by reason of this movement, approximately 40 Shipping Board vessels were drawn from spot; that is, inactive vessels ready for an immediate assignment to trade.

Although less than one-third of the tonnage was moved by Shipping Board ships, these ships controlled entirely the rates charged.

That is the important thing. I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in the pending bill, from which its authors expect and hope so much, there is not a line that gives any authority or power to the Shipping Board or any other board or agency of the Government to regulate or control freight rates, routes, or anything of that sort. So if these ships should pass eventually into the hands of a few lines, those lines would focus the routes of trade for the world into certain ports of this country, and they would charge what they pleased and what the traffic would bear, without any sort of regulatory control on the part of the Shipping Board. Some provision covering that matter ought to be put into the bill. It should not be simply a question of paying people to operate these ships in their own way and at their own will and allowing them to charge what they please, and saying that is going to serve American commerce. It may or it may not do so.

It does not avail us simply to pay people to put ships under our flag unless those ships are going to do business and unless they are going to transport our commerce at reasonable rates. There is not anything with reference to rates in this bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, as the Senator is discussing rates, I think, with his permission, I should like to read a paragraph or two from a letter written to me by a prominent manufacturer in Ohio. Under date of December 6, 1922, he writes this letter. I will read only a short paragraph or two.

The Shipping Board not only go in to get all that the traffic will bear, but have the audacity to quote us a $10 special rate, when our agent already had a rate of $8 from New York to Rio. Some time since the Shipping Board carried freight from Hamburg to Rio for $4.50 per ton and demanded $9 per ton from New York, thus compelling the American manufacturers and taxpayers to make up the deficit for the benefit of the German manufacturers.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know just how they are operating now. My understanding is that they have a conference arrangement with most of the lines now—the Shipping Board and these other lines—but I am trying to make the point here, and emphasize it, that the possession of these ships, even if they are tied up in our harbors, is worth while; and this is an illustration of it:

During the recent coal strikes, although less than one-third of the tonnage was moved by Shipping Board ships, these ships controlled entirely the rate charged. At the beginning the coal rate was 7 shillings. As the demand grew, it was run up by the foreign owners rapidly to 14 shillings.

This occurred in a very few days. To meet this the Shipping Board threw its ships into the trade at 10 shillings, and announced its readiness to charter an almost unlimited number at that rate. Naturally, the rate on foreign ships had to come down to 10 shillings. As soon as this occurred, the Shipping Board reduced its rate to 9 shillings, and finally 8 shillings and 6 pence. The average freight charge was somewhere between 9 shillings and 9 shillings 6 pence.

The effect of this action of the Shipping Board was twofold: First, it insured the delivery of the coal from abroad at very reasonable prices at the seaboard; and, second, it kept from being attracted to the business a number of tramp steamers which, after reaching the United States and discharging their coal cargoes, would have looked for eastbound cargoes, and would have utterly demoralized the outward movement of our regular line steamers.

That was a very excellent service. It was a very fortunate thing that we had these ships here to move that coal, and it was very fortunate that we were able to keep down those rates so that our people should not pay double the freight on the coal that they had to have that they otherwise would have paid; and I am not grieving very much if some of these ships must remain tied up for a time. The fact is that there never was a period when there was greater depression in foreign trade than at present. I say there never was—there has not been in a great many years, anyhow. I think these periods of depression come and go in cycles, and they are due to natural economic causes that can not be overcome by paying money out of the Treasury.

Mr. POMERENE. That statement applies to the foreign trade of all nations.

Mr. FLETCHER. All nations—not only our trade, but it applies to the foreign trade of all nations—and we are at that period of depression now. We are not going to stay there. The world is not going to remain under present conditions. There will be a swing of the pendulum up, and then these ships will come out as that trade develops.

I ask unanimous consent to put this letter in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

DECEMBER 13, 1922.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: Complying with your oral request of yesterday afternoon, I have pleasure in submitting the following facts with regard to the coal import movement during the recent coal strike in this country.

A total of 2,500,000 tons of coal were brought into this country which employed approximately 400 steamers. One hundred and eight of these were Shipping Board vessels and the greater part of the remainder were British. The Shipping Board itself transported in its vessels 702,000 tons. This movement was accomplished in a large measure with the ships regularly on the United Kingdom berth, but as additional vessels, and in order to substitute for vessels on regular lines who had lost their position on the schedule by reason of this movement approximately 40 Shipping Board vessels were drawn from spot; i. e., inactive vessels ready for an immediate assignment to trade.

Although less than one-third of the tonnage was moved by Shipping Board ships, these ships controlled entirely the rates charged. At the beginning the coal rate was 7 shillings. As the demand grew it was run up by the foreign owner rapidly to 14 shillings. This occurred in a very few days. To meet this the Shipping Board threw its ships into the trade at 10 shillings and announced its readiness to charter an almost unlimited number at that rate. Naturally the rates on foreign ships had to come down to 10 shillings. As soon as this occurred the Shipping Board reduced its rates to 9 shillings and finally to 8 shillings 6 pence. The average freight rate charged was somewhere between 9 shillings and 9 shillings 6 pence.

The effect of this action of the Shipping Board was twofold: First, it insured the delivery of coal from abroad at very reasonable prices at the seaboard; second, it kept from being attracted to the business a number of tramp steamers which, after reaching the United States and discharging their coal cargoes, would have looked for eastbound cargoes and would have utterly demoralized the outward movement of our regular line steamers.

Yours very truly,

R. T. MERRILL,
Director, Bureau of Research.

Mr. FLETCHER. Look at the situation now. Here is a report from the Commerce Department, just in, which shows, on pages 16 and 17, as follows:

CURRENTS IN FOREIGN TRADE.

During the 12 months ended June 30, 1922, our foreign trade suffered in common with the general world depression. The monetary value of our exports and imports during the period in question, in comparison with the previous fiscal year, is shown in the following table:

	1920–21	1921–22
Imports	$3,654,459,346	$2,608,079,008
Exports	6,516,510,033	3,771,286,428
Total foreign trade	10,170,969,379	6,379,365,436
Balance of exports over imports	2,862,050,687	1,163,207,420

And my recollection is that in 1918–19 the imports and exports amounted to over $13,000,000,000. So that our foreign trade has fallen off to nearly one-third—that is, the value of our imports and exports is about one-third what they were at the beginning of 1920, and necessarily there is less demand for carriers of cargoes. The cargoes are not there. The trade is not moving. There are ships tied up in the ports of every country now, and especially in this country, where we have built enough tonnage to answer our needs in prosperous times, while we are now at the very lowest depths of depression, and some of it is necessarily idle.

That, however, is not the way to figure on legislation looking to the future. Take the conditions as they are now, and realize, as the facts are, that the exports and imports amount now to about one-third of what they did two years ago or three years ago. That itself shows a reason for idle ships, but it is not any reason for giving them away. It is not any reason for expecting that they will remain idle indefinitely unless something is done to pay somebody to take them over.

I ask leave to print in the RECORD another table, found in this report on page 19, showing the quantitative movement of major agricultural exports, pre-war and for the last two fiscal years.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The following table shows the quantitative movement of major agricultural exports, pre-war and for the last two fiscal years:

	1913	1921	1922
Grain and grain products (bushels)	258,343,629	543,375,523	544,220,934
Meats, dairy products, animal and vegetable fats (pounds)	1,610,053,715	2,384,517,262	2,192,174,230
Tobacco, leaf (pounds)	418,796,906	496,878,830	451,555,221
Cotton, raw (bales)	8,724,572	5,408,986	6,541,841
Fruits (pounds)	620,423,027	675,992,388	491,227,140
Oil cake and meal (pounds)	2,049,361,136	857,606,407	1,099,246,797
Total values	$1,029,967,344	$2,192,335,101	$1,557,372,997
Total values at 1913 prices	1,029,967,344	1,126,682,282	1,168,521,140

About 55 per cent of our total exports are agricultural produce and raw materials and 45 per cent are manufactured and partly manufactured goods (excluding manufactured foodstuffs).

About 75 per cent of our exports of agricultural produce and raw materials go to Europe and about 25 per cent to the rest of the world.

About 26 per cent of our manufactured exports go to Europe and 74 per cent elsewhere.

Our exports of agricultural produce comprise, roughly, 15 per cent of the entire crop value on the farm, while our exports of manufactured goods comprise less than 4 per cent of our production. Our exports of agricultural produce to Europe comprise 11 per cent of the value of our agricultural production, and our exports of manufactures less than 1 per cent of our manufactured production.

Mr. President, I have now reached a point where, if the Senator desires an executive session, I am willing to yield the floor and resume to-morrow.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I should like to run until 5 o'clock; but I appreciate the situation of the Senator and so I am glad to yield for several matters calling for an executive session.

I wish to say, however, not because of anything that has happened in connection with the consideration of the bill for there has not been any unnecessary delay in connection with it, that there is some legislation which we expect to be brought forward before very long which we had hoped to get through and which I know there will be no disposition upon the part of those handling the pending bill to interfere with. I should like to get the shipping bill along just as far as possible, and I feel that probably by day after to-morrow I shall have to ask that the Senate meet a little earlier. This is not definite, but I thought I would give that notice. Probably on to-morrow I shall ask the Senate to meet the next day about 11 o'clock.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR DEPARTMENTS OF STATE AND JUSTICE.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent, out of order, to report back favorably, with amendments, from the Committee on Appropriations, House bill 13232, making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 941) thereon. I give notice that to-morrow morning, immediately after the routine morning business is concluded, I should like to call up this bill for action. There are very few amendments, and it is unanimously reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 14, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 13, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, blessed Lord, for Thy promise which tells us that Thou wilt never leave nor forsake us; truly it has never failed of fulfillment. Verify Thy presence unto us this day. Let all knowledge be seasoned with wisdom and all strength be mingled with kindliness. At all times and in all situations enable us to withstand criticism without showing bitterness. Continue to help us to be the quality of men that our country needs and on which it depends for its stability and growth. In sickness and in disappointment help us to look for the light the shadows prove. For Thy name's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted a bill (H. R. 13374) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, which, with the report thereon (No. 1271), was ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas reserves all points of order on the bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, it Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 13180) making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill just reported from the Senate be taken from the Speaker's table and that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take the bill from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. GARNER. Is that agreeable to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13180) making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman whether or not the Senate disturbed in any way what is known as the Madden amendment?

Mr. MADDEN. That is, in relation to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. It made a slight amendment to it, but it does not affect it materially.

Mr. BLANTON. It is still intact?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection; and the Seaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. MADDEN, Mr. MAGEE, and Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee.

PAYMENT OF DECEMBER SALARIES ON DECEMBER 20.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Joint Resolution 408 authorizing payment of the salaries of the officers and employees of Congress for December, 1922, on the 20th day of that month.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives are authorized and directed to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including the Capitol police, the legislative drafting service, and employees paid on vouchers under authority of resolutions, their respective salaries for the month of December, 1922, on the 20th day of that month.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MADDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

APPROPRIATION BILL FOR DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 13316) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] will resume the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13316, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13316, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13316) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLANTON. How much increase has been allowed to the department under this provision ending on page 5?

Mr. SHREVE. About $50,000.

Mr. BLANTON. About $50,000 increase over last year?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman think that that is absolutely necessary?

Mr. SHREVE. It is absolutely necessary. If there is any one department in Washington that needs help and assistance it is the Department of Commerce. Their activities have increased over 300 per cent and there is a great deal more work to do in the office than ever before, and even now we are not giving them the assistance which they ought to have.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the same extravagance continued in this department now as was exhibited during the war-time food administration?

Mr. SHREVE. Oh, no.

Mr. BLANTON. I happen to remember one little incident connected with this particular head of the department, when as food administrator he rented his first building here in Washington. It was reported that he had paid many thousand dollars for rent more than was being paid at the time he took it over, and that in addition to that he permitted the owner to remove every bit of furniture out of it from the top to the basement, and then he replaced it with new Government furniture. When that report was going around as a criticism, coming from the gentleman's side of the House, against the then Democratic appointee, to get the facts I wrote to the gentleman, and I asked Mr. Hoover if that accusation against him was true, so that if not I could defend him, and I came to find out from his own words, over his own signature, in a letter which I have, that it was even worse than the reports indicated. That was an extravagance that ought not to have been countenanced, and I was just wondering whether or not he was continuing that extravagance since he has become a regular Republican appointee as the head of one of the departments.

Mr. SHREVE. We must remember that that was during war times, and there were a great many things happened during war times that possibly would not happen under ordinary circumstances.

Mr. BLANTON. And the gentleman is slowly ascertaining that they are continuing during peace time, four years after the armistice was signed.

Mr. SHREVE. There is no department of the Government that is managed so economically as the Department of Commerce to-day.

Mr. BLANTON. I can not agree to that.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn and the gentleman from Virginia moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I am going to take advantage of the statement that was made yesterday that the committee would be a little liberal in the consideration of this bill. I wish to mention a matter that I hope will have the attention of my friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

On page 4, in parentheses, reference is made to the Statutes at Large, volume 36.

The public laws of this country at this time are found in 43 large volumes, the code which was adopted in the seventies, and 42 volumes containing the Statutes at Large. So, speaking not with reference to private publications but official publications, all of the statutes of the United States are now so printed or published that various sources of information have to be consulted by any committee that is making up a bill, by the House itself when it is considering a bill, and by all of the officials and courts of the country.

In the last Congress the House adopted a codification embracing all of the laws in force as of the 4th of March, 1919. The bill failed of passage in the Senate. Just after this present Congress came in that codification was adopted again, and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] several months ago with good cause congratulated the country and the House upon the action of approving the codification, which was reported in by the committee of which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] is chairman. I call attention at this time to the matter of the failure of the other body to act, for the purpose of expressing my regret, in view of the general demand and general desire throughout the country that a codification shall be provided which may be had at a comparatively small expense. It ought to be done, as everybody admits. I call attention to it for the further purpose of expressing the hope that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] will exert his great influence in order to have action taken in the Senate which will insure the final approval of the codification, which was most laboriously and carefully gotten up, so that it may be enacted into law before the final adjournment of the present Congress. It is perhaps not one of the most important matters that we are required to consider, but it is an extremely important matter. I happen to belong to a committee which is undertaking to frame legislation, and when it wishes to ascertain what the law is on a certain point we have to range around in a most extensive field. That is the experience of other committees. It is the experience of the officials in the executive departments. It is the experience of the courts, as the judges told us when they appeared before the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, of which I was a member when I first entered this House. I do respectfully urge the gentleman from Wyoming to make a resolute effort to secure action in the other body before the expiration of the present Congress.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] gives me credit to which I fear I am not entitled when he suggests that I have any considerable amount of influence at the other end of the Capitol. The gentleman is entirely sound in what he says with regard to the importance of the legislation revising the statutes. I think it is most unfortunate that that legislation has been so long delayed in the Senate. I have not been able to find out why it is delayed there. I know of no good reason why the legislation should be held in committee unacted upon. It is tremendously important that action be had. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] is influential, I am sure, at least with the Senators from his State. I suggest that he take the matter up with them and interest them in it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I have made some little effort, not with the Senators from Virginia but with a member of the committee that is supposed to be in charge of the bill in the Senate, and I have not been able to ascertain that there is a real prospect of anything being done. It is not worth while for me to quote the expressions of any Senator on that subject, but I have reached the conclusion that unless there is some effort to speed up the work or rather to start the work at the other end of the Capitol so as to give a possibility of action during the present Congress this Congress may end with the statute law of the country left in the same condition in which it now is as far as relates to codification.

Mr. MONDELL. Has any one given to the gentleman from Virginia any good or valid reason for failure to act?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Absolutely not; and I can not understand it. I am at as great a loss as the gentleman is to know why there has been this great delay and why no step is being taken now.

Mr. CARTER. May I suggest to the gentleman from Wyoming that he interview the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE], who probably can give some reason why the codification is not reported in the Senate. I do not know whether the reason will be for the RECORD or not, but I think he can give the gentleman some information.

Mr. MONDELL. I have talked with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE], who is good-natured and tries to be patient. I think he has been exceedingly patient in this matter. I am glad that the gentleman from Virginia has referred to this particular piece of legislation. I think the gentlemen in the other body should either act in this matter or let the country know why they do not act. If there is any good and valid reason why there should not be a codification of the statutes, they should let us all know about it. If there is no good reason, why does that legislation remain unacted upon for more than a year, with the entire country demanding that action be had? There is very great loss and very great injury to the country by reason of this delay. I am sure no one is being benefited by it. I would suggest to all of the gentlemen here who are interested in this matter that they use their best efforts to get the Senate and the Senate committee to act in this matter. They are in the habit of acting very promptly on codifications when they get around to it, when they are ready.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman know of any particular Member of the House who should be more interested than any other in this subject? This is under the general welfare clause of the Constitution, you may say. No special interest being involved, it does not seem that anybody is taking any interest in it.

Mr. MONDELL. I want to say that "the gentleman from Wyoming" has taken an interest in it, and I know the gentlemen from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] and from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] have.

Mr. GARNER. What I mean is that nobody has delegated to himself a continuous effort to get this matter on the statute book. The gentleman's criticism this morning is long past due, and it ought to have come from the other side. Coming from this side, it will be put on partisan grounds, and I think the criticism that the gentleman has put in the RECORD is a proper one.

Mr. DOWELL. Has not there been a persistent effort on the part of some parties to prevent its consideration?

Mr. GARNER. That may be; but if the gentleman knows anything about it he ought to let the House know who it is.

Mr. MONDELL. I think if the gentleman from Iowa does not know he ought not to make that suggestion. I would not want to make that suggestion, but I do say that I am unable to understand why action has not been taken. I know of no one who is opposing action. I know of no earthly reason why action should not be taken. We all know multiplied reasons why action should be taken. Either the codification which we sent to the Senate is a good one or it is not; and if it is not good, it ought to be amended, and as amended it ought to pass.

Mr. DOWELL. My suggestion to the gentleman is that if he will make an investigation of the matter I think he can get information that he does not now seem to have. It seems to me that after this length of time the gentleman from Wyoming could secure some information on the subject, and I suggest that before the matter is presented again the gentleman from Wyoming make a slight investigation and he will find where the trouble comes from.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Commercial attachés: For commercial attachés, to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, after examination to be held under his direction to determine their competency and to be accredited through the State Department, whose duties shall be to investigate and report upon such conditions in the manufacturing industries and trade of foreign countries as may be of interest to the United States; and for the compensation of a clerk or clerks for each commercial attaché at the rate of not to exceed $2,500 per annum for each person so employed, traveling and subsistence expenses of officers, for necessary janitor and messenger service, rent outside of the District of Columbia, purchase of reports, books of reference, and periodicals, travel to and from the United States, and all other necessary expenses not included in the foregoing; such commercial attachés shall serve directly under the Secretary of Commerce and shall report directly to him, $225,000: Provided, That not to exceed two commercial attachés employed under this appropriation may be recalled from their foreign posts and assigned for duty in the Department of Commerce without loss of salary.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against this paragraph to get some information. I would like to ask the chairman to what extent has there been an increase in this bill?

Mr. SHREVE. Twenty-five thousand dollars this year. The commercial attachés of the Department of Commerce is one of the most efficient bureaus that we have.

Mr. BLANTON. Over the fiscal year of 1917 can the gentleman state how much this $225,000 is an increase?

Mr. SHREVE. I would not be surprised if it was an increase entirely, because this system was not in vogue way back there. Now, let me state a few cases as an illustration of what these commercial attachés have done. One of them secured a contract for $7,000,000 in Rio Janeiro for American goods. Another $100,000 to American exporters in Great Britain. Another $200,000 saved in Latin America by advance information in the consular office—for exemptions. Another one was $500,000 in an order for bridge steel placed with an American firm by the intervention of an attaché.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHREVE. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Was this money saved to the United States Government or to private individuals?

Mr. BLANTON. It is to private individuals.

Mr. SHREVE. Let me say that as soon as it is learned that there is to be a development—in South America, for instance—the commercial attaché gathers all the information in regard to it. He finds out when it is to be let, how it is to be let, how the property is to be paid for if bonds are for sale, and then all this information is transmitted to the Department of Commerce in Washington, and is broadcasted to every man in that business in the United States, and he has an opportunity to bid on this information.

Mr. KING. Do all American citizens have an opportunity to come in?

Mr. SHREVE. Every man that is in the business.

Mr. KING. It is not to a favored few?

Mr. SHREVE. No.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHREVE. I will.

Mr. LONDON. Is it not in effect a commercial agency for the people?

Mr. SHREVE. It is a commercial agency for all the people.

Mr. LONDON. A sort of commercial socialism.

Mr. BLANTON. If there is any socialism attached to the question, of course the gentleman from New York is heartily in favor of it, but for that reason I would be against it. I would like to call attention to the fact that it has not helped the farmers whose crops have been rotting in the field for want of getting them to a market in this country. If they had proper transportation facilities they could find plenty of markets in this country.

Mr. SHREVE. If it were not for the foreign market for wheat, flour, and other staples the United States would be in a serious condition.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows that the warehouses of the Northwest are bursting open with grain that they can not find proper cars to transport. If they could get the cars and the transportation facilities they could find a market for the grain in this country. It is the want of transportation facilities that keeps the wheat in the elevators and prevents the producers from getting the benefit of their crops. Mr. Chairman, I think this is too great an extension unauthorized by law; there is no law whatever authorizing the provision in this paragraph, and I make the point of order that it is legislation on an appropriation bill unauthorized by law.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to the law:

670. Powers and duties of department: It shall be the province and duty of said department to foster, promote, and develop the foreign and domestic commerce, the mining, manufacturing, shipping, and fishery industries, the labor interests, and the transportation facilities of the United States; and to this end it shall be vested with jurisdiction and control of the departments, bureaus, offices, and branches of the public service hereinafter specified, and with such other powers and duties as may be prescribed by law. All unexpended appropriations, which shall be available at the time when this act takes effect, in relation to the various offices, bureaus, divisions, and other branches of the public service, which shall by this act be transferred to or included in the Department of Commerce and Labor, or which may hereafter in accordance with the provisions of this act be so transferred, shall become available, from the time of such transfer, for expenditure in and by the Department of Commerce and Labor and shall be treated the same as though said branches of the public service had been directly named in the laws making said appropriations as parts of the Department of Commerce and Labor, under the direction of the Secretary of said department.

This is the particular point to which I desire to direct attention—special investigation under paragraph 678:

He shall also from time to time make special investigations and reports as may be required by the President, or by either House of Congress, or which he himself may deem necessary and urgent.

In this case the Department of Commerce is making these special investigations, is making them all over the world, in the centers of civilization and in localities where it is possible to find American business. I wish the gentleman would read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday and see what some of the commercial people of the United States have to say about the matter, and it may also be worth his while to read what the people of other countries have to say of this service. It is one of the most valuable services the department has.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's discussion has been upon the merits and not upon the point of order. If the gentleman's citation is law for this particular $225,000, then it would be authorization for the Appropriations Committee to appropriate $225,000,000, and the Chair knows that. This general authorization with respect to the Department of Commerce does not authorize the Secretary to establish all over the whole world just as many commercial attachés as the Appropriations Committee sees fit to give him money to do. It requires special authorization by law.

I call the Chair's attention to the precedents. The Chair will remember that in 1918, I think it was, the proposition came up to grant a certain number of million dollars to the employment bureau director. It was held when a point of order was made that under the general authorization given to the Department of Labor it would not have the right to have these employment agencies established without affirmative law. That question came up directly and is directly in point with the present question. Three very distinguished Chairmen who have presided from time to time, when those questions came up—one of them the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. GARRETT, and another the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. CRISP—held that it did not come within the general authorization of the enabling act; that it required special legislation; and I submit to the Chair that the country and the Congress would absolutely be without power to stop it, if this general enabling act authorized the $225,000. I repeat that the Committee on Appropriations could bring in here a bill for $225,000,000 if they saw fit, and we could not then stop it by a point of order.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. The amount is immaterial, so far as the legal proposition is concerned. How is this investigation to be made unless appointments are made and agencies created?

Mr. BLANTON. It is to be made whenever the Congress sees fit by affirmative law to establish certain particular branches and functions of the department, and the Committee on Appropriations, based on that authorization, appropriates the money.

Mr. DOWELL. But when the investigation is authorized by law——

Mr. BLANTON. But that is not done by the enabling act. That is not a legislative authorization. The gentleman from Pennsylvania did not read anything that is substantive law authorizing the expenditure of $225,000 for commercial attachés.

Mr. DOWELL. No; the amount was not specified, but the authorization for the investigation was made by the provision of law read by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard on the point of order for just a moment? It seems to me clear that there is authorization in the law for the appropriation carried in this paragraph. I think there can be no question that this kind of work is authorized by law. It is also true that the commercial attachés and other officials provided for in the paragraph constitute a legitimate and perfectly proper means of carrying out the investigation and performing the work authorized in the law. This brings it within the rule. We are proposing here to appropriate for a purpose which is authorized by law. The work is authorized, and this is a proper way to perform it. The paragraph is proposing neither legislation on an appropriation bill nor an appropriation for a purpose not authorized by law, and therefore is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, if I may be heard for a moment, I want to speak from the standpoint of a man who has never had the advantage of legal training. I am a business man. I have been in foreign countries seeking American business, and I certainly hope that the American Congress will not stand in the position of hamstringing business outside of the bounds of the American Republic simply because there is not something in the bill about the farmer.

I have many farmers as constituents. I am in sympathy with everything that is for the benefit of the farmer. It is necessary for the American workingman, for the clerks, for the American business man, on all of whom the prosperity of our country depends, that we have attachés in foreign countries who can give us, when we go abroad seeking business, information at least through the most direct routes for getting business. Let us make America a world-wide institution. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I can assure the gentleman that this splendid bureau is doing a great service for the farmer, as well as for the commercial activities of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. This point of order has been directly passed upon. In March, 1920, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], a member of the Committee on Appropriations, brought this language before the committee as an amendment to the bill. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] offered the same objection that is now made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. The proposition was very fully debated, and ably debated. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] was in the chair, and after the close of the debate sustained the point of order that was made by the gentleman from Indiana. In other words, he held as Mr. BLANTON is now asking this Chair to hold. Thereupon an appeal was taken from the decision of the Chair, and the Chair was overruled in the first instance by a vote of ayes 50, noes 80; tellers were then ordered and a second vote was taken, and the Chair was overruled by a vote of ayes 63, noes 105.

So, by the very highest authority, the action of the committee itself, the proposition has been passed upon. The Chair does not feel at liberty under the circumstances to overrule that decision.

Mr. BLANTON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. It was a case of force overriding parliamentary precedents.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Promoting commerce, South and Central America: To further promote and develop the commerce of the United States with South and Central America, including the employment of experts and special agents in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, purchase of books of reference and periodicals, reports, plans, specifications, manuscripts, documents, rent outside of the District of Columbia, traveling and subsistence expenses of officers and employees, and all other necessary incidental expenses not included in the foregoing, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce, $200,000: Provided, That not more than two trade commissioners employed under this appropriation may be recalled from their foreign posts and assigned to duty in the Department of Commerce.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. How does this amount compare with the appropriation for this fiscal year for the same purpose, for promoting commerce in South and Central America?

Mr. SHREVE. There is a small increase I think of $29,000.

Mr. LANHAM. Can the gentleman outline some of the beneficial results that are flowing from this and the work being done under this appropriation?

Mr. SHREVE. I would be very glad to mention a few, and I would like to mention a large number. Let me give one illustration. The commercial attaché at Buenos Aires assisted in closing a contract at Montevideo for an entire American telephone system in that city of 350,000 people. It is the first fully equipped all-American proposition that there is in South America.

Of course, that means the trade will follow on for years and years, and things of all sorts will come from America.

Mr. LANHAM. I want to say that I am in sympathy with this work and realize its importance. What method do they use in giving the information that is obtained in reference to trade conditions in Central and South America to the various sections of this country?

Mr. SHREVE. The information, and it is very valuable, is immediately cabled to the central office here in Washington, and from this office it is broadcasted all over the United States to all concerns engaged in the same line of business.

Mr. LANHAM. They have access to it?

Mr. SHREVE. They have access; that is, every manufacturing plant in America, if they are in communication here, can get in touch with this department and have the benefit of their wide experience in South America, and, in fact, the whole world.

Mr. LANHAM. I will say to the gentleman the particular section of the country in which I live is much interested in the establishment of a mutually satisfactory trade relationship with Central and South American countries. Does the gentleman think it is functioning properly?

Mr. SHREVE. Oh, absolutely. There are a great many bulletins on various lines of trade in Central America. It will but take a postal card to the department to get the information desired, and it will be most valuable, telling what the particular opportunities are and telling how to close such contracts.

Mr. LANHAM. I have gotten a good deal of information for concerns in my country. Do I understand this information is broadcasted?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. LANHAM. Does the gentleman think the appropriation provided for is adequate for the purpose?

Mr. SHREVE. No; I would like to see it very much larger.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. If the gentleman will permit, it always seemed to me that consuls were appointed to get a good deal of this information, and I do not know how the department keeps the work of these two branches working together when separately they report to different departments.

Mr. SHREVE. They are two separate institutions. We find a consul is not a man going out seeking trade or trade opportunities. He is engaged in viséing passports and taking care of people who desire to come into this country. These men of the Department of Commerce are simply trade experts seeking business for the United States of America.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. How do they cooperate; the consul does a great deal of the work?

Mr. SHREVE. He is not doing that work. There is no conflict between the two at all.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. If the consul is not doing it, he used to do it.

Mr. SHREVE. Not much of it.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. How do they keep the consul in touch——

Mr. SHREVE. There is no conflict whatever.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Do they work in touch with each other?

Mr. SHREVE. They work in harmony with each other.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. How?

Mr. SHREVE. By being in close contact, if one has information he furnishes it to the other. If there is information obtained worth while, then it is passed out.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. They do not put the two organizations together.

Mr. SHREVE. They are, in a way.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, I will say in answer to the gentleman's question, if he will permit, that while I was in the Orient seeking American business I was very nicely received by the American consul. The American consul in the places I visited was a very busy man, and he could give me practically no information whatever along definite and specific lines that I as a commercial man seeking business felt I must have. The Department of Commerce does that very thing.

Mr. SHREVE. I wish to thank the gentleman for the very complete statement he has made.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Is it not true that the American consul transacts business that may come to him, while the representative of the Department of Commerce is a solicitor? He goes out and finds where business is and seeks to bring the two together. He is a solicitor in that sense, but wherever he strikes the line of the Consular Service then the consul assists and transacts such portion of the business as comes properly under him.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Does not England get her trade through her consuls?

Mr. SHREVE. They have an association which is very much larger than ours that comes under the Federal Trade Council. If the gentleman will read the statement in the RECORD of yesterday, an article taken from the Times at Buenos Aires lately, he will see something in regard to competition.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman spoke of much of the time of the consuls being taken up by their social obligations. May I ask the gentleman, How does the social standing of these commercial attachés rank with that of the employees of the consuls?

Mr. SHREVE. Well, I am really unable to answer that question, because the commercial attachés are just plain business men going about the country looking for business.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman does know that some little amount of their time is taken up in fulfilling social obligations?

Mr. SHREVE. No; I do not know it.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I have not control of the time. If I had the time I would yield.
